PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 21, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in Thy gracious favor Thou hast revealed unto us the path of life. Thou hast conditioned our highest good upon the achievement of character, and Thou hast given to us the great principles upon which we may build a character that can stand the test of time. We pray Thy blessing upon us today that we may have our eyes ever on Thy Word, our hearts ever going out in humble obedience to Thy will, and our lives consecrated to Thy service. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

On request of Mr. SMOOT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, February 18, 1920, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12351) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12351. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	King	Pittman
Ball	Gay	Kirby	Poindexter
Beckham	Glass	Knox	Ransdell
Brandegee	Gronna	Lenroot	Robinson
Capper	Hale	Lodge	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Harris	McKellar	Simmons
Colt	Harrison	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Henderson	McNary	Smoot
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Moses	Spencer
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Stanley
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sterling
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thomas
Edge	Kellogg	Nugent	Townsend
Elkins	Kendrick	Overman	Trammell
Fletcher	Kenyon	Page	Walsh, Mont.
France	Keyes	Phipps	Warren

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this notice may continue for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is detained by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

SALE OF SHIPS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I find in the RECORD, on page 3380, under the date of February 20, the following:

> The Vice President laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The RECORD then proceeds to print the message of the President, which is Senate Document No. 231, entitled "Sale of ships." It does not print the accompanying paper to which it refers. The President stated:

> I am, nevertheless, transmitting it in order that the Senate may be in possession of all the information there is in any way relating to the vessels in question. I had intended to submit this to Congress at the appropriate time, after the ratification of the treaty with Germany.

Of course, the message of the President is not fully intelligible except as the paper, in the nature of an agreement or understanding between him and Lloyd-George, is printed with it, and I ask unanimous consent that in the permanent issue of the RECORD the understanding submitted by the President may be printed immediately following the message of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator to state again what his request is? I could not follow it, owing to some confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The request is that the paper which the President transmitted with his message be printed in the RECORD in conjunction with the message.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I think that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. While I have the floor, Mr. President, I desire to state in this connection that last Saturday, as will appear on page 2907 of the RECORD, I introduced the resolution to which the President replied. I stated then as follows:

> I simply desire to state that I have several times heard, from what I think is good authority, that there was some understanding between the President and Lloyd-George, or some member of the British Government, in relation to the disposition of the German ships or the proceeds derived from them in case they were disposed of. I do not know whether or not that is a fact. If it is, I should like to know it, as being germane to the subject which we are now considering. I should like to have the resolution considered and agreed to.

Thereon, for about half a column, there were questions and answers between me and several Senators in relation to that matter.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether the matter about which he inquires related only to the captured ships—not to the interned ships?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The resolution, as the Senator will see from the RECORD, on page 2907, did not call them interned ships. It describes them as the German ships which the Shipping Board were proposing to sell. It also inquired whether there was any understanding or agreement in relation to any other ships that came into our possession after the close of hostilities.

I did not know whether we had acquired any such shipping or not, and inasmuch as the Shipping Board was proposing to sell, and doubt was expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] both previously and in his talk the other day as to the title of this Government in those ships, I desired to see what was the status of those ships, how they came into our possession, as to whether we had a right to sell them, and as to whether there was any agreement either as to their sale or as to their disposition. I alleged nothing. I simply wanted to ascertain the status.

I see in the Washington Post this morning, on the first page, an article by the Associated Press headed:

No deal for vessels.
Emphatic denial President's reply to Senate inquiry.
Transmits Paris proposal.
Crediting Germany with surplus valuation contemplated.

Mr. President, I did not allege that there was any deal by the President of the United States with anyone for the sale of ships or anything else. I introduced a resolution, respectfully worded, containing the clause "if not incompatible with the public interest," and, as appears in the RECORD, I stated that if it was incompatible with the public interest, of course the President would say so, and I did not want the information if it was incompatible with the public interest.

The President states that—

The ships for the purchase of which bids have been asked by the Shipping Board were taken over by Executive orders issued pursuant to the joint resolution of Congress of May 12, 1917, authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of any vessel within its jurisdiction under enemy ownership—

And so forth. Then the President states that that was the way we came into the possession of these ships, which were afterwards taken over by Executive order by virtue of that action of Congress. He proceeds to state:

There is not, nor has there been, any agreement or understanding between the President of the United States and officials of Great Britain concerning the sale of the ex-German vessels in possession of the United States.

Of course, I did not intimate that there was. I wanted to know whether there was any understanding as to their disposition. The title was in question. I wanted to know in what way they were to be disposed of. It appears that they were disposed of, so far as the agreement made by the President which he sent here, but which has not yet been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did the Senator state that they were disposed of?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I did not.

Mr. ROBINSON. I simply call attention to the fact that the President says that—

This understanding, which recognizes American rights with regard to German vessels taken in our ports, does not relate to the disposition of such vessels by the United States.

The statement of the President is that the understanding which he reached with Lloyd-George, and which is contained in the paper which is not printed in connection with the President's reply, and which paper the Senator has asked may be printed, did not relate to the disposition of the vessels, but related to a recognition of American rights.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator does not ask a question, but he makes a statement which I myself was about to make, which is made here by the President and is printed in the RECORD. I entirely agree with the Senator. The President states that there was no agreement for the disposition of the ships or for their sale. I never made any charge whatever. I asked if the President would inform us whether there was an understanding for their disposition. The disposition of a vessel may be made in several ways, I suppose; that is, there are several ways of disposing of a vessel. As I understand the President, the disposition made of these vessels by the agreement to which he is a party is that they are to be the property of the United States, and the agreement when it is printed will show, in effect, for I read it very hastily——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I am trying to follow what the Senator from Connecticut is saying, but there is so much talking in the Chamber on this side that I can not hear it; at least, the confusion interferes with hearing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield for a brief statement?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am trying to make a connected statement, but I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield, I desire to explain that, on account of the confusion in the Chamber, I could not hear the statement which he made just prior to my interruption of him a moment ago, but I understood him to say that the understanding which is embraced in the paper which was not printed related to the disposition of the vessels. I was merely pointing out the fact that the President stated that it did not relate to that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Arkansas and I might argue here all day as to what the word "disposition" means. The President evidently understands that "disposition" means parting with the title to the ships. The agreement states that not only these ships but the ships which were enemy property in allied ports—to paraphrase it and state it briefly—shall be the property of the Governments where they were interned, that there shall be an appraisal of them, and that when it is ascertained what the claim of each country against Germany is for damage caused to its merchant shipping by the German submarine warfare the balance shall be adjusted; to take the specific case of America, that if the German ships which we interned are valued at more than the claim which we have against Germany for damages, the excess of valuation shall be paid into the reparation fund and be credited to Germany. The President says:

I believe the above information fully answers the Senate's inquiry. However, I am transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed understanding in regard to ex-enemy merchant tonnage to which I have given assent, subject to future action of Congress, as provided therein. Although this understanding, which recognizes American rights with regard to German vessels taken in our ports, does not relate to the disposition of such vessels by the United States, I am, nevertheless, transmitting it in order that the Senate may be in possession of all the information there is in any way relating to the vessels in question. I had intended to submit this to Congress at the appropriate time, after the ratification of the treaty with Germany.

Mr. President, I am glad that the President saw fit to transmit this agreement, which it was impossible to describe—at least I found it impossible to describe it—in any more polite or definite language than I employed. The agreement which the President made, so far as he could make it, subject to the subsequent consent of Congress, to a large extent bears out my information in the premises—that there was an agreement which provided that, in some way, the excess of the value of the German ships taken by the Allies should be paid into the reparation fund.

I am glad the President sent in this agreement, whether the agreement provides strictly, in his opinion, for a disposition of those ships or not. In my opinion, it does. Here are German ships which we simply seized by force, the title to which, according to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], is in question. If he simply said, "There is no agreement for a disposition of the ships," and relied upon a quibble or a difference in definition or interpretation of what the Senate meant by the word "disposition," I should not have felt it was quite frank; but the President knew that the Senate wanted information which would reveal the true status of those ships, and he very properly sent to us the agreement which he made. It is a lengthy agreement. I read it hastily here last night, and supposed it would be printed in the RECORD. It is an important agreement.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. In view of the rather extended agitation during the past few days as to the sale of the ships which have been advertised by the Shipping Board, and an apparently general desire to secure more money for the ships; in view also of the implied arrangement on the part of the President, if acquiesced in by Congress, it would make little difference, would it not, as to how much additional we received for the ships, as we shall be compelled under that agreement to pay into the reparation fund the difference between the appraisement already made and any additional money we might receive for the sale of the ships?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, whether the ships are sold or not would make some difference to us in this way, that if the ships were sold and there was a balance above our claim against Germany it would be paid into the reparation fund from the proceeds of the sale, whereas if they are not sold and there is such a balance it will have to be appropriated for by Congress and raised by taxation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The ships to which the Senator is now referring are those that were interned in our ports.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Of course he excludes, as I understand, entirely the ships, such as those of the Imperator class, for instance, which were covered by the treaty and which we have already returned.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The President says in his message, I think in a part which I did not take occasion to read to the Senate as not bearing upon the point I was discussing, that these are the only German ships of which we are now in possession; that there were some which were taken and allocated to the different allied Governments for the transportation of troops after the cessation of hostilities, which have been returned.

In relation to the President's remark that he had intended to send this agreement to us at the appropriate time after the ratification of the treaty, I am very glad that he did not wait that length of time, because this question may be of some immediate interest at this session of Congress. I notice the Senator from Washington has reported a bill providing for the reconditioning of these ships. But why is it not appropriate that we should have this knowledge now in order to decide whether to hold these ships or whether to sell them? Why would it be more appropriate after the treaty with Germany shall be ratified?

I do not pretend to know the full history of this case, Mr. President; I do not understand why the President made his agreement simply with Lloyd-George, who is the only other signatory to the agreement, and not with the representatives of any of the other allied Governments. No doubt there is a good reason for that, but I do not see it; and I do not see what this question has to do in any way with the treaty with Germany. It appears to be a supplemental agreement which the President himself says he was not going to transmit here until after the treaty was ratified.

That is all I care to say about this matter, Mr. President, except——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The matter which the Senator has asked to be printed has already been printed as a document and has just come down. It is Document No. 231.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It has just been handed to me, I will say to the Senator, and I should like to have it read by the Secretary for the information of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself should be very glad to have that done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The message was not read yesterday, and, if there is no objection, I should like to have the message read with the agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution passed by the Senate on February 14, requesting the President to inform that body "whether any, and if so, what, agreement or understanding exists between him and officials of Great Britain concerning the disposition by the United States of America of the German ships which the Shipping Board is proposing to sell, or which were acquired by the United States after the termination of hostilities between said United States and the Central European Teutonic powers."

The ships for the purchase of which bids have been asked by the Shipping Board were taken over by Executive orders issued pursuant to the joint resolution of Congress of May 12, 1917, authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of any vessel within its jurisdiction, under enemy ownership or under the registry of an enemy country. The Government of the United States is not in possession of any ex-German vessels except those taken over under this resolution. Under an armistice agreement between the German Government and the allied and associated powers certain German vessels were taken over primarily for the transport of food to Europe, including Germany, and for the transportation of troops. Of the tonnage so taken over, certain passenger vessels were allocated to the United States temporarily for the purpose of repatriating American soldiers. When the transportation of our troops was completed, these vessels were all surrendered in accordance with the agreement under which they were temporarily allocated to this Government for such use.

There is not, nor has there been, any agreement or understanding between the President of the United States and officials of Great Britain concerning the sale of the ex-German vessels in possession of the United States, nor is there any agreement or understanding with respect to what disposition shall be made of those ships by the United States.

I believe the above information fully answers the Senate's inquiry. However, I am transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed understanding in regard to ex-enemy merchant tonnage to which I have given assent, subject to future action of Congress as provided therein. Although this understanding, which recognizes American rights with regard to German vessels taken in our ports, does not relate to the disposition of such vessels by the United States, I am, nevertheless, transmitting it in order that the Senate may be in possession of all the information there is in any way relating to the vessels in question. I had intended to submit this to Congress at the appropriate time, after the ratification of the treaty with Germany.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
February 20, 1920.

"The allied and associated Governments whose signatures are hereto affixed, severally agree as regards merchant shipping as follows:

"1. The reparation commission will, as soon as possible, compile a list giving fullest particulars available on all enemy ships still in existence, captured, seized, or detained by any allied or associated Government during the war, and also all other enemy ships or boats which the enemy powers are required to cede under the treaty of peace.

"2. The reparation commission will taks such steps as will secure that each of the allied and associated Governments will retain as its own the complete title to and use of all ships captured, seized, or detained during the war as a war measure and prior to November 11, 1918, and will own the same free from any claim of any of the other allied or associated Governments.

"In all cases where the ships and boats so to be retained by any allied or associated Government are in excess of the claims of such Governments, respectively, for war losses in merchant ships, such Governments shall not make any claim for a share in other ships and boats ceded under the treaty of peace.

"3. In all cases where the ships and boats so to be retained by any such Governments are insufficient to satisfy in full the claims of such Governments, respectively, for war losses in merchant ships, the enemy ships which remain and which are to be ceded under the treaty of peace will be divided into three classes, viz, liners, other merchant ships, and fishing boats, and will be distributed to such Governments on the basis of ton for ton and class for class of the ships and boats lost and not replaced by the ships and boats retained, but in proportion to the balances due on the claims of such Governments, respectively.

"4. As the ships and boats so to be retained will, in the case of Brazil, China, Cuba, Siam, and the United States, exceed the total amount of tonnage which would be allocated to those countries were the total enemy tonnage captured, seized, detained, or still in existence shared in proportion to losses of ships and boats during the war, in each such case a reasonable value on the excess of ships and boats over the amount which would result from such a division will be determined. The amount of the value so fixed will be paid over by each such State to the reparation commission for the credit of Germany toward the sums due from her for reparation, in respect to war losses of merchant ships.

"5. As soon as the reparation commission has collected the necessary information, and is in a position so to do, they will give public notice that after an interval of two months they will proceed to divide the vessels except those captured, seized, or detained by the allied and associated Governments which are to be retained by them, respectively, as hereinbefore provided. If within one month of the publication of the notice any allied, associated, or neutral Government, person or corporation a national of such Government and acting through such Government, notifies the commission that they have an equitable claim against any vessel which has not been, or is not being, satisfied by the enemy Governments, that claim will be considered on its merits by the commission, which may adopt any procedure it thinks fit, provided it is expeditious and is calculated to do substantial justice as between the allied and associated Governments on the one hand and the claimant on the other.

"The commission will have power to determine claims so presented, and such determination will be conclusive, and the commission will also have power to enforce its findings.

"Dated May —, 1919.

"WOODROW WILSON
"(Subject to the explanation contained in the attached memorandum).
"D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

"I deem it my duty to state, in signing this document, that, while I feel confident that the Congress of the United States will make the disposal of the funds mentioned in clause 4 which is there agreed upon, I have no authority to bind it to that action, but must depend upon its taking the same view of the matter that is taken by the joint signatories of this agreement."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Wyoming Wool Growers' Association, at Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring increased appropriation of funds for the United States Sheep Experiment Station in Fremont County, Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the California State Board of Forestry, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an airplane patrol of the western forests, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Women's Democratic Club, of Alameda County, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation giving rank to Army nurses, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry postal employees of Ellsworth, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation granting annual and sick leave to regular postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, some time ago, upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senate adopted a resolution inquiring into the character of the employees of the Federal Trade Commission. A clause was appended to the resolution reading as follows:

> The committee is further directed to inquire generally into the work of the commission, the procedure it has adopted, the authority it has exercised, its attitude toward the business of the country, and make report respecting the value of the commission as a governmental agency.

The duty of investigating was intrusted by the resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. That committee apparently appointed a subcommittee to conduct the investigation, and I have here a questionnaire prepared by the committee and submitted to every individual or corporation against whom any complaint has been lodged by the Federal Trade Commission. The questionnaire is so extraordinary in its character that I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to it. It reads as follows:

> UNITED STATES SENATE, > COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE,
> January 30, 1920.
> GENTLEMEN: The United States Senate by resolution has directed a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to inquire generally into—
> The work of the Federal Trade Commission;
> The procedure it has adopted;
> The authority it has exercised; and > Its attitude toward the business of the country; > and to make report respecting the value of the commission as a governmental agency.
> As a firm which has had a complaint filed against it by the commission (either pending or disposed of), a statement is desired from you on any and all points you desire to make, included in the scope of the inquiry as indicated above.
> It is desired particularly to ascertain:
> 1. If complaint is pending or disposed of.
> 2. How long the complaint was (or has been) pending.
> 3. What kind of hearings were given, where was hearing held, and did you have ample opportunity to present your case.
> 4. If complaint against you was dismissed, what was the reason therefor.
> 5. If a decision or finding has been made, was it made as a "consent order" or not, and were the facts "stipulated" by agreement or stated by the commission?
> 6. If a "consent order" was entered, did it actually affect your acts or was it entered "to save the face of the commission"?
> 7. Was the finding of the commission (if one has been made) an equitable one? If not, in what respect do you consider the commission has erred?
> 8. If you consider that complaint against you was unwarranted, what do you believe was the reason that the complaint was filed by the commission?
> 9. If finding was made, have you appealed or do you intend to appeal for a judicial review of the same?
> 10. Do you have any information tending to establish the fact that the Federal Trade Commission has used its power to aid private enterprises in an unwarranted manner? If so, what are the facts and what are the connections, political or otherwise, between the firm so favored and the commission or any member or employee thereof.
> 11. Has the attitude of the Federal Trade Commission on your case been helpful or prejudicial to the business of the country? In your answer please explain why and how.
> 12. Please express your opinion on the value of the commission as a governmental agency, and the reason for your opinion.
> 13. If you believe that the work of the commission could be better handled by some other governmental agency or by reformation of its own procedure or policy, please indicate definitely your suggestions for the change or the improvement.
> 14. Give file number of complaint in your answer.
> As the committee will begin its hearings within a few days, it is urgently requested that you, with the aid of your attorneys, prepare and forward an answer to this letter at the earliest possible moment.
> Please be perfectly frank in the information which you give to the committee. Any information which you desire to give in confidence will be so treated.
> A large part of the information asked for herein is of record with the Federal Trade Commission, but time is not available to digest completely all of the record in every case. Evidence suggested by you will not be treated as volunteered, but the facts will be established by the records of the commission or by witnesses duly subpœnaed.
> Respectfully, yours,
> CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
> Chairman Subcommittee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Senator read the resolution that gave authority from the Senate for this investigation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read that part of it which is pertinent to this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. As I remember the resolution, there was not anything in it that was pertinent to any of those questions. I supposed it was confined only to investigating whether or not they had Socialists, and so forth, among their employees.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator evidently overlooked the concluding paragraph, which reads as follows:

> The committee is further directed to inquire generally into the work of the commission, the procedure it has adopted, the authority it has exercised, its attitude toward the business of the country, and make report respecting the value of the commission as a governmental agency.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think the committee is going beyond the scope of its power at all in prosecuting an inquiry of this kind. What I wish to invite your attention to, however, is that it is making this inquiry concerning all of these matters of the people against whom complaints have been filed by some competitors in their business and who have been made the subject of inquiry by the commission as to the propriety and character of the methods which they pursue in the prosecution of their business, for the purpose of determining whether those methods are unfair within the statute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It strikes me that it would be similar to providing for the trial of a judge before a jury composed of criminals whom he had sentenced in his court.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was going to say, in that connection, that I am not to be understood as indicating that in my judgment the offenses contemplated by the statute creating the Federal Trade Commission involve grave moral turpitude. Of course, if they did, they would be made penal offenses. But, Mr. President, the situation would be quite analogous if one went to the penitentiary to get the views of those incarcerated there touching the law, the jury, and the court through the action of which they happened to be confined.

> No man e'er felt the halter draw,
> With good opinion of the law.

The wail that in all probability will be set up by those who have thus been made the objects of inquiry by the commission can be very readily imagined. I can not see what particular value could attach to any observations that these gentlemen might make by way of criticism of the commission, or of the law, or of the treatment which they got.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator yield for me to say a word there, as I am holding hearings before another committee and have a witness on the stand?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have just learned that the Senator is criticising certain questionnaires that were sent out by the committee which was authorized to investigate the Federal Trade Commission. I have not learned before that even the commission was taking any exception to what we are doing. I endeavored to see to it that those papers were prepared in such a manner as to get the opinion of the people of the United States who had had to do with the commission or with whom the commission had had to do. I asked for frank statements under all pertinent heads which I thought would bring about a basis for investigation on the part of the commission. The Senator is quite mistaken if he believes that we are receiving wails from those who have been prosecuted. We are receiving their opinions in many cases, and many of them are very complimentary to the commission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I shall put some of those in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have sent to every organization in this country that has come to my attention which has passed resolutions condemning the Federal Trade Commission, including the United States Chamber of Commerce, and have insisted that they must give us their reasons, the basis for those condemnations. These are solely for the use of the committee in establishing a method of procedure under the comprehensive resolution which was adopted. If the Senator has put into the RECORD that resolution and the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], which was to investigate all of the activities of the Federal Trade Commission, and if he can think of any more proper method of procedure than we have adopted—because we have not only written to the people who have been investigated, against whom complaint has been made, but we have written to every man or every concern that has come to our attention that has had knowledge of the workings of the Federal Trade Commission—I shall be glad to have him suggest it. That does not mean that the committee is limited to these reports or that it accepts what has been said to it, but we want to know what the complaints are that have been made in order that we can properly investigate them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have permitted an interruption because the Senator has advised us that he is due at some other committee with which he is at work; but I interrupt the Senator to inquire whether he has submitted a similar questionnaire to those rivals of the corporations or companies or firms to whom these questionnaires have been sent, and if he will furnish us with a copy of the questionnaire addressed to the complainants upon whose complaint the proceedings were instituted?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In every case where we could get the information as to who was interested in these matters we have asked for this information, and we are asking for it and other information every day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has misunderstood me. I am inquiring of the Senator if he has addressed a similar questionnaire to those parties upon whose complaint the proceedings were instituted, as well as the parties against whom the proceedings were addressed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know that I have sent out any general letter on that subject, but I can assure the Senator that we will send out letters and are sending them out to every business concern in this country which has been interested in the proceedings of the Federal Trade Commission. I think every Democratic Member, as well as those Members on this side of the Chamber, will agree that this committee are not starting out on a persecuting proposition. The commission understand that as well as I do. What we want to do is to get at the facts. We are not making public the letters which have been submitted to us. We are simply collecting the data that we believe will be useful to us in making the investigation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in all of these proceedings, as in other proceedings before courts or tribunals, there is a party corresponding to a complainant or plaintiff and a party corresponding to a defendant. The complainant in the proceedings before the commission, ordinarily being a rival in business, charges that the party accused has resorted to unfair practices in the prosecution of his business destructive of the trade of the complainant, and he asks the interposition and the exercise of the power of the Federal Trade Commission to arrest those practices and to put a stop to them. It is quite evident that the questionnaire has been addressed in every case to him who stands in the attitude of the defendant, and never——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Wait a minute until I get through with the statement—and that no corresponding questionnaire has been addressed to those who stand in the attitude of the plaintiff or the complainant.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have not as yet reached that class, but if the Senator will withhold his criticism until the committee gets to work, it will be more timely and may be more just. He should understand this: The chairman of the committee has been in touch with the Federal Trade Commission, and I do not think it believes that I am working or that any other member of the committee is working through any unfair means to the commission. I am satisfied that they do not. Perhaps the Senator has information which I do not possess, but I have told them frankly what I was trying to do, and have consented that they should cooperate, that their counsel should be present at all hearings, and I informed them that I wanted their advice as how best to proceed to get the facts in this case. We have not yet actively reached the second branch of it. We are simply trying to get some information upon which we can establish an orderly procedure.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am giving the Senate my own view about this matter; and my own view about it is that if a questionnaire of this character was sent out at all, it ought to be sent out at the same time to both parties to the controversy. My own judgment about the matter is that in neither case will one be very much enlightened by the answers which are received, because, of course, the prevailing party will be profoundly impressed with the wisdom and propriety of the action of the commission, while the losing party will ordinarily be in a condemnatory mood.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I trust the Senator will have a little confidence in the committee and believe it has sufficient intelligence to digest and weigh the information which comes to it; and I can assure him that if a case is presented or a letter is presented to us by one of these people complained against, and the case is established so that we can understand what it is, we shall proceed further to determine the other side of that case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I have no doubt that the committee now will proceed to inquire into the other side.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, well, the Senator has not influenced the commission in the least. What he has said has had no effect upon the committee, because it established that policy to proceed upon when it first met. He has not influenced it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not care to engage in any controversy with the Senator. I am calling attention to the fact that this set of questions was propounded to the defendants and nothing corresponding was addressed to the other side.

I wish to inquire of the Senator if he will have the kindness to tell us exactly what this question No. 6 means:

If a "consent order" was entered, did it actually affect your acts or was it entered "to save the face of the commission"?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That questionnaire was put out for the purpose of determining just exactly what were the facts in the case. I did not remember that the words "to save the face of the commission" were included. Is that language in the questionnaire?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read it from the questionnaire.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I confess I did not notice those particular words. I think they should not have been used.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It occurs to me that the question is rather leading. A leading question is one which suggests the answer which the interrogator hopes will be given to it, and it occurred to me that this quite clearly indicated the hope of the propounder that the one to whom it was addressed would answer that the consent was entered into merely to save the face of the commission. Would not that suggest itself to the Senator?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am perfectly willing to admit that it might have that inference, but there was no such thought in my mind, and while I intended to read over the papers which were stamped with my signature I did not observe that specific language.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The fact is——

Mr. TOWNSEND. But I have read the answers which I have received, and I am receiving hundreds of them. I am perfectly satisfied that the answers which come to us from various people to whom we have sent these letters are going to be of great service to the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It will not be surprising if these answers are generally characterized as I have indicated.

We were told some time ago by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] that he had had numberless complaints about the action of the Federal Trade Commission, some of them couched in language that would not be fit to be introduced into the RECORD. I thought at the time that that was some evidence at least that the Federal Trade Commission was functioning, as those responsible for the passage of the law expected it would. I have no doubt that quite a large number of firms in the State of the Senator from Pennsylvania have become the object of the investigations conducted by the Federal Trade Commission. Indeed, I have a copy of its last annual report before me giving a list of all the proceedings that were instituted and those that had been disposed of. The first in that long list is the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the Curtis Publishing Co., whose principal place of business is, I understand, in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania.

It is charged with "stifling and suppressing competition by refusal to sell its publications to dealers who will not agree not to sell or distribute the publications of certain of its competitors, in alleged violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission act, and, further, attempting to create a monopoly by means of price fixing conditioned on the nonsale of competitors' publications, in alleged violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act." The disposition of that case is not reported in the annual report of the Federal Trade Commission, but I have before me the record in the case, showing that the commission found the charges to be sustained, and an order went out commanding and directing the Curtis Publishing Co. to desist from the practices complained of.

It will be remembered that the Curtis Publishing Co. is the publisher of the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal, and the Country Gentleman. These are highly popular periodicals; they are found upon every bookstand and in every bookstore in the country. The publishers have forced upon their agents a contract under which they agree not to sell or put out the periodicals of any competing publisher, the agreement being aimed particularly at the publishers of the Pictorial Review and the Crowell Publishing Co. I read from the findings of the commission in that case as follows:

PAR. 2. That the respondent, the Curtis Publishing Co., for several months last past, in the course of interstate commerce, has sold and made contracts for sale, and is now selling and making contracts for sale, of large supplies of its publications and periodicals for use and resale within the United States and the Territories thereof and the District of Columbia, and has fixed, and is now fixing, the price charged therefor on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchasers thereof shall not use or deal in the publications or periodicals of a competitor or competitors of respondent, and that the effect of such sales and contracts for sale, on such conditions, agreements, or understandings, may be and is to substantially lessen competition and to tend to create a monopoly.

The contracts put out by the Curtis Publishing Co. to their agents obligating them not to deal in or handle the Pictorial Review or any of the publications of the Crowell Publishing Co. are set forth in the record.

I have no doubt that the answer of the Curtis Publishing Co. to the questionnaire addressed to them by the Interstate Commerce Committee will not be particularly laudatory of the action of the Federal Trade Commission. Of course, it has its redress if its rights have been invaded in any respect. It has filed its petition in the proper court—the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania—to enjoin the commission from carrying out the order made against them, and the validity of it will in due course be determined in that proceeding.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I am interested in learning if the Senator from Montana knows whether a questionnaire has been sent to the packers and what response they have made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; but the packers have been made the subject of inquiry by the commission, and as these questionnaires were sent to everyone, as I understand, who has thus been made the subject of proceedings before the commission, I assume as a matter of course that the packers have received the questionnaire. I doubt not that their feelings concerning the Federal Trade Commission generally and its procedure will scarcely be complimentary. Whether their opinion under the circumstances will be of any value to the committee or the public is another question.

Happily, as we are informed by the chairman of the subcommittee, not all the answers to the questionnaires will be condemnatory in character. The fact of the matter is that many firms engaged in business have been obliged to resort to questionable practices in order to meet competition of that character by their rivals, and it was for the purpose of relieving the men who are desirous of doing business upon just lines and according to honest principles that the act was passed, as well to bring to bay those who were inspired by a desire to carry on their business along lines that could not be approved. These men, as well as everybody else engaged in their particular line of business, are glad to have been made the subject of these proceedings before the Federal Trade Commission, because they are all now enjoined, every one of them, from proceeding to carry out the practices which many of them condemn.

This answer was made by one of the defendants to the questionnaire to which I have called the attention of the Senate:

LOUISVILLE VARNISH CO.,
Louisville, February 16, 1920.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Chairman Subcommittee Committee on Interstate Commerce,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 30, regarding the work of the Federal Trade Commission, was received a few days ago.

It gives us a great deal of pleasure to state that the manner in which the complaint against our company was handled by the Federal Trade Commission was most satisfactory in every respect, and without their assistance we would never have been able to change the questionable customs which had existed in our trade for so many years.

It is my idea that every one of the fifty-odd defendants who were joined with us in this complaint are of the same opinion.

Yours, very truly,

P. H. CALLAHAN, President.

Mr. President, no one can read No. 6 of the questionnaire, to which I have called attention, and believe that it was conceived in any spirit of friendliness to the action of the commission. Indeed, I must say that I was astounded when I saw the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] appended to it. I had always regarded him as an eminently fair and eminently just man, and the consternation which he exhibited when his attention was called specifically to question No. 6 confirms the opinion I formed at once on seeing it, that he had intrusted the preparation of the questionnaire to some clerk and had not had an opportunity to supervise the work himself.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator read that question again? There was so much confusion in the Chamber at the time that I could not hear it clearly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. 6 reads:

If a "consent order" was entered, did it actually affect your acts or was it entered "to save the face of the commission"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not desire to divert the Senator nor to take him off the floor by a call for the regular order, but I have to leave the Chamber in a moment or two, and I desire to present two reports.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator need not apologize. I am through.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the Senator from Montana concluded?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have concluded.

SALE OF SHIPS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3928) relating to the ships acquired from Germany, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 430) thereon.

I had intended to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill to-day, but in view of the message from the President of the United States and the facts disclosed, I think I will not ask for its consideration to-day and probably not before the middle of next week.

If this country must turn over any surplus that it gets for the ships, over and above the submarine losses during the war, there is no special inducement why we should make special efforts to get anything more than a fair, bona fide price of the ships. I desire to look into that proposition very carefully, and I know that other Senators would like to do so, too. I therefore simply submit the report with the statement that I expect to call it up not before Wednesday of next week.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with the proposed understanding, which does not affect the disposition of the ships but simply establishes or recognizes our rights, may I suggest to the Senator that that was all made conditioned on its approval by Congress? So it is wholly a question for Congress to determine.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I know that, but I thought it was hardly proper to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill before Senators had had an opportunity to look into the matter. I thought probably they would like to look into the report also to get the facts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, as I understood the reading of the message from the President, the more we get for the ships the more we shall have to pay somebody.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We will have to pay for the benefit of Germany.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And the less we get for them, the cheaper it will be for America?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the way it sounds.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the way it looks to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is, if Congress so orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

NATIONAL MARINE EXPOSITION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) authorizing the Department of Commerce to participate in the National Marine Exposition to be held in New York in April, 1920, and I submit a report (No. 431) thereon.

I desire to state that there is an express provision that this shall not involve any expense upon the part of the United States. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to allow the use of such ships as he may deem proper and helpful in connection with the marine exposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the joint resolution specifically provide that there shall be no expense?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does.

Mr. SMOOT. Many times in the past that proviso has been inserted in just such resolutions, and still appropriations have been made for expenses. I desire the Senator now to state, as he has already stated, that if the joint resolution passes there will be no appropriation asked for in the future.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will certainly oppose any request for an appropriation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let the joint resolution be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) was read, as follows:

Whereas the National Marine League of the United States is to hold an exposition in New York next April for the purpose of demonstrating to the public the needs of the maritime industries of the United States and the means by which the interests of such maritime industries may be encouraged and promoted; and

Whereas it is believed that participation by the Department of Commerce in such exposition may tend to promote, develop, and foster the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be authorized, in his discretion, to cooperate with the managers of such exposition and to furnish such exhibits from the various bureaus and branches in his department as, in his judgment, may be of value in the performance of the functions of the department: Provided, That such cooperation and the furnishing of such exhibits shall be without expense to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on Patents I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 9023) to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I will explain it very briefly. If it causes any debate, I shall not attempt to take up the time of the Senate. It is a bill which passed the House and has the unanimous report of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator desire me to explain it now or does he wish to have it read first?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read in full. That may explain it sufficiently.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. I recall that I introduced a bill—I did not prepare it, but it was recommended by the department—at the last session, and I had it referred to the Committee on Commerce. That committee, after quite extensive hearings, reported the bill favorably, and the Commissioner of Patents finally agreed to the bill as it was reported. As I recall, the bill was passed by the Senate. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if this bill conforms to the bill which was favorably acted on by the Senate at the last session?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida introduced in the Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, Senate bill 4889. It was then Calendar No. 508. The bill was favorably reported, under date of August 29, 1918, and it was passed by the Senate. The Nolan bill, so called, which the Secretary has just read to the Senate, is a duplicate of the bill which the Senator from Florida introduced and which the Senate heretofore passed. The House of Representatives, however, did not pass the bill during that Congress. It was on the calendar, favorably reported, but in the House there was not time for consideration, and the bill could not be brought up. The House has this year passed a duplicate of the bill which the Senate passed a year or two ago. I shall not make any request in reference to the printing of the report on the bill until I see whether or not the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] wants to ask any further question about it. The situation is that a similar bill has been passed by both branches of Congress. In the last Congress it was passed by the Senate, recommended favorably by the House committee, and was placed on the House Calendar. In this Congress it has been passed by the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have read the report and also the bill, and as nearly as I can follow them it is exactly similar to the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I have no objection to the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the junior Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire the Senator from Connecticut to explain wherein the bill differs from existing law, and whether exigencies have arisen, aside from such as might have been produced by reason of the international convention, that would call for such an elaborate measure as this.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the bill is the result of hearings before the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Patents in the Senate and the Committee on Patents in the House of Representatives. I have not gone into it exhaustively, as to the changes it proposes in existing law, because the bill has been passed by both branches of Congress. The meeting of the Senate committee on the bill was attended by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]; and Representative MERRITT, of the House of Representatives, appeared before the committee and explained the bill. The bill had received the approval of the Commissioner of Patents, and, I am free to say, that except that it is to enforce an international convention, I assume it is not so much a change in the existing law as a new provision of law. I was going to ask, Mr. President, that House report No. 411 may be printed in the RECORD, unless the Senator from Utah desires that it shall be read.

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And that House report No. 1090, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, be also printed in the RECORD. Report No. 411 contains a letter from the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who was at the time it was written the Secretary of the Treasury, fully endorsing the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the reports referred to by the Senator from Connecticut will be printed in the RECORD.

The reports are as follows:

[House Report No. 411, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Patents, to which was referred H. R. 9023, a bill to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes, reports the bill to the House with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

Hearings were held on this measure on October 15, at which time there appeared before the committee Hon. James T. Newton, United States Commissioner of Patents; Mr. C. E. McGuire, assistant secretary general, International High Commission; Mr. Thomas P. Robinson, representing the American Patent Law Association; and Mr. Chauncey P. Carter, Washington, D. C., all urging the passage of this bill.

The purpose of this legislation is to give effect between the convention of the United States and the Central and South American States and Cuba for the protection of trade-marks. This convention was signed in Buenos Aires August 20, 1910, and ratified by the Senate February 8, 1911.

An international bureau which will act for the northern States of South America and for the United States has been established in Habana, pursuant to the convention, but is unable to deal with the United States in the absence of specific statute giving the requisite authority to the Commissioner of Patents. South American States which subscribed to the convention are awaiting action by Congress on the pending bill.

A statement from the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Carter Glass, concerning the convention and its purposes is herewith attached:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 14, 1919.

Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I understand that the Committee on Patents is about to consider House bill 9023, permitting the Commissioner of Patents to open a register for marks transmitted by the International Trade-Mark Registration Bureau at Habana as duly registered there. I trust that the committee will see its way clear to recommend the passage of this bill, which will enable the Commissioner of Patents to record in the appropriate way and with proper legal sanction the receipt of the official notice from Habana that marks there deposited have been given the full effect of the international convention.

The International Trade-Mark Registration Bureau has already begun actively to function, and we have every reason to believe that it will render genuine and substantial purpose to the manufacturers and exporters of the United States.

No hesitancy has been observed on our part in appropriating the quota of the United States toward the expense of the bureau in its initial year, and we ought not, therefore, to refrain from taking any other steps necessary to give full effect to the convention. In future years the bureau will be practically self-supporting and will be a source of satisfaction to all of those interested in closer commercial and financial relations between the American Republics.

I am, my dear Mr. Chairman,
Yours, sincerely, CARTER GLASS, Secretary.

The Committee on Patents reports the bill unanimously with a favorable recommendation for its passage.

This country will have failed to carry out its part of the convention unless this legislation is enacted.

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred Senate bill 4889, reports the bill back to the House with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purpose of this legislation is to give effect to the convention between the United States and South American States for the protection of trade-marks. This convention was signed in Buenos Aires August 20, 1910, and ratified by the United States Senate February 8, 1911.

An international bureau which will act for the northern States of South America and for the United States has been established in Habana, pursuant to the convention, but is unable to deal with the United States in the absence of specific statute giving the requisite authority to the Commissioner of Patents. South American States which subscribed to the convention are awaiting action by Congress on the pending bill.

A statement from the Treasury Department concerning the convention and its purposes is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 2, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I learn with much pleasure of the introduction of a bill seeking to execute the convention concerning trade-marks signed at Buenos Aires on August 20, 1910, and ratified by the United States in the following session of Congress. The fundamental principle of the protection of prior use rather than of mere formal priority of registration is assured to the merchants and manufacturers of those Republics of America that have ratified this convention. It is to be hoped that in a relatively short time all the Republics will have so acted; to date the convention has been ratified by the United States, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Costa Rica, Brazil, Ecuador, Paraguay, and Bolivia.

After a number of attempts the American Republics arrived at a simple but effective statement of this principle in the convention adopted in 1910. The convention provides for two international trade-mark registration bureaus—one at Habana, which will receive applications for registration from the countries of North and Central America and the West Indies, and one at Rio de Janeiro, which will receive applications for registration from the countries of South America. The two bureaus are intended to exchange each week statements of the applications received and the registrations granted. The regulations concerning the procedure of application and registration will be prepared by two international bureaus with due care and after consultation with the trade-mark registration authorities of the participating countries.

After waiting several years, and in part I think we may fairly say, as a result of the deep interest in the protection of industrial and literary property taken by the International High Commission at its meeting in Buenos Aires in April, 1916, enough ratifications were secured in the northern group of countries to make possible the inauguration of the bureau destined to serve that group. His Excellency the President of Cuba, upon receiving official notice of this fact, was able in December last to establish the International Trade-mark Registration Bureau at Habana, appointing a well-known and competent trade-mark authority of Cuba as the first director general. In the time that has elapsed since his appointment, Dr. Mario Díaz Irízar, director general of the bureau, has vigorously taken steps to be in a position at a very early date to receive applications for registration. The bureau may now count upon a generous appropriation toward its initial expenses made by the Cuban Congress, and, what is more noteworthy, an ample appropriation for the erection of a permanent building upon a site donated by the Cuban Government. The respective quotas of the other countries of the northern group which have ratified the convention for the first year of the operation of the bureau can be readily settled as soon as Dr. Mario Díaz Irízar comes to Washington to consult the Department of State and the Patent Office.

The legislation, the enactment of which is now thought necessary, will enable the Commissioner of Patents fully to carry out the convention in the spirit in which it was formulated at the Fourth International Conference of American States in Buenos Aires in 1910. The power of preliminary examination is essential if the Patent Office is to have the right to refuse to grant registration (so far as the United States is concerned) of trade-marks registered in the international bureau, while provision is necessary for civil suits to prevent the use of false designations of origin, as well as for broader powers of cancellation of registration. The enactment of legislation of the character suggested—the result of long and careful study on the part of technical authorities in this special field—will enable the United States quickly to put into effect so far as depends upon the Government the provisions of the convention of 1910 and thus directly to promote the successful operation of the Habana bureau, in turn stimulating the further ratification of the convention by enough countries of South America to make possible the opening of the bureau at Rio de Janeiro. With that final step the protection of trade-marks and commercial names throughout this hemisphere will be put upon an enduring and effective basis.

I trust, my dear Senator FLETCHER, that your committee will consider this matter favorably, and I beg to remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

L. S. ROWE,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary General of the International High Commission.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington.

The United States will have failed to carry out its part of the convention until legislation is enacted in the direction herein recommended.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the amendments reported by the committee may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Patents was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, before the word "all," to insert "(a)"; and, on page 2, at the end of section 1, to add "(b) all other marks not registerable under the act of February 20, 1905, as amended, but which have been in bona fide use for not less than two years in interstate or foreign commerce, or commerce with the Indian tribes by the proprietor thereof, upon or in connection with any goods of such proprietor upon which a fee of $10 has been paid and such formalities as required by the Commissioner of Patents have been complied with," so as to make the section read:

That the Commissioner of Patents shall keep a register of (a) all marks communicated to him by the international bureaus provided for by the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, in connection with which the fee of $50 gold for the international registration established by article 2 of that convention has been paid, which register shall show a facsimile of the mark; the name and residence of the registrant; the number, date, and place of the first registration of the mark, including the date on which application for such registration was filed and the term of such registration, a list of goods to which the mark is applied as shown by the registration in the country of origin, and such other data as may be useful concerning the mark; (b) all other marks not registerable under the act of February 20, 1905, as amended, but which have been in bona fide use for not less than two years in interstate or foreign commerce, or commerce with the Indian tribes by the proprietor thereof, upon or in connection with any goods of such proprietor upon which a fee of $10 has been paid and such formalities as required by the Commissioner of Patents have been complied with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 4, line 2, to strike out "29" and insert in lieu thereof "28 (as to class (b) marks only)," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of sections 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, and 28 (as to class (b) marks only) of the act approved February 20, 1905, entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States, or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same," as amended to date, are hereby made applicable to marks placed on the register provided for by section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

That section 5 of the trade-mark act of February 20, 1905, being Thirty-third Statutes at Large, page 725, as amended by Thirty-fourth Statutes at Large, page 1251; Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 918; Thirty-seventh Statutes at Large, page 649, is hereby amended by adding the following words thereto: "And if any person or corporation shall have so registered a mark upon the ground of said use of 10 years preceding February 20, 1905, as to certain articles or classes of articles to which said mark shall have been applied for said period, and shall have thereafter and subsequently extended his business so as to include other articles not manufactured by said applicant for 10 years next preceding February 20, 1905, nothing herein shall prevent the registration of said trade-mark in the additional classes to which said new additional articles manufactured by said person or corporation shall apply, after said trade-mark has been used on said article in interstate or foreign commerce or with the Indian tribes for at least two years."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to say for the information of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the last amendment is a copy of a bill introduced in the other House by Representative MERRITT, and known as House bill 7157, House Calendar No. 141. The House Committee on Patents, the Commissioner of Patents concurring, suggested that if this bill could be placed as an amendment to the Nolan bill, House bill 9023, it would be desirable, and the House conferees would probably agree to it.

The bill now offered as an amendment has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Patents. Its object is this: During the war many of our great manufacturing plants were tremendously enlarged for war orders. There is one company in my State, the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., which employs 20,000 hands now in the city of New Haven. It multiplied its facilities by ten in order to furnish arms for the Government. That plant must go out of business or adapt itself to the condition of peace and must manufacture something else. They have gone into the manufacture of skates and other hardware appliances, mostly sporting goods. The name "Winchester" is trade-marked. There is now no way in which they can protect themselves in foreign countries. They make a skate which is called the "Winchester skate." This bill provides that, if they continue to use that name in foreign countries for two years, they may file their trade-mark on the Winchester skates, as well as on repeating arms. A similar condition has arisen in the case of many other articles.

The situation now is this: Take, for instance, the case of automobiles; a "shark" in Cuba, say, or in some other country, files an application for a trade-mark of the name "Packard," or "Simplex," or "Pierce Arrow," and gets a trade-mark. The result is that none of our automobiles of those names can be exported and landed in those countries under their laws without paying tribute to the shark who has trade-marked the names, although he has done so without the knowledge or consent of the manufacturers of the article. This proposed legislation is designed to correct that evil, so that the manufacturer here may trade-mark the name of his own product if he has used it in foreign commerce for two years. The bill is designed to relieve the situation I have described. Both the House and the Senate committee were unanimously of the opinion that it was a meritorious measure; and we wanted to facilitate the legislation by adding it as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to mean that in all foreign countries a trade-mark is issued without there being any requirement as to the use of the trade-mark within a given time?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is true in some countries, and it was thought if we could get this legislation attached to the pending bill providing for carrying out the convention of Buenos Aires, it would facilitate the protection of our manufacturers. There was no objection voiced to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see why there should be a requirement of two years.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As to that, the Commissioner of Patents said he thought one year, perhaps, would be enough.

Mr. SMOOT. I think one year would be ample.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The only reason we did not reduce it to one year was that it would throw the matter into conference, and we were not asked to reduce it from two years to one.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee having reported other amendments which have gone into the bill, an amendment to the amendment, which he has now presented, would not change the situation, for the bill would have to go to conference in any event.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should just as lief reduce it to one year.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out "two years" and insert "one year." I can not see why any American manufacturer should be compelled to send his goods into a foreign market for two years before this law applies to his goods.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Neither can I see why that should be required. It was the opinion of the committee that the period should be reduced to one year, but they thought that an amendment would carry it into conference. As the Senator from Utah has suggested, however, probably the other amendments will take it into conference in any event. So far as I can do so, I accept the amendment striking out the "two years" and inserting "one year."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Utah that it is preferable to make the period one year. I do not see the use of any great length of time elapsing, and one year will certainly be ample enough to protect everybody.

The situation is as the Senator from Connecticut has indicated, not with reference to Cuba, because there is an international bureau now established at Habana in pursuance to other legislation and other conventions; but, with reference to Argentina, I am told, as an actual occurrence, that a merchant of Buenos Aires ordered a lot of goods from the United States which are shipped under a trade-mark. Under the laws of Argentina the "shark" to whom the Senator from Connecticut has referred can register that trade-mark even after that order is given and the goods are on the way, and when they arrive he can claim tribute. In one instance such an individual actually undertook to confiscate the American goods because they came under a trade-mark which he had registered and claimed as his own. This provision will obviate that sort of thing.

Mr. SMOOT. It is claimed there was an infringement upon his trade-mark.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the claim made. I think this is very important legislation. I hope it will be enacted and that the amendment of the Senator from Utah will be agreed to, for I think it allows ample time for the use of the trade-mark.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So far as I can I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In the amendment reported by the committee to add a new section, to be known as section 9, it is proposd to strike out the last two words of the section, "two years," and insert the words "one year."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AT LANGLEY, VA.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 371, being the bill (S. 3516) to authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to furnish quarters at Langley Field, Va., to the civilian employees of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and for other purposes.

I think it will cause no discussion whatever. It is a very simple matter. If it causes any debate, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that we finish the regular order. We are now, as I understand, under the head of reports of committees, and then will come the introduction of bills. It will take but a little while for us to finish that order, and then we will see about the motion of the Senator from Indiana. I shall object until we get through with the morning's business.

Mr. NEW. Of course, if there is objection, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit a resolution which I desire to have read, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold the request until the Senator from Florida can offer the bill he desires to introduce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was only asking that we proceed with the regular order. We are now under the head of reports of committees, and if there are no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the order of reports of committees had been concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to have the announcement made, that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of business under which we are operating now is reports of committees. The resolution of the Senator from Mississippi will be in order later. Are there any further reports of committees? If not, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KNOX:

A bill (S. 3945) relating to married women intermarried with aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3946) to establish and maintain a forest experiment station in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California (by request):

A bill (S. 3947) legalizing conveyances made by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3948) for the relief of the estate of John Scowcroft; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3949) for the relief of the estates of Helen P. Carson, deceased, and Elizabeth Campbell, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. RANSDELL. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes, to insert on page 20, line 5, after the words "major general," the words "two Assistant Chiefs of Engineers with the rank of brigadier general." I move that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF COAL-TAR PRODUCTS.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCNARY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $60,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the War Department in the maintenance of an air patrol for fire prevention or suppression in the national forests of the Pacific coast, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE ESTOPINAL.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall convene on Sunday, March 7, at 12 o'clock meridian, to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of the late Representative from Louisiana, Hon. ALBERT ESTOPINAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT PUBLIC-SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 310) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of seven Senators, four from the majority party and three from the minority party, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the public-school system of the District of Columbia.

That said committee shall investigate specifically the manner of appointing the superintendent, principals, teachers, and other employees of the public schools of the District; the personnel, adequacy, and pay of teachers and other employees of the public schools of the District; the accommodation, heating, lighting, ventilation, and sewerage of the public-school buildings of the District; the number of holidays, courses of study, and discipline adopted by the teachers and management of the public schools of the District; and such other policies adopted by the management of the public-school system of the District as, in the discretion of the committee, is advisable to investigate.

That the committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer or stenographers to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation.

That said committee may sit during the sessions of the Senate, and it shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the earliest date possible.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the resolution broad enough to include the question of the school facilities of the District?

Mr. HARRISON. I have tried to make it so broad that it would include everything pertaining to the public-school system in the District.

Mr. CURTIS. And the attendance?

Mr. HARRISON. If it does not include that, I am perfectly willing that an amendment shall be adopted which will cover it.

Mr. CURTIS. I think it is broad enough, but I asked the question in order to be sure.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is, because it says "the whole public-school system." In the discretion of the committee, anything that is not specifically named might be investigated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I do suggest to the Senator that the committee is entirely too large, and I ask him to accept a suggested amendment that the number be reduced to five.

Mr. HARRISON. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I ask that the resolution be so modified, and that it be made to read so that three of the committee will be selected from the majority party of the Senate and two from the minority party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the modification, which is accepted by the Senator from Mississippi.

The READING CLERK. Strike out the word "seven" and insert "five," so that it will read "five Senators."

Strike out "four" and insert "three," and strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to read "three from the majority party and two from the minority party."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for immediate consideration? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified.

The Reading Clerk read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the public-school system of the District of Columbia.

That said committee shall investigate specifically the manner of appointing the superintendent, principals, teachers, and other employees of the public schools of the District; the personnel, adequacy, and pay of teachers and other employees of the public schools of the District; the accommodation, heating, lighting, ventilation, and sewerage of the public school buildings of the District; the number of holidays, courses of study, and discipline adopted by the teachers and management of the public schools of the District; and such other policies adopted by the management of the public-school system of the District, as, in the discretion of the committee, is advisable to investigate.

That the committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer or stenographers, to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation.

That said committee may sit during the sessions of the Senate, and it shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the earliest date possible.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the law that resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I endeavored to so draft the resolution that it would not have to be referred to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure, if I caught the reading of it, that the Committee on Contingent Expenses is where it would have to be referred.

Mr. HARRISON. The resolution does not provide that the expense shall be paid out of the Treasury. If it did I should think without question it would have to go to that committee, but the resolution states nothing specifically about the payment of expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The purpose of this resolution is to investigate the conditions in the public schools of the District and to ascertain not only the conditions as to housing facilities, heating, future buildings, and so forth, but also to investigate the practical operation of the schools and what may be required in the way of current needs, and also, if there are any shortcomings, what they may be?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; the Senator states the object of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have the resolution adopted. I prefer to have it adopted in this form rather than to have it come to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the wording of the resolution:

That the committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and employ a stenographer or stenographers to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation.

How are they to be paid?

Mr. HARRISON. The object, of course, was that they were to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we will have to make an appropriation for it.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought perhaps we could come back with another resolution later on to cover that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the proper way to do is either to offer a resolution in the regular form or to send this resolution to the committee, and the committee will amend it so as to conform to all of the other resolutions. One of those two things will be necessary unless you make it a joint resolution. If you want to do that, and let it go to the House and be passed by the House, then it will be paid out of the Treasury of the United States; but nothing can be paid out of the Treasury of the United States on a simple Senate resolution. This will be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that is where all of these expenses are paid from; and under the law this resolution would have to go to that committee, or you could not pay your stenographer or stenographers.

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose we should strike out the provision for the employment of a stenographer; in the Senator's opinion then would the resolution have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. No; if this resolution can be complied with without the expenditure of any money, then it will not have to go to that committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the committee might see that it could not get along without a stenographer, and immediately come back with another resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I see nothing in this resolution that would require it to go to the committee if you strike out the provision for the employment of a stenographer or stenographers, as long as the Senator felt that the committee appointed could attend to all of the work required under this resolution without the payment of a cent from the contingent fund of the Senate or from the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I certainly feel that in the end it will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, the very quickest way for the Senator to get action—and I want to say that I am in favor of the resolution—is to let it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to say to my colleague that I think one-half of the expenses of the investigation should be paid by the District, and not all charged to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. That will bring up an entirely new precedent, because when the Senate wants to make an investigation it must pay the expenses.

Mr. KING. I shall insist that the District pay part of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will have early and favorable action. I think it will not be an expensive investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question but that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate at the very first meeting that is held will report out the resolution. I expect that meeting to be early next week, and in my opinion the committee will then report out the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

FINANCE BRANCH OF WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams and communications with reference to the action of the Government heretofore taken in removing from one of the departments one agency for the payment of the expenses of the Government; and I have one of the types of the telegrams here, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. They desire to secure the return of the finance branch to the Quartermaster Corps, the same as it was during the prewar period. This is signed by Mr. Lester D. Freed, president of the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce. I do not ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRICE OF WHEAT.

Mr. KING. I have also a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Ogden, Utah, which is a type of many I have received, protesting against what is known as the Gronna bill. I ask its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred.

FOREST RESOURCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CAPPER. I offer a resolution calling on the Secretary of Agriculture for certain information in regard to the forest resources of the United States. If there is no objection, I ask that it be given immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 311) was read, as follows:

Whereas it has been reported that the forest resources of the United States are being rapidly depleted, and that the situation is already serious and will soon become critical; and

Whereas these alleged facts are either largely unknown to the public or in dispute: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate on or before June 1, 1920, on the following matters, using what information the Forest Service now has available, or what may be obtained readily with its existing organization:

1. The facts as to the depletion of timber, pulpwood, and other forest resources in the United States.

2. Whether, and to what extent, this affects the present high cost of materials.

3. Whether the export of lumber, especially of hardwoods, jeopardizes our domestic industries.

4. Whether this reported depletion tends to increase the concentration of ownership in timberlands and the manufacture of lumber, and to what extent; and if such concentration exists, how it affects or may affect the public welfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the resolution stated again; or perhaps the Senator from Kansas can tell me what I desire to know without reading the entire resolution. Do I understand the resolution to apply to lands generally or only to the public lands?

Mr. CAPPER. The forest resources generally.

Mr. SMOOT. I think at least some of the information asked for would be foreign to the public lands; and I was wondering whether it would be proper to adopt a resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an investigation of hardwoods in the United States, all of which, I think, are outside of the public lands.

Mr. CAPPER. There is no objection to the resolution covering the whole field. It simply asks for information that the Secretary of Agriculture probably has now. I do not think it will involve any extensive investigation or expense to the department.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask to have the resolution stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be restated.

The Reading Clerk again stated the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the statement of the first "Whereas" has reference entirely to the Forest Service; but the information asked for has a wider and broader scope, and as the Senator states that the information is already in the possession of the department I see no objection at all to having it compiled and put in this form.

Mr. CAPPER. I do not think there ought to be any objection at all to it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think there should be any objection if the information is already in the possession of the department; but if it were not in the possession of the department, then I think it would be questionable to compel the department to try to get all of that information by June 1.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as I understand, it only applies to such information as they have on hand.

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; as I stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AT LANGLEY, VA.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration for the remaining three minutes of the morning hour of Senate bill 3516, Order of Business 371.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question, because if the bill is what I think it is I do not believe we can pass it in the two minutes that are left. The bill extends to civilian employees of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics the privilege of purchasing subsistence stores and commissarial supplies at cost plus 10 per cent.

Mr. NEW. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think that is proper?

Mr. NEW. I certainly do.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall want to see a report on it before the bill is passed.

Mr. NEW. Well, here is the report on it.

Mr. SMOOT. It will take longer than two minutes to take it up and pass it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objects.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going into the business of furnishing civilian employees of the Government food supplies at cost and 10 per cent——

Mr. NEW. Oh, Mr. President, this simply extends to the department authority to permit certain civilian employees of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to buy from the commissary stores at cost plus 10 per cent. Those civilian employees are operating in connection with the Government forces at Langley Field. The Government is getting the benefit of what they are doing, and the department simply wants authority to house those people and to subsist them at Langley Field while they are doing this work.

Of course if the Senator from Utah objects to its consideration we can not pass it at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the principle of it, and I want to know really why the privilege should be granted to this class of civilian employees more than any other.

Mr. NEW. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request for unanimous consent is withdrawn. The morning hour is closed.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty with Germany in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Kenyon	Phipps
Ball	Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Pittman
Beckham	Gay	King	Poindexter
Borah	Glass	Knox	Ransdell
Brandegee	Gronna	Lodge	Sheppard
Capper	Hale	McKellar	Sherman
Chamberlain	Harris	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Colt	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Spencer
Dial	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Sterling
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Thomas
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Trammell
Elkins	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the pending question is the amendment which I moved to reservation No. 1, reported to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I wish to say but a word in regard to the point made yesterday about the granting of the power to the President alone to give notice of withdrawal from the league. Thanks to the kindness of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I have the cases here in regard to the exercise of that power by the President.

The usual method in the termination of treaties, as I suppose everyone knows, has been the termination by joint resolution of Congress, of course signed by the President, or the President giving notice that owing to legislation adopted by Congress it made necessary the termination of an article in a treaty or of an entire treaty. But there are two cases in which the President alone gave notice. One was on March 23, 1899, when notice was given to the Swiss Government to terminate articles 8 and 12 of the treaty of 1850. The other one was notice given by President Taft in 1911 for the termination of the treaty with Russia. Subsequently the President informed the Senate of his action and received their approval.

Also, we found another interesting case where President Pierce in 1850 asked for authority to give notice to Denmark of the termination of the treaty of 1826, and that authority was given to him by Senate resolution. There was some question about it, raised by Mr. Sumner, and the Committee on Foreign Relations reported upon it favoring the resolution, which was passed, and the President was sustained. This last case is of interest, as it is a direct precedent for what is done here, the Senate giving authority to the President to give notice of termination of a treaty, which, of course, is parallel to giving notice of withdrawal from the covenant of the league, which is an article in the treaty. I think that this is the proper way of dealing with the question.

The new feature, of course, and the vital feature, is giving power to the two Houses of Congress to give the notice and conferring it formally upon the President, although the President in the two instances I have pointed out exercised the power of giving notice of termination or withdrawal without action by Congress. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose we should adopt the reservation as it was originally written, is it the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the President could nevertheless give notice as President Taft did and as was given in the other instances cited and terminate the treaty?

Mr. LODGE. That is in line with those two precedents, which were never questioned at the time. I think it is at least doubtful whether the President has not the power to do that.

Mr. BORAH. If the President has not the power, we would have the right under the treaty to fix the method by which we could come in again or fix that by treaty, regardless of whether he has the power?

Mr. LODGE. I think there is no question about that. How the notice of withdrawal shall be given is, of course, something which concerns this country alone. I think we can put in any provision we please as to how, just as we arrange the time when the notice shall be given. We have the direct precedent, which I just quoted, of giving authority to the President to withdraw from the treaty by his own act.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I voted against the first reservation last November for many of the reasons which the Senator has assigned for the introduction of the substitute, and I heartily concur in the conclusions at which the Senator has arrived. My impression is that if we are to pass any reservations upon the subject, that which is now before the Senate is the proper one.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the reservation heretofore adopted by a majority of the Senate and now reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations reads as follows:

> The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

It is proposed to modify that so that the last clause shall read:

> And notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by the President or by Congress alone whenever a majority of both Houses may deem it necessary.

The effect being that it is expressly declared that the United States may get out of the league by reason of notice given by the President or by reason of notice conveyed in some way or other upon the action of both Houses of Congress.

The original reservation was framed evidently with a view to making it easy to get out of the league. It is not quite so easy to pass an ordinary law as it would be to get out of the league under the reservation as originally reported. No matter how trivial may be the law in the ordinary acceptance of the term, it needs the concurrence of the legislative branch of the Government and of the President, and it is impossible to repeal a law either in whole or in part without such joint action.

The purpose evidently was to exclude the President from participation in the procedure of withdrawing from the league. I have no doubt that there were two purposes actuating those framing the reservation. As indicated, in the first place there was a purpose to make it easy to get out. We have different views about these matters and all of us indulge in our own opinions. My own opinion was at the time, and I have had no reason to change it, that a further consideration operating to induce the reporting of the reservation in the shape in which it reached us was an unreasoning and an unreasonable antipathy to the President of the United States, which everybody must recognize is a very large element in whatever opposition has developed to the treaty. I undertake to say that nine letters out of every ten which have reached me expressing opposition to the league breathe a spirit of hatred of the President of the United States. I may be wrong, but that is my notion about it, and it seems to me that in this particular case the element of personal antipathy went so far as to prompt an attempt to incorporate in this amendment a provision that is nugatory because against the very plain language of the Constitution, that any resolution of Congress requiring the joint action of both Houses must, in order to be effective at all, be submitted to the President of the United States and approved by him, or being disapproved must be returned and concurred in by a two-thirds vote of both Houses.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator does not deny that the Senate alone may authorize the President to withdraw from a treaty?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My view about that is that the power which makes the treaty may unmake the treaty. The President of the United States concurring with two-thirds of the Senate may make a treaty, and I have no doubt that the President of the United States and two-thirds of the Senate may unmake a treaty, the right being reserved to our Government to withdraw.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is there any doubt also about the fact that the power which makes the treaty may designate the manner of withdrawing from it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; there is the gravest kind of doubt in my mind. I have no idea that the President of the United States and the Senate of the United States may abandon their functions and prescribe that we may get out of the league at any time the mayor of the city of Chicago so determines and declares. I have no doubt that such action on their part would be void. Has the Senator from Minnesota any doubt about it?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I have doubt about it. I think that the Senate and the President can make a treaty to be terminated on the happening of any event, and the Senator will remember that he joined in a report of the Committee on the Judiciary to that effect.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is very familiar with the decisions of the courts with reference to the matter to which he averts. They do not go so far as to say that a statute may be made to terminate upon any contingency whatever to be determined by anyone whomsoever.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the Senator was of the opinion that the proposed treaty to be made between France, Great Britain, and the United States, which was to continue in existence until the League of Nations should terminate or determine the fact that it was unnecessary for the further protection of France, was a constitutional exercise of the treaty-making power?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will not——

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me finish. If that be true—and I think there is no doubt of it—it seems to me the Senate and the President may make a treaty from which either the President or the Congress may withdraw, if the treaty so provides.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The distinction between the case to which the Senator refers and the one before us is perfectly plain to anyone who desires to see. A statute may be passed to terminate upon a certain contingency; that is to say, upon the transpiring of a certain event, or the existence of a certain condition, to be determined by some one, within certain limits, who may be designated in the statute. The council of the League of Nations, in the case to which the Senator refers, as provided in the treaty with France, is simply empowered to determine the fact as to whether the league affords sufficient protection to France against a possible further invasion by Germany. If that tribunal determines that it does, then that treaty, by its terms, ceases. Under the reservation before us the Congress of the United States is not called upon to determine the existence of any fact or any condition whatever. It is therein provided that whenever, in their judgment, in their wisdom, in their discretion, bear in mind, the Congress of the United States, the two Houses of Congress, without any participation by the President whatever—not upon the determination of any fact, not upon the determination of any conditions, but when in their judgment it is no longer good public policy to continue our membership in the league they may act and terminate it. That is the difference between the two. All the authorities hold is that we may repose in some person or body the determination of whether a certain event has taken place or a certain condition exists, the statute or treaty to terminate upon the determination of that question; but to repose in the Congress of the United States power that by the Constitution is reposed jointly in the Congress and the President of the United States is as impossible as to repose it in the mayor of the city of Chicago.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the Senator is aware of the fact that many treaties have been abrogated by the action of Congress and the President. I might ask the Senator what the House of Representatives has to do with it then?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is very simple. The Congress of the United States is the legislative power in this country. By the joint action of the two Houses, with the approval of the President, a treaty which is a law may be abrogated, just the same as any other law may be repealed by a subsequent act of Congress.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator from Montana deny that the Senate and the President in making a treaty may authorize the President to give the notice of withdrawal without the concurrence of the Senate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I doubt it; and I doubt it because we can not derogate from the power of future Senates. We can not say to the Senate that shall exist here 10 years hence, "You are going to have nothing whatever to say about this matter; we are going to repose in the President of the United States, whosoever he may be 10 years from now, the power to terminate this treaty, if he sees fit so to do." The Senate at that time will be entitled to say whether or not that treaty shall be abrogated. That is my view about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Bearing in mind that we are now dealing with a reservation which does not become a part of the treaty, but which is our understanding and which is to be agreed to by the other signatories, if the Senate attaches a reservation that notice of withdrawal may be given by a Senate resolution, inasmuch as the only object of the reservation is to estop the other party from complaining, if they agree that that shall be good notice, would not that be a valid way to get us out of the treaty?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have just expressed my opinion that it would not be; and it would not be, it seems to me, for perfectly plain and obvious reasons. This treaty is no different from any other treaty. As very properly expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], we simply abrogate the treaty in part; other treaties we nullify in their entirety. We now ratify a treaty, say a treaty with Denmark; suppose we put in the treaty with Denmark that it might be abrogated at any time by notice given by the Senate of the United States, and 10 years from now the Senate of the United States should undertake to exercise that power. The President of the United States would say, "I have something to say about whether or not this treaty shall be abrogated. The Senate of the United States which existed 10 years ago can not deprive me of any power granted to me by the Constitution. This treaty will not be abrogated. I will not transmit the message, and I shall consider the treaty as still in force and effect until I concur in the action by which it is to be terminated."

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. Is not this treaty a contract between the United States and the other members who may join in it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is; but it is also a law of the United States.

Mr. COLT. And when we are making such a contract can we not annex to it any condition we may please in regard to giving notice as to its termination? Does not that become a part or a condition of the contract? I merely ask that question for information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The treaty is, of course, a contract between us and the other nations, and in addition to that it is a law of the United States; it is a law which every citizen of the United States is required to observe; it is a law which controls the action of the Government with reference to matters with which it deals. Our laws are made in a certain way; they are also abrogated in a certain way. We can not derogate in any way from the power of future Congresses or future Senates or future Presidents of the United States, and if we undertake to do so by a contract with a foreign nation any effort in that direction is, in my judgment, nugatory.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Assuming the correctness of the Senator's contention that the treaty may only be abrogated by the sovereign authority, whatever it may be, does the Senator contend that notice might not be given by anyone as provided for in the contract?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, we get confused here. Under any and all circumstances the actual physical act of giving notice will be performed by the President of the United States, because he is the only agency through which we confer with other powers. The important question is where is reposed the power to determine whether or not the notice will be given, and I contend that the Constitution vests that either in the Congress by a legislative act or in the President and the Senate as the treaty-making body?

Mr. LENROOT. But might we not by contract provide that, if anyone should give the notice, at the expiration of the two-year period, the authority that would have the right to terminate might do so at any time? Would not that be the effect of it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the point I am making. The power that makes the treaty is the President and two-thirds of the Senate, and they are entitled to say as the years pass by whether or not it shall continue in force. The present Senate can not do anything which will deprive future Senates and future Congresses and future Presidents of the United States from having their say as to whether or not the treaty shall continue in effect.

Mr. LENROOT. No. But this relates only to notice. Now, assuming that the Senator is right, that it might require future action to actually terminate the treaty, then all that this provision would accomplish would be to get rid of the two years' notice that is required, and that might be given by anyone who is prescribed in the contract as having authority to give the notice.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not able to follow the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. President, I desire simply to add that when the framers of the Constitution were considering the principles of the new system of government they were about to establish they had the idea in mind, the merits, and the weakness of a single legislative body, as under the Articles of Confederation, enjoying executive as well as legislative power; but they had tried out that system and had abundant evidence before them of how futile it was to endeavor to build a stable and efficient government upon any such basis. I presented to the Senate some weeks ago a pamphlet in which it was seriously urged that we should return to that system under which we would have no President, a system under which we would have no two bodies of Congress, but one single body in which all governmental powers, at least all legislative and executive powers, would be vested. We had tried out that system, and the framers of the Constitution had before them the disastrous results which flowed from it. So they provided that Congress could not do anything in the way of legislation, either to make laws or to unmake laws, except the matter was submitted to the President of the United States and received his concurrence, unless, indeed, his objection should be overruled by a two-thirds vote. That system has worked admirably.

It is one of the essentials of our system that these two branches of the Government—the Congress and the Executive—concur either in the making of laws or in the unmaking of them. Why depart in this instance from the salutary provisions thus made by the founders of the Constitution in the light of the painful experience which they had had with the other system.

Stop and think what is contemplated, Mr. President. If the Congress of the United States and the President are in entire harmony, the provision for a joint resolution would meet all the requirements of the case; a concurrent resolution or absolute power in the President can be useful only when the Congress of the United States and the President are antagonistic to each other; when the Congress wants to get out and the President wants to stay in——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just a moment—or the President wants to get out and the Congress wants to stay in. It is for such a case that provision is being made; and I ask you what kind of a spectacle do you afford to the world with the President of the United States sending notice to all the nations that we are out of the league and the Congress of the United States protesting against his action, or, upon the other hand, the two Houses of Congress insisting that we are out of the league and sending such notice to all the world, by some indirect channel, while the President of the United States publishes a proclamation to the effect that we are in the league and bound by the obligations that attach to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Montana attaches so much value to the principle of a division of power on which he is now expatiating, and two branches of the legislative body and the separation of the Executive from the legislative powers, and of the judicial from either one of the others, which followed the unsuccessful experiment of the old Continental Congress—if the Senator believes that the present system under which we have lived for some one hundred and forty odd years is a good one, why does he advocate in the larger field of this league of all the nations of the world the concentration and consolidation of all the powers of government in the assembly of the league?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite aside from the question I am considering, and I do not care to be diverted from the question before us to discuss at this time the fundamentals suggested by the inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. President, I desire to call your attention to the fact that this very proposition which is now presented to us by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts has already been considered and rejected by the Senate. It was directly involved in an amendment tendered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] when this subject was last before the Senate for consideration. He proposed an amendment—I read from page 8134 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of date November 8—so that if adopted the reservation would read:

> And notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by the President or by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

That motion was rejected by a vote of 18 yeas to 68 nays, and of the 18 who voted "yea" I have personal knowledge that at least half a dozen labored under a misapprehension of the nature of the amendment; so that there were not more than a dozen Senators who indorsed the idea at that time. Among those voting in the negative were the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who now tenders an amendment of like import, and it was generally opposed upon the Republican side of the Senate. I call attention to this for the purpose of illustrating that the Senator from Massachusetts sometimes changes his mind, and, notwithstanding his rather strenuous protestations that no change whatever can be made in the reservation in relation to article 10, I still entertain the hope, upon this evidence before me, that he may yet be induced to change his mind about that.

Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made one of his entertaining speeches—and I always like to listen to him—in which he insisted that the Senate might just as well abandon this discussion at the present time, in view of the statements made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the effect that no amendment whatever of the Lodge reservation in relation to article 10 could be tolerated, and the statement upon the part of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that the Lodge amendment in relation to article 10 never could be accepted upon his side of the Chamber.

But, Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin was to the effect, as I recall, that no change in the substance of the reservation in relation to article 10 could be made, leaving it open to inference that a change in the form of the reservation in relation to article 10 might be entertained. There are differences of opinion in relation to what amendments relate to matters of form and what amendments relate to matters of substance. Some there are who think that a certain proposed amendment to that reservation affect the form of it only, while others think that they modify it and affect the reservation in a matter of substance. Considering the reservation as to article 10, agreed to in the bipartisan conference, as is contended by the representatives from this side of the Chamber, I thought that a very material change in the substance and meaning of article 10 was thereby made, that the effect of it, so far as the United States was concerned, was quite materially altered, but a very high authority considered that the change was a matter of form only or, rather, that the substance of article 10 was not affected, although the form in which the reservation was drafted was objectionable. So that, Mr. President, desirous as I am, and desirous as I have been to arrive at some agreement, if we can, that will secure the necessary 64 votes for the ratification of the treaty, I am still hopefully awaiting suggestions of amendments from Senators upon the other side, even though they consider them as not affecting the substance but only the form of the reservation. Why should not Senators on both sides labor assiduously, strive earnestly at least, to express the ideas conveyed by the language of the reservations in such form as not to be needlessly offensive or as will make them objectionable to the President, whose concurrence is necessary, if we are to have a treaty at all.

For instance, it will be recalled that the reservation under consideration provides that the United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations, whether members of the league or not, under the provisions of article 10. Now, in my judgment the excision of the language "or to interfere in controversies between nations" would be a mere matter of form as to this reservation. It would not in any manner whatever, in my judgment, affect the meaning of the reservation. It would stand with exactly the same force and effect as it would have if those words remained in. But, Mr. President, when it was proposed in the bipartisan conference to strike these words out this view, though concurred in by some of the Republican Members, did not meet the approval of the chairman of the committee, the Senator having charge of the treaty, who objected strenuously to the excision of the language referred to. He thought apparently there was much of substance in it. I considered it a mere matter of form, and in the view expressed by me there was, as I have said, some concurrence.

Let us suppose, now, that it were proposed upon the other side to strike out this language "or to interfere in controversies between nations." Some might consider that as an amendment affecting the form of the reservation only, while others would stoutly maintain, I dare say, that it goes to the substance of the reservation.

Referring to that matter causes me to say that my recollection about the circumstances attending the break in the bipartisan conference is not altogether, at least in details, in conformity with the account given by my esteemed friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], on yesterday. My recollection—and it is exceedingly vivid—is that the bipartisan conference had agreed upon the amendment tendered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] as the work of that committee.

I do not mean to say, now, that each member of the committee expressly declared his acceptance of or acquiescence in the reservation as it was reported; but the fact about the matter is that having reached that form the committee passed entirely from the alterations made to consider a suggestion that the words "or to interfere in controversies between nations" be stricken out as being useless, as having no meaning whatever. It was while the committee had that matter under consideration that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] expressed his decided opposition to striking out the language referred to, and thereupon he asked his colleagues to go into the adjacent room for a conference. They were there some time, when we sent word to them that it was getting late, and that we would meet them the next morning. The press stated that meanwhile the Senator from Massachusetts had held a conference with the so-called irreconcilables on the Republican side of the Senate, and when the committee reassembled he told us that he would not be able to concede any change whatever in article 10. I have accordingly been obliged to assume that the conclusion at which he arrived was induced by the conference he had with those who are opposed to the treaty, not those who are in favor of its ratification.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there were no irreconcilables on the bipartisan committee, I believe.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; but they evidently were keeping pretty close track of the proceedings, and I rather guess that having heard that the committee was on the eve of coming together they thought it timely to get into communication with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. I must say that while the irreconcilables were trying to keep track of the committee, it was a very difficult thing to do, because that committee put it all over the Versailles conference on secrecy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We did the best we could. Yes; that reminds me. This is by way of digression, but I called the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] some days ago, when some animadversions were being made by him upon the President of the United States by reason of his participation in the policy of secrecy that attended the meetings of the conference, to the fact that the press at the time it assembled carried the information to the world that the President of the United States was in favor of giving a large degree of publicity to the proceedings, but that he had been overruled by the other countries represented. I now have before me an article from the New York Times of January 11, 1919, a contribution from its regular correspondent, Mr. Oulahan, who says:

It is expected that the formula will soon receive publicity, as the American delegation has decided to propose open sessions of the inter-allied conference when the first meeting is held next week.

And when next week came the cables reported that they had been overruled.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in his interesting contribution to the debate on yesterday, in which he protested the futility of further discussion on the treaty in the Senate, declared that the people of the United States were going to determine the whole matter at the ensuing election; that it would be impossible to keep it out of the campaign; that the American sovereigns were going to determine at that time whether the admonition of Washington concerning entangling alliances was to be put into the discard, and whether the historic doctrine of Monroe was any longer to be considered as a vital principle of American polity; that the league was even now a political issue thus to be resolved because the Republican national platform was foreshadowed in the address of Mr. Root before the convention in the State of New York. The Senator from Idaho read from the address referred to, as follows:

Immediately after March 4, 1921, a Republican President should urge upon the society of nations the reform of the league covenant, so as to make it establish the rule of public right rather than the rule of mere expediency, so as to make the peace of the world rest primarily upon law and upon the effectiveness and enforcement of law.

Mr. President, I do not believe that any issue will be raised upon that matter before the American people in the ensuing election. Indeed, I apprehend that there will be among the Democrats no particular opposition to that proposal of Mr. Root. It has been repeatedly asserted, and we all feel that way, that the covenant is by no means perfect. The Constitution of the United States was not perfect at the time it was framed; and although no convention was held for the purpose of revising it, there was common consent to the suggestion that it ought to be revised or at least its provisions supplemented, and amendments were proposed, some 10 of them, which were subsequently adopted without substantial opposition. I think it would not be unwise at all for the nations to get together after this treaty is ratified and the league is in operation, not only for the purpose of revising the covenant of the league but—if I may have the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]—for the purpose of revising some other provisions of this treaty of which he spoke so impressively a few days ago.

Speaking for myself, I shall be glad to join with Mr. Root in his desire to have another congress assemble to see whether many of the objections which have been made to the covenant can not be obviated by concerted action of the signatory powers. But the Senator from Idaho did not read another part of Mr. Root's speech, in which he said:

It seems clear to me that in the interests of the world's peace, which all America desires to promote, this treaty ought to be ratified with the reservations of the Senate, and that without those reservations in their fair and honest substance it ought not to be ratified. I hope the treaty will be ratified with the reservations long before the presidential election. That will be done if the President permits it. If that is not done, then that is what I think the Republican Party ought to stand for.

Mr. President, that is in strict accord with the statements made in the letter of Mr. Root, sent to Mr. Hays at an early stage of this discussion, in which he declared that the treaty ought to be ratified, that there was much good in it, and he goes on to specify the particulars in which it has his approval.

The whole letter is an indorsement not only of the general plan of a League of Nations but of the specific covenant worked out at Versailles. Moreover, Mr. Root has declined to become a representative from the State of New York to the national convention, because he desires to accept the place tendered to him as a member of the commission which is to provide for the creation of the international court contemplated by the covenant. Mr. Root is not going to help carry out the provisions of the league unless in general the plan has his approbation, and he anticipates that in some form or other the league will come into being and be operative.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the treaty should be ratified with the reservations known as the Lodge reservations—and I understand it to be the view of Mr. Root that it should be ratified, if at all, in that way—does the Senator think—speaking now of its going into politics—that the convention at San Francisco would ratify that action?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is just the point I was going to make. If the Senator is correct in saying that the State of New York will dominate the Republican convention, and that the platform adopted at the national convention is foreshadowed in the platform adopted by the convention for the State of New York, and the Democratic convention does what is expected of it—that it will declare in favor of the ratification of the treaty without reservations, or with such interpretive reservations as those offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]—then the issue will be between the Republicans upon the one side, favoring the ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations, and the Democrats upon the other side, favoring the ratification of the treaty without reservations, or with the interpretive reservations offered by the Senator from Nebraska. In that event, let me inquire of the Senator from Idaho, How are the people going to be heard upon the question as to whether or not we shall engage in entangling alliances with the powers of Europe or whether the Monroe doctrine shall be abandoned?

It is unnecessary to say again that not one of the eighty-odd Senators who voted for ratification believes that either the teachings of Washington or the doctrine of Monroe are disregarded in their action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to suggest, run a candidate who desires to take us at once out of the league, and under this reservation the people would have an opportunity of saying whether they wanted to come out or not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is more consistent about this. He denounces Mr. Root's platform. He says it does not express the correct Republican doctrine; that he and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] represent the only attitude of their party on the treaty. He does not want to have anything to do with it. The Senator from Idaho has repeatedly declared that he is against a league, reservations or no reservations; he is against any league of nations; and that is the doctrine that he has been preaching with great power and with great eloquence both in the Senate and before the country. The Senator from California is quoted in this morning's paper as saying as follows:

ROOT WRONG ON LEAGUE, SENATOR JOHNSON SAYS.

Direct disagreement with Elihu Root's opinion of the peace treaty as a political issue, as expressed yesterday in a speech to the unofficial State convention of New York Republicans, was voiced last night by Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, of California, a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination.

In a formal statement Senator JOHNSON declared it would be "neither fair to the other members of the league nor to the people of the United States to enter the league, as Mr. Root suggested, and then have the President inaugurated next March take steps to re-form the league covenant."

"If the league," the statement said, "establishes a rule of expediency rather than a rule of public right, as Mr. Root says it does, then it is neither wise nor statesmanlike for the United States to become a party to the present covenant for the brief space of a few months.

"If the league is all that Mr. Root says it is, then the time to re-form it is not on the 5th of March, 1921, but now. If it presents all the dangers to the United States which Mr. Root describes, then the time to avoid its dangers is now, and not after we have irrevocably become a party to it."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Substantially, I think, the Senator from Montana has quoted me correctly. I ask him if he does not believe that if the dangers that are pointed out by Mr. Root are present in this covenant, the duty devolves upon the Senate of the United States to remove those dangers right now? If this covenant is, as Mr. Root suggests, a mere doctrine of expediency rather than an expression of the right, then we ought not to enter into any such covenant with either an express or a mental reservation that we are going to re-form it on the 5th day of March, 1921.

Mr. Root's position is that this is a covenant fraught with dangers; that those dangers ought to be avoided; that it does not represent the rule of right, but the rule of expediency; that we should enter into it with the so-called Lodge reservations and on the 5th day of March, 1921, rewrite it, re-form it, and amend it. I say, in response to that, that you can not amend it under the rules and under the provisions of the document after once you are in it, and that the time to amend it and to protect America is right now, before we go into it.

In that I take issue with Mr. Root, as has been suggested by the Senator from Montana. To me it is wholly illogical; not only illogical, but it is worse. It is a crime against the American people to say that we should go into a document which he describes as so dangerous and wrong as this document with the idea subsequently, on the 5th of March, 1921, of amending the document, when under its very provisions you can not amend it without the consent of practically every member of the league. Today let us remove its dangers. Let us take its sting out of it. Let us make it American to-day—not on the 5th of March, 1921.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I gladly yielded to the Senator from California, whose earnestness and ability I admire and respect. I am sure, however, that he will relieve me from any obligation of acting in the capacity of a judge between himself and the distinguished Republican statesman from the State of New York.

But, Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that in view of the situation of affairs to which I have called attention, if he expects to present to the people of the United States at the next election the question whether we ought to have a League of Nations or not, not any particular league but any league, in accordance with his contention, he will have to see that Mr. Root's ideas do not prevail in the Republican convention, and that it declares unequivocally in favor of the rejection of the treaty and against entering into any league of nations whatever, or if the treaty should be meanwhile ratified, to see that there is incorporated in the platform a plank as suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], declaring that the President nominated by that party, if elected, will immediately give notice of withdrawal pursuant to the provisions of the covenant in that regard. Otherwise, I find it impossible to conceive that the question which the Senator would like to discuss before the people at the next election, and which he would, of course, discuss with his usual ability and power, can be an issue, as he asserts it will be in the campaign now before us.

Mr. BORAH. It will be presumption upon my part, of course, to assume that the Senator from Idaho could have any considerable influence in the Chicago convention against a program which might be agreed upon by those who are more experienced in party affairs, but I do not think I need to say to the Senator from Montana that small as the influence may be, it will be there, and it will be exerted until the convention is over, and so far as I am individually concerned the question will be presented to the American people after the convention is over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then the only way, it seems to me, that the Senator will be able to get it there will be to hold another convention and make the rejection of the treaty the corner stone of his platform.

Mr. BORAH. Not necessarily hold another convention, although that might happen; but I want to see the Democratic candidate who stands up before the American people at the next election and advocates the league as it now stands.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what I suggested. Then the question will be between the covenant without reservations and the covenant with the Lodge reservations.

Mr. BORAH. I venture to say the Senator's party will not have a candidate for President advocating a league without reservations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am inclined to believe the Senator is correct about that, which emphasizes the point I made, that the only way there can be presented to the people the issue which he desires to debate before them is to introduce in the platform of his party a plank denouncing the league, if the treaty is not ratified in the meanwhile, or declaring that notice should forthwith be given of withdrawal.

Mr. BORAH. The corrective influence of public opinion has its effect even upon a candidate for the Presidency. I remember that in the last campaign the convention had hardly closed until the candidate for President upon the Republican ticket felt under the necessity of writing a new platform. He had heard from some people from whom he had not heard in the convention. I am perfectly willing to take my chances in the next campaign regardless of what may be said at those conventions on the proposition that the question will be fought out before the American people as to whether we shall go into the league at all or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In order that I may make entirely plain what doubtless is entirely plain to the Senator from Montana, I think it is necessary only to call to his attention, and to the attention of the Senate, the provisions of article 26 of the covenant in order that he may realize, just as I thought I realized when I read the utterances of ex-Senator Root, of New York, the utter fallacy of the suggestion of the plan he proposed last night to the Republican convention in New York. Will the Senator pardon me if I occupy his time to that extent?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator will recall Mr. Root's denunciation of article 10, a denunciation as vitriolic and more forceful perhaps than that of the most implacable foe of article 10 upon this floor. The Senator will recall that he said after that denunciation that this league represented no rule of right but merely a rule of expediency. I do not quote exactly, but the substance of what he said. Of course if it does not deal with a rule of right, no right-thinking American would want to join it. But then he says, "Join, but the instant you elect a Republican President, on the 5th of March, re-form your league, rewrite it, transmute it into what it is not to-day, and into what it is not made even by reservations." Now, reform it, amend it, transmute it, how? Under article 26, the only method in the league covenant, and article 26 provides:

> Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the members of the league whose representatives compose the council and by a majority of the members of the league whose representatives compose the assembly.

That is, your council must unanimously recommend and approve your amendment. What chance would there be after you enter this thing so denounced by Mr. Root to transmute it, reform it, and amend it on the 5th day of March, 1921?

Of course, the Senator from Montana will answer, "No chance at all." Therefore I say the advice of Mr. Root is like the advice of some distinguished gentlemen in Europe—"get into this league, pull America into it, and once you are in you never are going to get out except by the possibility of your right of withdrawal under your Lodge reservation." You will be in it, you can not amend it, you can not transmute it, you can not re-form it. You are there and you stay under the direction and under the control and under the tutelage and under the command of European and Asiatic diplomacy. I say, therefore, that ex-Senator Root is wrong in what he suggests. I do not follow him, intellectually or otherwise, as a leader, I will say to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. In describing the method of amendment, the Senator from California has stated that those amendments have to be agreed to by the members of the league, not by the representatives of the league, but by members of the league, by the Governments.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; which makes it all the more difficult.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly; it makes it practically impossible.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It makes it practically impossible to amend the league. Ex-Senator Root in the last analysis says: "Go into a thing that is wrong, go into a thing that does not deal with a rule of right at all, go into a thing that does a wrong, that almost commits a crime against your country, and on the 5th of March, 1921, amend it," when you can not amend it at all.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. I should like to say a word as to what I understand to be Mr. Root's position as outlined in his letter to Chairman Hays and in his letter to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and in his New York address.

Mr. Root has always favored the league with reservations. Mr. Root's objection to the league lay in the line of compulsory arbitration instead of voluntary arbitration. Mr. Root's position was that the purpose of the league is to prevent war. The purpose of the league therefore is to settle by arbitration the causes or the disputes which lead to war. Mr. Root says that three-quarters of the disputes which lead to war are the subject of arbitration, are justiciable and not political.

Mr. Root's objection was that the covenant permitted a nation to choose whether a dispute was the subject of arbitration or was not the subject of arbitration; hence that nation could say that the dispute was not a subject of arbitration, and would, therefore, leave it to the council for investigation and report.

Now, the objection to the council, as I understand, according to Mr. Root's view, is that the council is not a judicial body; that it would decide questions according to expediency; and hence that the league as now framed would permit all questions of dispute to be determined not by a judicial tribunal but by the council and upon grounds of expediency.

Mr. Root would have had a provision in the covenant that all matters in dispute which were justiciable must be submitted to a court to decide. He would determine by law what disputes were justiciable and what were not justiciable. The covenant as it now stands enumerates the disputes that are justiciable, but it does not oblige the nation to submit any dispute to a court for final judicial determination. That was Mr. Root's fundamental objection to the league. He would start where the second Hague tribunal left off, and where he did a great work in framing an international judicial court, and he would have an international judicial court created where three-quarters of the disputes must be settled finally by an international judicial tribunal, therefore leaving perhaps one-quarter of the disputes—most dangerous disputes though they may be, political issues—to be determined or to be investigated and passed upon by the council.

Mr. Root has always indorsed this league, with reservations guarding the Monroe doctrine and American interests, but he would have amended it so that we should have an international judicial tribunal which would finally determine, as a matter of law and public right, disputes between nations, instead of having those disputes referred to the council for investigation and report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did he not also at one time advise breaking the heart of the world by striking out article 10 entirely?

Mr. COLT. Mr. Root, in his letter to Mr. Hays, was in favor of reaining article 10 for the period of five years. Why? Because he thought that in this World War we had upset the world, and that the responsibility should fall upon the United States, for a few years at least, to protect the territorial boundaries and political independence of nations as settled by the peace conference. Upon further reflection, two or three months afterwards, he reached the conclusion—which I believe is the conclusion of the American people and of almost everyone who has reflected upon the subject—that we should assume no contractual obligations under article 10 to preserve the territorial boundaries or political independence of the members of the league against external aggression.

Mr. Root says that the league is fundamentally to settle disputes by law and not by force, that article 10 does not properly belong in the covenant, and that it imposes a responsibility which the United States should not assume by way of contract.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] precipitate a controversy between himself and the distinguished ex-Senator from the State of New York rather than between the Senator from California and myself; but I feel quite at liberty to say that in my opinion there is no serious obstacle to securing, in the manner provided in the covenant, the amendment which Mr. Root contemplates seeking. His position has been very accurately stated by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. What Mr. Root desires is some amendment which will provide for the establishment of an international court and for fixing the rules of international law by which it shall be guided. I have no doubt that unanimity even can be secured for amendments of that character. To elucidate his hopes, I read from his letter to Mr. Hays, as follows:

> The first change which I should make in this agreement accordingly would be to give effectiveness to the judicial settlement of international disputes——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry? I simply wish to know from what the Senator is reading.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read from Mr. Root's letter to Mr. Hays.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is the original letter where he favored article 10?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; it is the original letter to Mr. Hays.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is where he favored article 10?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What I read has nothing to do with article 10, but he did favor the retention of article 10, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], for a period of five years. I am trying to indicate exactly the character of amendment which Mr. Root expects to accomplish by the conference which he contemplates shall be called after a Republican President is inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1921. He says:

> The first change which I should make in this agreement accordingly would be to give effectiveness to the judicial settlement of international disputes upon questions of right—upon justiciable or judicial questions—by making the arbitration of such questions obligatory under the system established by The Hague conference, or before the proposed court of arbitral justice, or, if the parties prefer in any particular case, before some specially constituted tribunal; putting the whole world upon the same footing in that respect that has been created between the United States and practically every nation now represented in Paris, by means of the special treaties which we have made with them. The term "justiciable questions" should be carefully defined, so as to exclude all questions of policy, and to describe the same kind of questions the Supreme Court of the United States has been deciding for more than a century.
> When that is done, the reference to arbitration in article 12 will have some force and effect instead of being as it is now a mere idle form.
> The second change which I think should be made is to provide for a general conference followed by regular conferences at stated intervals to discuss, agree upon, and state in authentic form the rules of international law, so that the development of law may go on, and arbitral tribunals may have continually a more perfect system of rules of right conduct to apply in their decisions.

That very clearly discloses the character of work that Mr. Root desires to confide to this new conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no desire to indulge in any controversy with ex-Senator Root or anybody else other than that which I have suggested in my article of last evening in the newspapers, but in the interest of historical accuracy I desire to repeat that the letter which has just been read by the Senator from Montana was substantially the first utterance of Mr. Root upon this question. In his first letter, Mr. Root substantially approved of article 10, with the right of withdrawal from that article after, I think, a period of five years. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is my recollection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In the second letter that Mr. Root wrote, which is dated June 19, 1919, and addressed to Senator LODGE, we find, however, that his views concerning article 10 materially changed. In that letter he said:

> You can, however, put into the resolution of consent a reservation refusing to agree to article 10, and I think you should do so.

Then, in his statement night before last, in relation to article 10, we find he said:

> The reservations adopted by the Senate remedy, so far as the United States is concerned, the chief objections to the treaty. They prevent our entrance into the League of Nations from being an abandonment of the Monroe doctrine, with irreparable injury to the United States and no benefit to the rest of the world. Especially important is it that they prevent the incredible mistake of article 10.

These varying expressions make Mr. Root's views neither conclusive nor persuasive with me.

Mr. WALSH, of Montana. Mr. President, I conclude by calling attention to the fact that Mr. Root very accurately foreshadowed the resolution which was adopted by the Republican convention of the State of New York on the subject of the treaty. That resolution provides:

> We favor the immediate ratification of the pending treaty of peace with such distinct reservations and declarations as shall make it clear to all the world that the United States retains its unconditional rights to withdraw from the League of Nations on proper notice.

Then follows a general description of the other provisions of the so-called Lodge reservations. I emphasize that apparently there is going to be no question presented to the people of the United States at the next election as to whether we shall ratify the treaty or shall not ratify the treaty. Apparently this issue, should the present attempt to secure the approval of the Senate fail, is to be, Shall we ratify the treaty with the Lodge reservations, or shall we ratify the treaty without the reservations, or with the Hitchcock interpretative reservations?

Mr. President, I want to add that there is another plank in the New York platform which has some relevancy to the matter upon which I addressed the Senate this morning, namely, the investigation by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate of the Federal Trade Commission. Apparently that body is not in high favor with the Republican organization of the State of New York. Of it the platform says:

> We charge that the Federal Trade Commission as at present constituted has dellberately prostituted its proper function. It has persecuted trade instead of promoting trade.

It is not altogether clear, Mr. President, whether that is intended as a denunciation of the law under which the Federal Trade Commission was organized or whether it is simply a denunciation of the personnel of the commission, to be reformed, of course, when a Republican President has the power of appointing its members. I content myself with the remark that if it is a denunciation of the law, it is the only law, so far as I know, passed during seven years of Democratic administration that as yet has met with the disapprobation of any gathering of Republicans, a record that is, perhaps, without a parallel in the history of the Republic.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is exceedingly interesting to contemplate the possible platforms that might be developed for candidates and parties out of the covenant of the League of Nations, but I am more interested in getting a vote on the reservations than I am in discussing possible party platforms.

As to the reservations now before the Senate, I cordially approve of the provision that leaves it to the two Houses, and a majority of each, to declare that we shall exercise our privilege of withdrawing from the league. I am not particular about giving the President the power also, though I am very particular about not allowing the President to veto the action of a majority of the two Houses of Congress and force us to obtain a two-thirds vote in order to give the requisite notice. I am perfectly willing for the President also to have the right, because, as this is a plunge into the unknown, I do not object to facilities for getting out if any well-established authority or high official of real responsibility wishes to take us out.

However, I discussed this subject when it was previously under consideration. I have no doubt about the constitutionality of the provision that permits us to withdraw by the action of a majority of each House. I discussed that question last November, and shall not now repeat what I then said in support of the constitutionality of a similar provision. I am more interested in reaching a vote on the pending reservation, and however pleasant it would be for me to enter into a constitutional discussion on the subject, I simply cite what I once before said instead of repeating it.

I hope we may come to a vote, and, unless some Senator wishes to move to strike out the privilege to the President of giving a notice, I hope we shall adopt the proposed reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to reservation No. 1.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move to amend the original text so as to strike out the word "concurrent" and to insert the word "joint," so that it will read:

> Notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my amendment to the reservation is pending, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment to the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But, Mr. President, as I understand the rules of the Senate, in all cases of a motion to strike out and insert——

Mr. LODGE. My motion is not a motion to strike out and insert, but is a motion to amend.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a motion to strike out "a concurrent resolution" and insert certain other words. It appears in the form of a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a motion to strike out and insert, for it leaves the whole text, except for a few words, practically untouched.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator proposes to strike out the words "a concurrent resolution of the" and to insert the words "the President or by," and also to strike out the words "of the United States" and insert "alone whenever a majority of both Houses may deem it necessary." That is clearly a motion to strike out and insert, and under Rule XVIII——

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I know what the rule is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is perfectly competent to perfect the original text before the motion to strike out and insert is voted upon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a motion to strike out and insert would cover the whole reservation. The Senator is not trying to perfect my amendment nor is he trying to perfect the text; he is offering an entirely independent amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that when the yeas and nays have been ordered upon a particular question a further amendment is not in order unless the order for the yeas and nays is vacated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not aware that the yeas and nays have been ordered; I have not so understood; but I trust the Senator from Massachusetts will not prevent, by any parliamentary ruling, a fair opportunity to vote upon this amendment. I have proceeded on the theory that this question would be subject to the same rules as any matter before the Senate, so that when a motion is made to strike out and insert Senators would be privileged to perfect the original text or to amend the matter proposed to be inserted. I can not very well——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator's proposition is to substitute the word "joint" for the words "the President or by Congress alone whenever a majority of both Houses may deem it necessary."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; my motion is to substitute the word "joint" for the word "concurrent" in the original text.

That which I have read is my amendment.

I am proceeding on the theory, Mr. President, that the Senator has moved to strike out certain words and insert others; and what I want to do, before that is voted on, is to secure the opportunity to vote upon perfecting the original text. Then, if that is defeated, the question will naturally recur upon the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the Senator's amendment to strike out the word "concurrent" and insert the word "joint" does not touch my amendment at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If my motion should be defeated, the Senator's amendment would come up as a matter of course.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely; but I do not think the Senator's amendment is a perfecting amendment. I am not proposing to strike out the whole of the reservation; I am only proposing to strike out certain words.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is moving to strike out certain words. Before those words are stricken out, it seems to me that, under the practice of the Senate, we are entitled to have voted upon a motion to perfect the original text. This is a report of a committee; and how else can we have the opportunity of getting before the Senate a vote upon this proposition?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course what I want is a vote on my amendment. If that is voted down, it will be open to the Senator to make his motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But if it should not be voted down we will have no way in which we can go on record upon this proposition. It has been the quite invariable custom here in the Senate, where a motion to strike out and insert is made, to give the privilege of perfecting the original text or of perfecting the pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I know that; but I do not think that this is that case. I do not think this case is covered by that practice. I shall not, however, make any objection if the Senator subsequently wishes to move to insert the word "joint."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it would be out of order for me to do that after the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted. I think it would be out of order to offer any amendment to it.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection. I do not want to prevent any vote on a mere technicality. I do not think this is a technicality. I think we ought to have a vote on both amendments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I ask unanimous consent that we first vote upon the question of inserting the word "joint" in place of the word "concurrent" in the original text.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I insist upon my proposition that we are entitled to an opportunity to present amendments to the original text before the motion to strike out and insert is put; and I cite the President pro tempore to the last part of Rule XVIII, which provides that—

> Motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have here a reference to a precedent upon the point made by the Chair that the amendment is not in order, the yeas and nays having been ordered. I interpret this precedent to permit the submission of any amendment going to perfect the text which the amendment proposes to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised as to the form in which the amendment has been presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, not having been in the chair at the time his amendment was proposed. The Chair finds that the proposal by the Senator from Massachusetts is as follows:

> Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 1 so that it will read as follows.

Then there follows the entire reservation.

The Senator from Nebraska proposes now to strike out the word "concurrent" and substitute for it the word "joint." In the opinion of the Chair, it is an amendment proposing to perfect the text, and is therefore in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to strike out the word "concurrent" and insert the word "joint."

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	King	Nugent
Ball	France	Knox	Overman
Brandegee	Gay	Lenroot	Page
Capper	Henderson	Lodge	Poindexter
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	McKellar	Robinson
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	McNary	Sheppard
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Simmons
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smoot
Curtis	Kellogg	Nelson	Thomas
Dial	Kenyon	New	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Keyes	Norris	Warren

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Members.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. HALE, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KENDRICKS, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. TRAMMELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. McLEAN, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. EDGE, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. WATSON, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. PHELAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as appears on page 8803 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 19, 1919, the Senate rejected the resolution of ratification offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to ratify the treaty as it stood, without any reservations or amendments, by a vote of 38 to 53, every Democrat who voted voting for it except the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and one Republican voting for it, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. On the resolution of ratification proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the resolution of ratification was rejected by a vote of 39 to 55; so that the attempt to ratify the treaty was rejected by the Senate both with reservations and without them.

If that treaty was not rejected, it never can be rejected. Is it so that any treaty that is presented here must be ratified, whether two-thirds of the Senate agree to it or not? How can the Senate reject a treaty if it has not rejected that treaty?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] appeared here a few days ago and, although he was not in the vote of the House, moved to reconsider the action of the Senate. A point of order was made that he was not in the vote of the House, and therefore was ineligible to make the motion, and the point of order was overruled by the Chair, although it is a clear rule of parliamentary law. Now we are dealing with this matter, if we are dealing with it at all, in a totally irregular and unwarranted way. The treaty stood rejected. We can only act on a treaty by resolution. All sorts of resolutions to ratify the treaty were voted down. The Chair announced in each case that they had been rejected for lack of a two-thirds vote. The Senator from Massachusetts announced to the Senate that the treaty was dead. Before that he notified the Democrats that if they voted against his reservations the treaty was dead. The Democrats to whom I have referred received a letter from the President stating that the reservations adopted by the Senate nullified the treaty and advised them to kill it, which they did. It seems that the only thing that does not stay dead when it is dead is a treaty, especially if it is to involve the United States in Europe, Asia, and Africa against the will of the people of the United States. It has more lives than a cat.

Mr. President, the Senate, after months of debate in a dignified way and in a constitutional way, adopted what are known as the Lodge reservations. They were the reservations agreed upon and recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], was instructed by the committee to report them and to advocate them. He did so; and the Senate agreed with him and with the committee and made them its action. Then, under the rule of the Senate, they were incorporated in the resolution of ratification, and the resolution was rejected. That action became the action of the Senate of the United States in the eyes of all the world. Every foreign power took notice of it. All the world knew that the United States Senate had determined upon its line of policy. Lord Grey, who had been here looking over the situation for several months, went home and wrote a letter to the London Times in which he stated that any European power that dealt with the United States hereafter was put upon notice that it must deal with it upon the terms prescribed by the Senate of the United States in those Lodge reservations. They were the solemn, deliberate announcement by this body of the foreign policy of the United States. They were the conditions upon which we were to do business with Europe; and everybody knows they are the conditions upon which Europe will have to transact business with us if we enter any such thing as this proposed League of Nations.

Now, without any further action of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Massachusetts, having under the ruling of the Chair gotten this matter before the Senate again, proceeds to offer amendments—not the committee amendments—proceeds to try to modify the well-considered and deliberate action of the Senate taken by a majority vote after due debate upon each and every reservation. I do not know how many more modifications there are. If the Senate believed in those reservations then, why does it not stand for them now? Are we going to get anywhere by proceeding to pull to pieces the reservations that the Senate adopted, and that have been taken notice of by Europe, and that they say they are ready to accept? If we believe in them, and they are ready to accept them, what is all this talk about compromising worth? What is all this talk about compromise anyway? Whom are we compromising with but with ourselves? Is anybody talking about the President compromising? Not on your life! He stands pat. He, at least, knows his mind. He probably has some principle about his attitude. He has some conviction about it. He wrote a letter to be read at the Jackson Day dinner, saying that he would not accept these reservations. Will the Senate stand by its own action?

If the President should come to the Senate, his partner in the treaty-making business, and say, "Here, we differ about this thing; let us compromise it," that would be one thing. That has not happened, and will not happen. But here a majority of the Senate, having expressed its will in a constitutional manner, is approached by the minority of the Senate and told, "Here, we have been beaten about this thing. Now, let us compromise. You give us half of what you won." What is the quid pro quo? Where does the compromise come in?

I have a fight with a fellow as to the ownership and possession of a box of oranges, and I thrash him, and I am walking away with my box of oranges, and the loser comes up to me and says, "I will compromise with you for half of them." I may be obtuse, Mr. President, but I have some sort of Yankee notion about trading, and I do not see what I get out of that kind of a trade.

Here we are frittering away time about a lot of irrelevant and immaterial little verbal modifications of some very essential things. Everybody knows that they do not amount to anything except to render the Senate ridiculous if it proceeds to strike out and insert words merely for the purpose of finding synonyms for the words already in the reservations. Everybody can take these 14 reservations and express them in different forms of words. There is not one of them but that any Senator on this floor can twist around and re-form so as to mean exactly the same thing, and use some different words in doing so. Has it come to that, that the Senate wants to present that kind of a spectacle to the world? Everybody knows that this is nothing but leather and prunella. It is nothing but a vain performance and a sham. Somebody is trying to commit a fraud, to perpetrate a deception upon somebody. That is all there is to it.

Everybody knows that it does not make any difference how many different words you use to express the same idea, or how much you change the great majority of these reservations in minor details. There are two cruxes in this situation, and everybody admits that they will not be changed. We are not going to sell the Monroe doctrine to Europe, nor to abandon it, and we are not going to assume one iota of the obligations of article 10—not a scintilla. You may as well face that right now. I suppose it is thought to be good strategy to make as many changes as possible in these sine qua nons and these reservations in the hope that the Senate will get in a changing mood and will not know when to stop. Well, they will know all right, Mr. President. The Senate may not be such an intelligent body as it used to be, but I take the liberty of prophesying that it will know when a change is proposed in the substance of article 10.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who has been perfectly frank about this matter, so far as I know, in his utterances of what went on in this unofficial tentative compromising assembly which was engineered and the proceedings of which were kept secret, stated openly to the newspapers right straight along that you could not fool him, that there had to be a real substantial concession in the reservation to article 10, or else there would be no agreement whatever to ratify the treaty. I think very likely he is right.

Are we going to make a real substantial concession in the reservation to article 10? No; we are not, and everybody knows it. The Senator from Nebraska knows it. Why prolong this autopsy, Mr. President? It can not be for the mere physical delight of pawing over the remains. We might just as well order the disinfectant now and get this ghastly sight out of the way. Everybody knows that we are not going to put this country into this foreign League of Nations except with the reservations that the Senate put on it. If the advocates of the ratification of the treaty want to accept those reservations they can accept them, and if they are afraid of the responsibility of saving their country they can put it up to the President. If he thinks he wants to strangle his own child and has the courage to do it, he can refuse to file the instrument of ratification. Everybody will then know exactly who did it. On the contrary, if he wants to accept the Lodge reservations he can have a chance to do so.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, the reservations that the Senate has already adopted are good enough for me. I voted for them once. I shall vote for them again if I have a chance.

The only inconsistency or apparent inconsistency in which I find myself on the first proposed compromise modification to the irreducible minimum is that it happens to be one that will enable us to get out of this thing more easily if we are ever trapped into it, and therefore I have a certain sort of respect for it and a certain desire to vote for it. I would vote to give the doorkeeper the right to withdraw us from the league. So I rather dislike to vote against this because it gives more people the right to get us out if we ever should get in, but I feel that it would not be consistent with my attitude as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations that voted for the reservations as they stand, which the Senate has made its own by its action, and having succeeded in persuading the Senate that what the Foreign Relations Committee recommended to it was wise and good, I do not want to proceed to tear it down now. This process, if it is to go on, must be continued by others than myself. Therefore I for one shall vote against any proposed modification put forward under the fraudulent name of a compromise.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had something to do with the drafting of these reservations. I voted for them and I voted to ratify with them. I think I am as much interested in them and in their preservation, as far as the personal part of it goes, as almost anyone.

In stating what has happened parliamentarily the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] omitted one incident, and that was the suspension of Rule XIII. The treaty was rejected by the Senate both without any reservations and with the reservations that happen to bear my name. Unfortunately we did not have a majority which would have enabled us to send that action of the Senate to the President. The treaty remained here.

Last November, on the 18th, it was stated by me that if there were any modifications which the other side desired to propose we should be glad to receive them if they were presented before the next day when the vote was to come. None were presented and we went to the vote.

After Congress came together again I stated more than once that if the minority on the reservations desired to present modifications, of course we would listen to them and consider them. I said that in the Senate and I said it in the press. Some weeks passed and finally I was asked by a Democratic Senator to meet certain other Democratic Senators and discuss modifications which they wished to suggest, and I and three other Republican Senators met with them.

Mr. President, I did not feel then and I do not feel now that I would have been justified either in my own opinion or in the opinion of the country if I had simply slammed the door in the face of the Senators who desired to suggest modifications and had stated that we would not even listen to them. We did listen to them. We talked the propositions over for several days. I took occasion to make a public statement that we were ready to make changes in phraseology, but that there were certain questions of principle on which there could be no change, and to that position I at least have adhered.

The country I believe desired action. The country, I also believe, by a very overwhelming majority, practically almost unanimously, were against the ratification of the treaty without reservations, and by an overwhelming majority were in favor of ratifying the treaty with reservations.

My endeavor was, as I have sought all along, to ratify the treaty with reservations that I considered would protect the United States. To make another effort in that direction I therefore took the only course which was open to me to bring the treaty again before the Senate. The treaty was still lying here. I moved to suspend Rule XIII. By suspending that rule against reconsideration it was then open to me to move to reconsider the last vote taken. That was the vote on the motion which I made to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider.

I made the motion to reconsider. I was entitled to make it because I voted with the prevailing side; and I also was entitled to make it because Rule XIII had been suspended—the whole rule. If Senators will take the trouble to read that rule they will see that it suspends everything connected with the rule relating to reconsideration. In that way I brought the treaty back and I believe I did it correctly and in a parliamentary way.

The bipartisan conference, as it was called, broke off on the two reservations comprising the Monroe doctrine and article 10, on which we declined to make any change involving a principle, and so far as the bipartisan conference goes that remains now as it did then.

Then on my own responsibility, not in behalf of the committee, I printed and offered certain changes which I proposed in the reservations as they stood. Most of those changes are changes of phraseology. Three of them are changes which I think ought to have been made in the reservations originally. Personally I was never satisfied with the manner in which we provided for the assent of other powers in what is known as the preamble, but it is really the resolving resolution.

I also thought that article 14 needed perfecting; that it was deficient. I also felt that the first reservation as it stood did not carry out the intention of the Senate when it put it on by a majority vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When the Senator refers to article 14 he means reservation 14?

Mr. LODGE. I meant reservation 14. I thank the Senator.

Those are substantive changes which I should have liked to have made on the 19th of November if I had had the opportunity. The others were changes in phraseology; they seemed to me unimportant. I have mentioned the three that seemed important. The others seemed to me unimportant, but if they would serve by a simple change of phraseology to enable us to ratify the treaty in the Senate and put the responsibility for further action upon where it belongs I was ready to do it.

Mr. President, the changes which I have proposed are before the Senate. I think I am as much attached to them even as those who voted against them when it came to the question of ratification. I think I am as desirous of keeping them as they are. They have acquired a sanctity with some of my friends which they did not have, I think, until after the 19th of November. But there they are. If they will help us to ratify the treaty, I am willing to support them, but further I can not go. I can never assent to any change in principle in the two reservations relating to the Monroe doctrine and article 10. The purpose of article 10 is to free the United States from any obligation whatever of any name or nature, and if it is less than that—I can only speak for myself—I can not vote for it. I say the same of the Monroe doctrine. But if by adopting the other reservations which are proposed, some of which I regard as improvements, we can secure a two-thirds vote of the Senate, I should be glad to do it and get it out of the way.

It is going to be in the campaign, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said yesterday. No matter what we do, we are not going to take it out of the campaign. How idle it is to think that it is coming out of the campaign. Here is the convention of the great State of New York which has met and put in elaborate statements in regard to it. That will be the position of the Republican Party when it meets in Chicago, in my judgment. We are not going to get it out of the campaign. I should like to have the Senate dispose of it if I can. If I can not, if Senators on the other side are going to insist that there shall be a substantial change in article 10 or a substantial change on the Monroe doctrine, we can save the time of the Senate by settling that now and dropping it, and letting it lie here as it has lain before, in a state of semianimation.

That, Mr. President, has been what I have tried to do, and tried honestly to do, and I am ready to go on and make the effort, but I think it only fair to the country and to the Senate to have it understood that the votes are not here to ratify the treaty with substantial changes in article 10 and on the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, from my viewpoint the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has political sins for which he should be called to answer, but his manful and successful attempt to bring the peace treaty again before the Senate is not a political sin for which he will have to answer. He acted the part of the statesman in trying to bring the treaty to life.

I am supposed to be a politician; and, indeed, I am, or I would not be here. I say to my brother Senators that when you lose the art of being a politician you will also lose your seat in the Senate.

This is a political Republic, governed by political parties. The Constitution when framed made no reference to political parties, but they grew and developed, and they will exist here because of the very logic of events and the necessity of the occasions. Men die; they pass away; their voices are silenced; but a vital principle should live on, and it can only be galvanized into an actuality by a political party. The individual does not live long enough; he has not the strength to address the necessary people in the course of an ordinary lifetime to bring about a reform in a government of this extent except through a political party.

I have heard considerable animadversion from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], my learned friend to whom I always listen with delight, upon men who change their minds. I hold no brief for the President of the United States. He is well able to take care of himself. He has not forced me into supporting the treaty; he has forced nobody; but I respectfully assert that he is the only man in the United States that can not change his mind on this treaty until we act. He put his name, in the presence of his fellow workers, to a solemn treaty. How ridiculous, how foolish, for him now to begin "dickering" and bargaining with the Senate and to say, "Make certain changes and I will try to compromise with our allies."

The President of the United States, I repeat, as I said on the 23d of January, will be the most delighted individual that ever sat in the presidential chair when we announce to him that we are able to do something on this treaty without asking his nod of approval. Men respect you in this world only in so far as you respect yourself. The President did his duty as he saw it, and I believe no more conscientious man ever existed in any particular work than he was when he was doing that duty. He believed what he was doing was right. Let the Senate, therefore, express itself and ratify the treaty in some form so that he may have a chance again to make some diplomatic stroke that will begin to let our country liquidate the Great War.

Change our minds? Certainly we change our minds. Are we going to remain static and fixed in spite of everything? "If we restrain our necessary action for fear of being laughed at, or carped at, we shall take root here where we sit or sit staid statues only."

I knew a man, one of the greatest men the Southwest ever produced, who boasted throughout the Pacific coast that he never changed his mind. He took a journey into the mountains. He was a botanist and naturalist. On that journey he discovered on the mountain top a red berry which he ate, a cool, refreshing, delicious, sweet berry. He announced he was going to have the bushes transplanted to the valley where he lived and declared he would send some samples to his friends that they might partake of that cool, sweet, refreshing, delicious berry. Inside of four hours he was prostrate upon a bed of pain. Physicians were sent for, a trained nurse was sent for, and for two weeks that man who boasted that he never changed his mind hovered between life and death from the effects of that berry so sweet and delicious to the taste. Through the efforts of his physicians he finally regained his strength.

He changed his mind about the berry, Mr. President. He concluded that he would not advise his friends to eat of it; that he would not ask them to grow it upon their own farms and vineyards for their own use; but he made another discovery, for he found that the use of this berry had relieved him of a disease which for 20 years had fastened itself upon him, and that that berry was a specific for that disease. So he changed his mind about the berry the second time, Mr. President, and he did not ask that the berry be entirely banished from Pharmacopœia, but asked that the berry be retained therein. So here in the Senate and in all departments of life we change our minds when facts are presented justifying such action. We should act upon the situation as it presents itself to our views to-day.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I want to ask the Senator if he has been eating any of those berries? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. I prefer to regale myself on the oranges which the Senator from Connecticut did not get. If I do eat a berry and find that it is poisonous, I change my mind. If I later find that it is a medicine, I again change my mind. Therefore I commend the attitude of the Senator from Massachusetts, who sought again to bring the treaty before the Senate. Sir Oliver Lodge avers that he can bring back departed spirits, and I presume there is many a dry soul who wishes that he could [laughter]—and we should like to see Sir HENRY CABOT LODGE call the departed spirit of this treaty, because the American people are not now paying attention to politics. Talk candidates to them, and you get nowhere; talk principles, and audiences will listen.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator find any analogy between the case of the Senator from Massachusetts, in reviving this treaty, and the proceedings of the other Mr. Lodge in summoning the spirits of the departed back to earth?

Mr. ASHURST. There may not be much analogy, and it may be that the work of one is as futile as that of the other, but I regard the attitude of Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE as much more commendable than that of Sir Oliver Lodge, because the Senator at least is within the domain of possibilities.

But now, Mr. President, abandoning facetiousness, let me say too many men throughout this country to-day are talking about their rights and not enough men are talking about duties; too many people are trying to make a fortune and not enough are trying to do their duty to their country.

Let me merely read some figures, which I put into the RECORD in January, about what the French people have done. They have, in round numbers, but one-third of the population of the United States. Their battle losses, as compared to ours, were enormous. Within one year after the armistice France filled in 74,000,000 cubic yards of excavated earth; France built 900 miles of double-track road that had been destroyed and blown up during the war; France rebuilt 90 per cent of her single-track road, or over 500 miles that had been blown up during the war; France had 1,100 bridges and tunnels destroyed during the war, and she has rebuilt 550 of them within a year after the armistice. She has built 60,000 stone houses and has 96,000 more in the process of reconstruction. She had 500,000 destroyed during the war. I have here other figures which I shall not take the trouble just now to read. France has demonstrated a resiliency, a bravery, and a courage in the arts of peace just as she demonstrated bravery and resiliency and courage in the war that were beyond the range of eulogy.

But here this great Senate is not able to ratify any kind of a peace treaty, because a large number of Senators, forsooth, want to ratify it only in the precise way the President thinks it should be ratified, and a large number of other Senators—"irreconcilables," so called—want no treaty at all. What are the facts? Eighty Senators want a treaty. There were roll calls which demonstrated on the 19th of last November that only 15 Senators opposed any kind of ratification. There were 38 Senators who were in favor of an unconditional ratification; that is, without amendments or reservations; there were 39 Senators who voted for the ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations; and, upon a reconsideration, 41 Senators voted for the ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations; and 41 Senators voted for the ratification of the treaty with the Hitchcock reservations.

I desire now to salute and pay my tribute of respect to the leader on this side of the Chamber, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. He has with courage and prudence led this side. Let him now lead further and ask his fellow Democrats to vote their convictions and not the White House convictions. We shall then have a treaty ratified in 50 hours.

The White House! No man has a greater veneration for the work of Woodrow Wilson than have I. Senators, when we have left these seats forever, when the record of our time is gathered into history's golden urn and our voices are silent, when we are but forgotten dust, Woodrow Wilson's name will shine resplendently among the moral leaders of the world; he will go down into history as a moral leader whether his league fails or functions. Let us in these stirring times do something to convince the people that we also are attempting to be leaders and Senators worthy of a great Republic by not listening to what the White House says. We were not sworn to come here and, in the case of a treaty, do what the White House says. I am as good a Democrat as ever sat here, but I do not consider that it is a part and province of my Democratic duty to vote for the ratification of a treaty only when the White House says so. I repeat, if we will vote our own convictions instead of Woodrow Wilson's convictions, we shall soon convince the people that we can meet responsibilities.

The Senator from Massachusetts takes an attitude that is unbecoming to him; he serves notice that with the Lodge resolutions is the way in which the treaty must be ratified. Does he also want to join the irreconcilables? Are we to have a White House irreconcilable and a Lodge irreconcilable and a set of irreconcilables fifteen in number?

There will be enough irreconcilables next election day. Senators keep talking about the elections. Are we so stupid and bereft of knowledge that we have forgotten that the way to win elections is to do our duty; that the way to win esteem is to do our duty? You can not convince the people that the Senate has done its duty when we remember that this treaty has been here since about the 10th or 12th day of July last.

Mr. Hoover is a man who, I think, will never be President. [Laughter.] He is a man whom I do not think my party will nominate, because he will not commit himself to either party; and no man is going to be President unless he is either a Democrat or a Republican. But let Mr. Hoover announce that he is a Republican and believes in the Republican Party, or let him announce that he is a Democrat and believes in the Democratic Party, and he will be the next President; not because he can write history, not because he has a pleasing personality, not because he is a politician, as I am and you are, but because he belongs to that rare and that valuable kind of men whose greatness is the arduous greatness of things done and not the greatness of things talked about. "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings"; meaning, of course, that any man who does the duty of the hour is the man who is made the king's servant.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. FRANCE. In the remark which the Senator just made was he referring to the reduction of the high cost of living by Mr. Hoover?

Mr. ASHURST. I will say that I have not agreed with Mr. Hoover in all of his views. I am not very enthusiastic about Mr. Hoover as a Democratic candidate for the Presidency, because I do not feel sure that I favor a food dispenser to sit and preside at the pie counter; but Mr. Hoover performed more intelligent and more constructive work in the way of food conservation during the recent war than any other individual in the United States or in Europe.

I feel it is the duty of the Senate to act. Some Senators rend the air with their shoutings when they find a split infinitive. I am not going to be afraid to act or recalcitrant because I find a split infinitive here or there. I want constructive action.

Senators on the other side are in charge of this Congress. You have not made a good record. You have not had a complete chance as yet, for the book is not closed. I have not so much to brag about myself, but your record is poor. What have you done for the private soldier? You have treated him like a Chinese gambler; you have done nothing. Where is the soldiers' homestead bill? Where is the bill appropriating $250,000,000 for building the irrigation projects of the West? Yes; $250,000,000 is a tremendous sum, but it is just the amount of money that the United States has saved by preventing the sale of the ex-German ships. I want that to go out to the reclamationists of the West.

I repeat, you have not made a good record, but the books are still open, and I warn you now that if you think you are going to carry the next election by a traduction of Woodrow Wilson you will be sadly disappointed. The way for political parties to win victories that are enduring, and the way for men to win victories that are worth the winning, is to do something for the common people of this country.

I have read to you what France has done. That showing means that France, with one-third of the population of this country, has done more work than we have done. Ponder upon that! France, with one-third of our population, has done more work than we have done. While we have talked, they have worked. I ask the leadership on the other side to bring out the bill, not appropriating but lending $250,000,000 to the great, wonderful West to reduce the high cost of living, and we in the Western States will pay it back in 10 years. Bring out a bill showing the private soldier that you have remembered his services with gratitude and that you have refuted the statement that Republics are ungrateful. Pass those bills before you begin to talk about leadership or capitalizing Wilson's mistakes if he has made any.

Mr. President, I should not consume so much time, but I never felt more earnest about a situation than I feel now. This great Sanhedrin, the Senate, should have disposed of the treaty in one month, but here the treaty is before us and we make no forward move. We should be keeping pace with the hour. When Senators go out and face audiences they will be utterly amazed, they will be utterly paralyzed, to find that the Senate has been traduced all over the country because of the fact that, although 80 of us want some kind of a treaty, we have been unable to agree. I "speak by the book" when I say that Woodrow Wilson will be a delighted individual when we send this treaty back to him ratified in some form. Mark that. I say I speak by the book. I do not mean by that I have been told by anybody at the White House that he will be delighted to see this treaty out of the way; but is there a Senator here who would deny my statement? The President will be delighted to see us act, to see us function; he will be delighted to know that we can act upon occasions.

Now, let us face a few facts as they exist. The treaty as it came from Versailles can not be ratified. Whether it should be ratified or not in that form is beside the question; it can not be ratified in that form. What is the duty of this side, therefore? The duty of this side is to vote for such reservations or changes as will bring about the ratification of the treaty. I conceive it, accordingly, to be my duty to vote for reservations or amendments that will bring about an early ratification of the treaty.

The great European war sprang from an ultimatum which was delivered to Serbia. It may be that history never repeats herself; but I see portentous things on the horizon. An ultimatum was again delivered to Jugo-Slavia, greater Serbia, the other day, in which she was told by the premiers of Great Britain, France, and Italy that the treaty of London would be enforced and that Italy would be supported. That may look like a small matter, but just so it also looked small about the 25th or 26th day of July, 1914, when the previous ultimatum was delivered to Serbia. Yet here we sit, and although certain Governments in Europe are again beginning to serve ultimatums on other Governments, and the very Government that was overrun and to which the ultimatum was served in 1914 is receiving another ultimatum, we are not moved to action; we see no reason to hurry in our duty; we see no reason to perform our functions; we think there is no occasion for action.

We still remain at war with Germany and make no forward move, sleepy, somnolent, thinking only of politics, thinking only of what political prestige this party or that party is going to get out of the treaty.

I agree with all the statements that have been made to the effect that the treaty can not be kept out of politics; that it is going to get into politics; that, indeed, it is in politics now. But we can a least do this: We can ratify it and send it to the President. Then our responsibility has ended, our duty has been performed.

Mr. President, I am going to end these remarks with a story that I once read. I have forgotten where I read it, but it seems apropos. I have been trying to recall whether it was Addison or Macaulay who told the story. I think it was Addison, but if I am wrong the Senator from the center of culture and estheticism, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], will correct me.

There was an upholsterer who kept a coach and servants, whose house furnished forth a good fare, and who was educating his family in accordance with the best traditions, but suddenly he conceived the idea that he could instruct people as to what ought to be done in Holland and what ought to be done in Prussia and what ought to be done in Russia, and he neglected his shop so completely, talking about what ought to be done in Holland and what ought to be done in Russia and in Prussia and in France, that his customers began to fall away. Still he lingered over his favorite theme of upholstering foreign nations, and instead of taking care of his own upholstering business in the way that he should, he insisted upon upholstering France, upholstering Prussia, and upholstering Russia. His customers continued to fall away, poor workmanship came out of his shop, and finally he found himself a bankrupt. The family coach and the family plate were sold; his eldest daughter, who was attending college, was required to come home; and his son was apprenticed out as an indentured servant to another man—all because he insisted upon upholstering Spain and Holland and Prussia and Russia and neglected his own affairs. Here we sit insisting upon upholstering Jugo-Slavia, insisting upon upholstering all of the foreign countries of the earth, and 110,000,000 of the best people on earth are entirely neglected by us. Let us begin now to take care of legislation for the American people and stop upholstering foreign nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on behalf of the committee, before the word "resolution," it is proposed to strike out "concurrent" and in lieu thereof to insert "joint," so that if amended it will read:

And notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that makes no change in the existing law. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife, and I have promised to take care of him during his absence. Therefore I must withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained by illness. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea" on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I find that I can transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and I do so and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I therefore transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I note that he is absent from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. KIRBY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], is absent on the business of the Senate; that is, he is a member of the committee investigating Mexican affairs.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Harrison	Kirby	Robinson
Chamberlain	Henderson	McKellar	Sheppard
Culberson	Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons
Fletcher	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Trammell
Gay	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Glass	Kendrick	Pittman
Harris	King	Ransdell

NAYS—38.

Ball	Fernald	Keyes	Poindexter
Borah	France	Knox	Shields
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Gore	Lodge	Smoot
Colt	Gronna	McLean	Spencer
Cummins	Hale	McNary	Townsend
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Moses	Warren
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Watson
Edge	Kellogg	New
Elkins	Kenyon	Norris

NOT VOTING—32.

Bankhead	McCormick	Pomerene	Sutherland
Beckham	McCumber	Reed	Swanson
Calder	Newberry	Sherman	Thomas
Dial	Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Underwood
Fall	Page	Smith, Md.	Wadsworth
Gerry	Penrose	Smith, S. C.	Walsh, Mass.
Harding	Phelan	Stanley	Williams
La Follette	Phipps	Sterling	Wolcott

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment to Mr. LODGE's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to reservation No. 1.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is Saturday evening, and we have nearly reached the hour of 5 o'clock. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the yeas seem to have it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call for a division.

On a division, the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to reservation No. 1, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will state the reservation as proposed to be amended.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended, the first reservation would read:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by the President or by Congress alone whenever a majority of both Houses may deem it necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. As he is absent, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I find that I can not make a transfer on this vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair that I made on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCNARY (when Mr. MCCUMBER'S name was called). The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I was requested by him to state that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. DIAL (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I make the same announcement with reference to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina], who is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. If my colleague were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as on the previous vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Owing to the absence of my pair, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). Making the same announcement as on the former vote and transferring my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I will let my vote stand.

Mr. PAGE entered the Chamber and voted in the affirmative.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] having voted, I withdraw the transfer of my pair to him and withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Edge	Kenyon	New
Ball	Elkins	Keyes	Page

So Mr. LODGE'S amendment to the committee reservation No. 1 was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs upon reservation No. 1 as reported by the committee. It will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the last roll call with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I previously made with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I find that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which I do. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. On this vote, by a transfer of pairs, he is paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If present, on this question the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I make the same announcement with reference to the pair of my colleague as on the previous vote. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—45.

Ashurst	Fernald	Keyes	Poindexter
Ball	Fletcher	Knox	Sherman

So the committee reservation No. 1 was agreed to, as follows:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate as in legislative session adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 23, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 21, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Teach us, dear Lord, the higher ideals and give us the courage to put them in the common daily duties of life.

We realize that theory, be it never so beautiful, is but rubbish if it does not inspire the soul to higher, nobler life. A creed is but the expression of man's conception. Religion is the life of God in the soul.

Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead Past bury its dead!
Act,—act in the living Present!
Heart within, and God o'erhead!

In the spirit of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ABSENCE OF A QUORUM.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a very important bill is to be taken up for consideration to-day. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish a quorum for the reading of the statement on the conference report on the railroad bill or after the statement is read?

Mr. GARD. I will withhold it until after it is read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. FRANCE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments" for the disposition of useless papers in the Labor Department.

RETURN OF THE RAILROADS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order to-day the conference report on the railroad bill is under consideration.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the report ought to be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The full bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has never been read in the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois agree that the leading titles be read, such as Title II, relating to reconstruction legislation, and Title III, as to labor, and section 422, relating to the so-called standard return in section 6?

Mr MANN of Illinois. Well, Mr. Speaker, that might be perfectly satisfactory, but this bill, which is the most important bill, probably, that this Congress will pass, has never been read in the House in the shape it is in. It seems to me that a matter of such importance to be voted upon ought to be read.

Mr. GARD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH]?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further a nend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"TITLE I.—DEFINITIONS.

"SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the 'transportation act, 1920.'

"SEC. 2. When used in this act—

"The term 'interstate commerce act' means the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended;

"The term 'commerce court act' means the act entitled 'An act to create a commerce court, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes,' approved June 18, 1910;

"The term 'Federal control act' means the act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918, as amended;

"The term 'Federal control' means the possession, use, control, and operation of railroads and systems of transportation, taken over or assumed by the President under section 1 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, or under the Federal control act; and

"The term 'commission' means the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"TITLE II.—TERMINATION OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 200. (a) Federal control shall terminate at 12.01 a. m., March 1, 1920; and the President shall then relinquish possession and control of all railroads and systems of transportation then under Federal control and cease the use and operation thereof.

"(b) Thereafter the President shall not have or exercise any of the powers conferred upon him by the Federal control act relating—

"(1) To the use or operation of railroads or systems of transportation;

"(2) To the control or supervision of the carriers owning or operating them, or of the business or affairs of such carriers;

"(3) To their rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices;

"(4) To the purchase, construction, or other acquisition of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, or coastwise waterways; or (except in pursuance of contracts or agreements entered into before the termination of Federal control) of terminals, motive power, cars, or equipment, on or in connection with any railroad or system of transportation;

"(5) To the utilization or operation of canals;

"(6) To the purchase of securities of carriers, except in pursuance of contracts or agreements entered into before the termination of Federal control, or as a necessary or proper incident to the adjustment, settlement, liquidation and winding up of matters arising out of Federal control; or

"(7) To the use for any of the purposes above stated (except in pursuance of contracts or agreements entered into before the termination of Federal control, and except as a necessary or proper incident to the winding up or settling of matters arising out of Federal control, and except as provided in section 202) of the revolving fund created by such act, or of any of the additions thereto made under such act, or by the act entitled 'An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for carrying out the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918,' approved June 30, 1919.

"(c) Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or limiting the power of the President in time of war (under section 7 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916) to take possession and assume control of any system of transportation and utilize the same.

"GOVERNMENT-OWNED BOATS ON INLAND WATERWAYS.

"SEC. 201. (a) On the termination of Federal control, as provided in section 200, all boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities, on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways (hereinafter in this section called transportation facilities') acquired by the United States in pursuance of the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Federal control act (except the transportation facilities constituting parts of railroads or transportaion systems over which Federal control was assumed) are transferred to the Secretary of War, who shall operate or cause to be operated such transportation facilities so that the lines of inland water transportation established by or through the President during Federal control shall be continued, and assume and carry out all contracts and agreements in relation thereto entered into by or through the President in pursuance of such paragraph prior to the time above fixed for such transfer. All payments under the terms of such contracts, and for claims arising out of the operation of such transportation facilities by or through the President prior to the termination of Federal control, shall be made out of moneys available under the provisions of this act for adjusting, settling, liquidating, and winding up matters arising out of or incident to Federal control. Moneys required for such payments shall, from time to time, be transferred to the Secretary of War as required for payment under the terms of such contracts.

"(b) All other payments after such transfer in connection with the construction, utilization, and operation of any such transportation facilities, whether completed or under construction, shall be made by the Secretary of War out of funds now or hereafter made available for that purpose.

"(c) The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, out of any moneys hereafter made available therefor, to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between the transportation facilities operated by him under this section and other carriers whether by rail or water, and to make loans for such purposes under such terms and conditions as he may determine to any State whose constitution prohibits the ownership of such terminal facilities by other than the State or a political subdivision thereof.

"(d) Any transportation facilities owned by the United States and included within any contract made by the United States for operation on the Mississippi River above St. Louis, the possession of which reverts to the United States at or before the expiration of such contract, shall be operated by the Secretary of War so as to provide facilities for water carriage on the Mississippi River above St. Louis.

"(e) The operation of the transportation facilities referred to in this section shall be subject to the provisions of the interstate commerce act as amended by this act or by subsequent legislation, and to the provisions of the 'shipping act, 1916,' as now or hereafter amended, in the same manner and to the same extent as if such transportation facilities were privately owned and operated; and all such vessels while operated and employed solely as merchant vessels shall be subject to all other laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels, whether the United States is interested therein as owner, in whole or in part, or holds any mortgage, lien, or interest therein. For the performance of the duties imposed by this section the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint or employ such number of experts, clerks, and other employees as may be necessary for service in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and as may be provided for by Congress.

"SETTLEMENT OF MATTERS ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 202. The President shall, as soon as practicable after the termination of Federal control, adjust, settle, liquidate, and wind up all matters, including compensation, and all questions and disputes of whatsoever nature, arising out of or incident to Federal control. For these purposes and for the purpose of making the payments specified in subdivision (a) of section 201, all unexpended balances in the revolving fund created by the Federal control act or of the moneys appropriated by the act entitled 'An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for carrying out the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918,' approved June 30, 1919, are hereby reappropriated and made available until expended; and all moneys derived from the operation of the carriers or otherwise arising out of Federal control, and all moneys that have been or may be received in payment of the indebtedness of any carrier to the United States arising out of Federal control, shall be and remain available until expended for the aforesaid purposes; and there is hereby appropriated for the aforesaid purposes, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $200,000,000 in addition to the above, to be available until expended.

"COMPENSATION OF CARRIERS WITH WHICH NO CONTRACT MADE.

"SEC. 203. (a) Upon the request of any carrier entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, but with which no contract fixing or waiving compensation has been made and which has made no waiver of compensation, the President: (1) Shall pay to it so much of the amount he may determine to be just compensation as may be necessary to enable such carrier to have the sums required for interest, taxes, and other corporate charges and expenses referred to in paragraph (b) of section 7 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers, accruing during the period for which such carrier is entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, and also the sums required for dividends declared and paid during the same period, including, also, in addition, a sum equal to that proportion of such last dividend which the period between its payment and the termination of the period for which the carrier is entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act bears to the last dividend period; and (2) may, in his discretion, pay to such carrier the whole or any part of the remainder of such estimated amount of just compensation.

"(b) The acceptance of any benefits by a carrier under this section—

"(1) Shall not deprive it of the right to claim additional compensation, which, unless agreed upon, shall be ascertained in the manner provided in section 3 of the Federal control act; but

"(2) Shall constitute an acceptance by the carrier of all the provisions of the Federal control act as modified by this act, and obligate the carrier to pay to the United States, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from a date or dates fixed in proceedings under section 3 of the Federal control act, the amount by which the sums received on account of such compensation, under this section or otherwise, exceed the sum found due in such proceedings.

"REIMBURSEMENT OF DEFICITS DURING FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 204. (a) When used in this section—

"The term 'carrier' means a carrier by railroad which, during any part of the period of Federal control, engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, and competed for traffic, or connected, with a railroad under Federal control, and which sustained a deficit in its railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad or system of transportation; but does not include any street or interurban electric railway which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic or sale of power, heat, and light, or both; and

"The term 'test period' means the three years ending June 30, 1917.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"Railway operating income or any deficit therein for the period of Federal control shall be computed in a manner similar to that provided in section 209 with respect to such income or deficit for the guaranty period; and

"Railway operating income or any deficit therein for the test period shall be computed in the manner provided in section 1 of the Federal control act.

"(c) As soon as practicable after March 1, 1920, the commission shall ascertain for every carrier, for every month of the period of Federal control during which its railroad or system of transportation was not under Federal operation, its deficit in railway operating income, if any, and its railway operating income, if any, (hereinafter called 'Federal control return'), and the average of its deficit in railway operating income, if any, and of its railway operating income, if any, for the three corresponding months of the test period taken together, (hereinafter called 'test period return'): Provided, That 'test period return,' in the case of a carrier which operated its railroad or system of transportation for at least one year during, but not for the whole of, the test period, means its railway operating income, or the deficit therein, for the corresponding month during the test period, or the average thereof for the corresponding months during the test period taken together, during which the carrier operated its railroad or system of transportation.

"(d) For every month of the period of Federal control during which the railroad or system of transportation of the carrier was not under Federal operation, the commission shall then ascertain (1) the difference between its Federal control return, if a deficit, and its test period return, if a smaller deficit, or

(2) the difference between its test period return, if an income, and its Federal control return, if a smaller income, or (3) the sum of its Federal control return, if a deficit, plus its test period return, if an income. The sum of such amounts shall be credited to the carrier.

"(e) For every such month the commission shall then ascertain (1) the difference between the carrier's Federal control return, if an income, and its test period return, if a smaller income, or (2) the difference between its test period return, if a deficit, and its Federal control return, if a smaller deficit, or (3) the sum of its Federal control return, if an income, plus its test period return, if a deficit. The sum of such amounts shall be credited to the United States.

"(f) If the sum of the amounts so credited to the carrier under subdivision (d) exceeds the sum of the amounts so credited to the United States under subdivision (e), the difference shall be payable to the carrier. In the case of a carrier which operated its railroad or system of transportation for less than a year during, or for none of, the test period, the foregoing computations shall not be used, but there shall be payable to such carrier its deficit in railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad or system of transportation.

"(g) The commission shall promptly certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the several amounts payable to carriers under paragraph (f). The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed thereupon to draw warrants in favor of each such carrier upon the Treasury of the United States for the amount shown in such certificate as payable thereto. An amount sufficient to pay such warrants is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"INSPECTION OF CARRIERS' RECORDS.

"SEC. 205. The President shall have the right, at all reasonable times until the affairs of Federal control are concluded, to inspect the property and records of all carriers whose railroads or systems of transportation were at any time under Federal control, whenever such inspection is necessary or appropriate (1) to protect the interests of the United States, or (2) to supervise matters being handled for the United States by agents of the carriers, or (3) to secure information concerning matters arising during Federal control, and such carriers shall provide all reasonable facilities therefor, including the issuance of free transportation to all agents of the President while traveling on official business for these purposes.

"Such carriers shall, at their expense, upon the request of the President, or those duly authorized by him, furnish all necessary and proper information and reports compiled from the records made or kept during the period of Federal control affecting their respective lines, and shall keep and continue such records and furnish like information and reports compiled therefrom.

"Any carrier which refuses or obstructs such inspection, or which willfully fails to provide reasonable facilities therefor, or to furnish such information or reports shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each day of the continuance of such offense, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action to be brought by the United States.

"CAUSES OF ACTION ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 206 (a) Actions at law, suits in equity, and proceedings in admiralty, based on causes of action arising out of the possession, use, or operation by the President of the railroad or system of transportation of any carrier (under the provisions of the Federal control act, or of the act of August 29, 1916) of such character as prior to Federal control could have been brought against such carrier, may, after the termination of Federal control, be brought against an agent designated by the President for such purpose, which agent shall be designated by the President within 30 days after the passage of this act. Such actions, suits, or proceedings may, within the periods of limitation now prescribed by State or Federal statutes but not later than two years from the date of the passage of this act, be brought in any court which but for Federal control would have had jurisdiction of the cause of action had it arisen against such carrier.

"(b) Process may be served upon any agent or officer of the carrier operating such railroad or system of transportation, if such agent or officer is authorized by law to be served with process in proceedings brought against such carrier and if a contract has been made with such carrier by or through the President for the conduct of litigation arising out of operation during Federal control. If no such contract has been made process may be served upon such agents or officers as may be designated by or through the President. The agent designated by the President under subdivision (a) shall cause to be filed, upon the termination of Federal control, in the office of the clerk of each district court of the United States, a statement naming all carriers with whom he has contracted for the conduct of litigation arising out of operation during Federal control, and a like statement designating the agents or officers upon whom process may be served in actions, suits, and proceedings arising in respect to railroads or systems of transportation with the owner of which no such contract has been made; and such statements shall be supplemented from time to time, if additional contracts are made or other agents or officers appointed.

"(c) Complaints praying for reparation on account of damage claimed to have been caused by reason of the collection or enforcement by or through the President during the period of Federal control of rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices (including those applicable to interstate, foreign, or intrastate traffic) which were unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unduly or unreasonably prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of the interstate commerce act, may be filed with the commission, within one year after the termination of Federal control, against the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a), naming in the petition the railroad or system of transportation against which such complaint would have been brought if such railroad or system had not been under Federal control at the time the matter complained of took place. The commission is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and decide such complaints in the manner provided in the interstate commerce act, and all notices and orders in such proceedings shall be served upon the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a).

"(d) Actions, suits, proceedings, and reparation claims, of the character above described pending at the termination of Federal control shall not abate by reason of such termination, but may be prosecuted to final judgment, substituting the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a).

"(e) Final judgments, decrees, and awards in actions, suits, proceedings, or reparation claims, of the character above described, rendered against the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a), shall be promptly paid out of the revolving fund created by section 210.

"(f) The period of Federal control shall not be computed as a part of the periods of limitation in actions against carriers or in claims for reparation to the commission for causes of action arising prior to Federal control.

"(g) No execution or process, other than on a judgment recovered by the United States against a carrier, shall be levied upon the property of any carrier where the cause of action on account of which the judgment was obtained grew out of the possession, use, control, or operation of any railroad or system of transportation by the President under Federal control.

"REFUNDING OF CARRIERS' INDEBTEDNESS TO UNITED STATES.

"SEC. 207. (a) As soon as practicable after the termination of Federal control the President shall ascertain (1) the amount of the indebtedness of each carrier to the United States which may exist at the termination of Federal control, incurred for additions and betterments made during Federal control and properly chargeable to capital account; (2) the amount of indebtedness of such carrier to the United States otherwise incurred; and (3) the amount of the indebtedness of the United States to such carrier arising out of Federal control. The amount under clause (3) may be set off against either or both of the amounts under clauses (1) and (2), so far as deemed wise by the President, but only to the extent permitted under any contract now or hereafter made between such carrier and the United States in respect to the matters of Federal control, or, where no such contract exists, to the extent permitted under paragraph (b) of section 7 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers relative to deductions from compensation: Provided, That such right of set-off shall not be so exercised as to prevent such carrier from having the sums required for interest, taxes, and other corporate charges and expenses referred to in paragraph (b) of section 7 of such standard contract, accruing during Federal control, and also the sums required for dividends declared and paid during Federal control, including, also in addition, a sum equal to that proportion of such last dividend which the period between its payment and the termination of Federal control bears to the last regular dividend period: And provided further, That such right of set-off shall not be exercised unless there shall have first been paid such sums in addition as may be necessary to provide the carrier with working capital in amount not less than one twenty-fourth of its operating expenses for the calendar year 1919.

"(b) Any remaining indebtedness of the carrier to the United States in respect to such additions and betterments shall, at the request of the carrier, be funded for a period of 10 years from the termination of Federal control, or a shorter period at the option of the carrier, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, subject to the right of such carrier to pay, on any interest-payment day, the whole or any part of such indebtedness. Any carrier obtaining the funding of such indebtedness as aforesaid shall give, in the discretion of the President, such security, in such form and upon such terms, as he may prescribe.

"(c) If the President and the various carriers, or any of them, shall enter into an agreement for funding, through the medium of car trust certificates, or otherwise, the indebtedness of any such carrier to the United States incurred for equipment ordered for the benefit of such carrier, such indebtedness so funded shall not be refundable under the foregoing provisions.

"(d) Any other indebtedness of any such carrier to the United States which may exist after the settlement of accounts between the United States and the carrier and is then due shall be evidenced by notes payable in one year from the termination of Federal control, or a shorter period at the option of the carrier, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and secured by such collateral security as the President may deem it advisable to require.

"(e) With respect to any bonds, notes, or other securities, acquired under the provisions of this section or of the Federal control act or of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes,' approved November 19, 1919, the President shall have the right to make such arrangements for extension of the time of payment or for the exchange of any of them for other securities, or partly for cash and partly for securities, as may be provided for in any agreement entered into by him or as may in his judgment seem desirable.

"(f) Carriers may, by agreement with the President, issue notes or other evidences of indebtedness, secured by equipment trust agreements, for equipment purchased during Federal control by or through the President under section 6 of the Federal control act, and allocated to such carriers respectively; and the filing of such equipment trust agreements with the commission shall constitute notice thereof to all the world.

"(g) A carrier may issue evidences of indebtedness pursuant to this section without the authorization or approval of any authority, State or Federal, and without compliance with any requirement, State or Federal, as to notification.

"EXISTING RATES TO CONTINUE IN EFFECT.

"SEC. 208. (a) All rates, fares, and charges, and all classifications, regulations, and practices, in any wise changing, affecting, or determining, any part or the aggregate of rates, fares, or charges, or the value of the service rendered, which on February 29, 1920, are in effect on the lines of carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, shall continue in force and effect until thereafter changed by State or Federal authority, respectively, or pursuant to authority of law; but prior to September 1, 1920, no such rate, fare, or charge shall be reduced, and no such classification, regulation, or practice shall be changed in such manner as to reduce any such rate, fare, or charge, unless such reduction or change is approved by the commission.

"(b) All divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges, which on February 29, 1920, are in effect between the lines of carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, shall continue in force and effect until thereafter changed by mutual agreement between the interested carriers or by State or Federal authorities, respectively.

"(c) Any land grant railroad organized under the act of July 28, 1866 (chapter 300), shall receive the same compensation for transportation of property and troops of the United States as is paid to land grant railroads organized under the land grant act of March 3, 1863, and the act of July 27, 1866 (chapter 278).

"GUARANTY TO CARRIERS AFTER TERMINATION OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 209. (a) When used in this section—

"The term 'carrier' means (1) a carrier by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water, whose railroad or system of transportation is under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates, or which has heretofore engaged as a common carrier in general transportation and competed for traffic, or connected, with a railroad at any time under Federal control; and (2) a sleeping car company whose system of transportation is under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates; but does not include a street or interurban electric railway not under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates, which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic or sale of power, heat, and light, or both;

"The term 'guaranty period' means the six months beginning March 1, 1920.

"The term 'test period' means the three years ending June 30, 1917; and

"The term 'railway operating income' and other references to accounts of carriers by railroad shall, in the case of a sleeping car company, be construed as indicating the appropriate corresponding accounts in the accounting system prescribed by the commission.

"(b) This section shall not be applicable to any carrier which does not on or before March 15, 1920, file with the commission a written statement that it accepts all the provisions of this section.

"(c) The United States hereby guarantees—

"(1) With respect to any carrier with which a contract (exclusive of so-called cooperative contracts or waivers) has been made fixing the amount of just compensation under the Federal control act, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half the amount named in such contract as annual compensation, or, where the contract fixed a lump sum as compensation for the whole period of Federal operation, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than an amount which shall bear the same proportion to the lump sum so fixed as six months bears to the number of months during which such carrier was under Federal operation, including in both cases the increases in such compensation provided for in section 4 of the Federal control act;

"(2) With respect to any carrier entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, with which such a contract has not been made, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half of the annual amount estimated by the President as just compensation for such carrier under the Federal control act, including the increases in such compensation provided for in section 4 of the Federal control act. If any such carrier does not accept the President's estimate respecting its just compensation, and if in proceedings under section 3 of the Federal control act it is determined that a larger or smaller annual amount is due as just compensation, the guaranty under this paragraph shall be increased or decreased accordingly;

"(3) With respect to any carrier, whether or not entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, with which such a contract has not been made, and for which no estimate of just compensation is made by the President, and which for the test period as a whole sustained a deficit in railway operating income, the guaranty shall be a sum equal to (a) the amount by which any deficit in its railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole exceeds one-half of its average annual deficit in railway operating income for the test period, plus (b) an amount equal to one-half the annual sum fixed by the President under section 4 of the Federal control act;

"(4) With respect to any carrier not entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, which for the test period as a whole had an average annual railway operating income, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half the average annual railway operating income of such carrier during the test period.

"(d) If for the guaranty period as a whole the railway operating income of any carrier entitled to a guaranty under paragraph (1), (2), or (4) of subdivision (c) is in excess of the minimum railway operating income guaranteed in such paragraph, such carrier shall forthwith pay the amount of such excess into the Treasury of the United States. If for the guaranty period as a whole the railway operating income of any carrier entitled to a guaranty under paragraph (3) of subdivision (c) is in excess of one-half of the annual sum fixed by the President with respect to such carrier under section 4 of the Federal control act, such carrier shall forthwith pay the amount of such excess into the Treasury of the United States. The amounts so paid into the Treasury of the United States shall be added to the funds made available under section 202 for the purposes indicated in such section. Notwithstanding the provisions of this subdivision, any carrier may retain out of any such excess any amount necessary to enable it to pay its fixed charges accruing during the guaranty period.

"(e) For the purposes of this section railway operating income, or any deficit therein, for the test period shall be computed in the manner provided for in section 1 of the Federal control act.

"(f) In computing railway operating income, or any deficit therein, for the guaranty period for the purposes of this section—

"(1) Debits and credits arising from the accounts, called in the monthly reports to the commission equipment rents and joint facility rents, shall be included, but debits and credits arising from the operation of such street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, as are not under Federal control at the time of termination thereof, shall be excluded;

"(2) Proper adjustments shall be made (a) in case any lines which were during any portion of the period of Federal control, a part of the railroad or system of transportation of the carrier, and whose railway operating income was included in such income of the carrier for the test period, do not continue to be a part of such railroad or system of transportation during the entire guaranty period, and (b) in case of any lines acquired by, leased to, or consolidated with, the railroad or system of transportation of the carrier at any time since the end of the test period and prior to the expiration of the guaranty period, for which separate operating returns to the commission are not made in respect to the entire portion of the guaranty period;

"(3) There shall not be included in operating expenses, for maintenance of way and structures, or for maintenance of equipment, more than an amount fixed by the commission. In fixing such amount the commission shall so far as practicable apply the rule set forth in the proviso in paragraph (a) of section 5 of the "standard contract" between the United States and the carriers (whether or not such contract has been entered into with the carrier whose railway operating income is being computed);

"(4) There shall not be included any taxes paid under Title I or II of the revenue act of 1917, or such portion of the taxes paid under Title II or III of the revenue act of 1918 as by the terms of such act are to be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I or II of the revenue act of 1917; and

"(5) The commission shall require the elimination and restatement of the operating expenses and revenues (other than for maintenance of way and structures, or maintenance of equipment) for the guaranty period, to the extent necessary to correct and exclude any disproportionate or unreasonable charge to such expenses or revenues for such period, or any charge to such expenses or revenues for such period which under a proper system of accounting is attributable to another period.

"(g) The commission shall, as soon as practicable after the expiration of the guaranty period, ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the several amounts necessary to make good the foregoing guaranty to each carrier. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed thereupon to draw warrants in favor of each such carrier upon the Treasury of the United States, for the amount shown in such certificate as necessary to make good such guaranty. An amount sufficient to pay such warrants is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"(h) Upon application of any carrier to the commission, asking that during the guaranty period there may be advanced to it from time to time such sums, not in excess of the estimated amount necessary to make good the guaranty, as are necessary to enable it to meet its fixed charges and operating expenses, the commission may certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of, and times at which, such advances, if any, shall be made. The Secretary of the Treasury, on receipt of such certificate, is authorized and directed to make the advances in the amounts and at the times specified in the certificate, upon the execution by the carrier of a contract, secured in such manner as the Secretary may determine, that upon final determination of the amount of the guaranty provided for by this section such carrier will repay to the United States any amounts which it has received from such advances in excess of the guaranty, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the time such excess was paid. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make the advances referred to in this subdivision.

"(i) If the American Railway Express Co. shall, on or before March 15, 1920, file with the commission a written statement that it accepts all the provisions of this subdivision, the contract of June 26, 1918, between such company and the Director General of Railroads, as amended and continued by agreement dated November 21, 1918, shall remain in full force and effect during the guaranty period in so far as the same constitutes a guaranty on the part of the United States to such company against a deficit in operating income.

"In computing operating income, and any deficit therein, for the guaranty period for the purposes of this subdivision, the commission shall require the elimination and restatement of the operating expenses and revenues for the guaranty period, to the extent necessary to correct and exclude any disproportionate or unreasonable charge to such expenses or revenues for such period, or any charge to such expenses or revenues for such period which under a proper system of accounting is attributable to another period, and to exclude from operating expenses so much of the charge for payment for express privileges to carriers on whose lines the express traffic is carried as is in excess of 50.25 per cent of gross express revenue.

"For the guaranty period the American Railway Express Co. shall pay to every carrier which accepts the provisions of this section, as provided in subdivision (b) hereof, 50.25 per cent of the gross revenue earned on the transportation of all its express traffic on the carrier's lines, and every such carrier shall accept from the American Railway Express Co. such percentage of the gross revenue as its compensation. In arriving at the gross revenue on through or joint express traffic, the method of dividing the revenue between the carriers shall be that agreed upon between the carriers and such express company and approved by the commission.

"If for the guaranty period as a whole the American Railway Express Co. does not have a deficit in operating income, it shall forthwith pay the amount of its operating income for such period into the Treasury of the United States. The amount so paid shall be added to the funds made available under section 202 for the purposes indicated in such section.

"The commission shall, as soon as practicable after the expiration of the guaranty period, certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount necessary to make good the foregoing guaranty to the American Railway Express Co. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed thereupon to draw warrants in favor of such company upon the Treasury of the United States for the amount shown in such certificate as necessary to make good such guaranty. An amount sufficient to pay such warrants is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"Upon application of the American Railway Express Co. to the commission, asking that during the guaranty period there may be advanced to it from time to time such sums, not in excess of the estimated amount necessary to make good the guaranty, as are necessary to enable it to meet its operating expenses, the commission may certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of, and times at which, such advances, if any, shall be made. The Secretary of the Treasury, on receipt of such certificate, is authorized and directed to make the advances in the amounts and at the times specified in the certificate, upon the execution by such company of a contract, secured in such manner as the Secretary may determine, that upon final determination of the amount of the guaranty provided for by this subdivision such company will repay to the United States any amounts which it has received from such advances in excess of the guaranty, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the time such excess was paid. There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make the advances referred to in this subdivision.

"NEW LOANS TO RAILROADS.

"SEC. 210. (a) For the purpose of enabling carriers by railroad subject to the interstate commerce act properly to serve the public during the transition period immediately following the termination of Federal control, any such carrier may, at any time after the passage of this act and before the expiration of two years after the termination of Federal control, make application to the commission for a loan from the United States, setting forth the amount of the loan and the term for which it is desired, the purpose of the loan and the uses to which it will be applied, the present and prospective ability of the applicant to repay the loan and meet the requirements of its obligations in that regard, the character and value of the security offered, and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts and details as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of granting the loan applied for and the ability of the applicant to make good the obligation, as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"(b) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the making, in whole or in part, of the proposed loan by the United States is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant and the character and value of the security offered are such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to repay the loan within the time fixed therefor, and to meet its other obligations in connection with such loan, the commission may certify to the Secretary of the Treasury its findings of fact and its recommendations as to: the amount of the loan which is to be made; the time, not exceeding five years from the making thereof, within which it is to be repaid; the character of the security which is to be offered therefor; and the terms and conditions of the loan.

"(c) Upon receipt of such certificate from the commission, the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time before the expiration of 26 months after the termination of Federal control, is authorized to make a loan, not exceeding the maximum amount recommended in such certificate, out of any moneys in the revolving fund provided for in this section. All such loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually to the Secretary of the Treasury and to be placed to the credit of the revolving fund provided for in this section. The time, not exceeding five years from the making thereof, within which such loan is to be repaid, the security which is to be taken therefor, which shall be adequate to secure the loan, the terms and conditions of the loan, and the form of the obligation to be entered into, shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(d) The commission or the Secretary of the Treasury may call upon the Federal Reserve Board for advice and assistance with respect to any such application or loan.

"(e) There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $300,000,000, which shall be used as a revolving fund for the purpose of making the loans provided for in this section, and for paying the judgments, decrees, and awards referred to in subdivision (e) of section 206.

"(f) A carrier may issue evidences of indebtedness to the United States pursuant to this section without the authorization or approval of any authority, State or Federal, and without compliance with any requirement, State or Federal, as to notification.

"EXECUTION OF POWERS OF PRESIDENT.

"SEC. 211. All powers and duties conferred or imposed upon the President by the preceding sections of this act, except the designation of the agent under section 206, may be executed by him through such agency or agencies as he may determine.

"TITLE III.—DISPUTES BETWEEN CARRIERS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES AND SUBORDINATE OFFICIALS.

"SEC. 300. When used in this title—

"(1) The term 'carrier' includes any express company, sleeping car company, and any carrier by railroad, subject to the interstate commerce act, except a street, interurban, or suburban electric railway not operating as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation;

"(2) The term 'adjustment board' means any railroad board of labor adjustment established under section 302;

"(3) The term 'labor board' means the railroad labor board;

"(4) The term 'commerce' means commerce among the several States or between any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia and any foreign nation, or between any Territory or the District of Columbia and any State, or between any Territory and any other Territory, or between any Territory and the District of Columbia, or within any Territory or the District of Columbia, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation; and

"(5) The term 'subordinate official' includes officials of carriers of such class or rank as the commission shall designate by regulation formulated and issued after such notice and hearing as the commission may prescribe, to the carriers, and employees and subordinate officials of carriers, and organizations thereof, directly to be affected by such regulations.

"SEC. 301. It shall be the duty of all carriers and their officers, employees, and agents to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees or subordinate officials thereof. All such disputes shall be considered and, if possible, decided in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer by the carriers, or the employees or subordinate officials thereof, directly interested in the dispute. If any dispute is not decided in such conference, it shall be referred by the parties thereto to the board which under the provisions of this title is authorized to hear and decide such dispute.

"SEC. 302. Railroad boards of labor adjustment may be established by agreement between any carrier, group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate officials of carriers, or organization or group of organizations thereof.

"SEC. 303. Each such adjustment board shall, (1) upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, (2) upon the written petition signed by not less than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, (3) upon the adjustment board's own motion, or (4) upon the request of the labor board whenever such board is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, receive for hearing, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving only grievances, rules, or working conditions, not decided as provided in section 301, between the carrier and its employees or subordinate officials, who are, or any organization thereof which is, in accordance with the provisions of section 302, represented upon any such adjustment board.

"SEC. 304. There is hereby established a board to be known as the "railroad labor board" and to be composed of nine members as follows:

"(1) Three members constituting the labor group, representing the employees and subordinate officials of the carriers, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from not less than six nominees whose nominations shall be made and offered by such employees in such manner as the commission shall by regulation prescribe;

"(2) Three members, constituting the management group, representing the carriers, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from not less than six nominees whose nominations shall be made and offered by the carriers in such manner as the commission shall by regulation prescribe; and

"(3) Three members, constituting the public group, representing the public, to be appointed directly by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"Any vacancy on the labor board shall be filed in the same manner as the original appointment.

"SEC. 305. If either the employees or the carriers fail to make nominations and offer nominees in accordance with the regulations of the commission, as provided in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 304, within 30 days after the passage of this act in case of any original appointment to the office of member of the labor board, or in case of a vacancy in any such office within 15 days after such vacancy occurs, the President shall thereupon directly make the appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In making any such appointment the President shall, as far as he deems it practicable, select an individual associated in interest with the carriers or employees thereof, whichever he is to represent.

"SEC. 306. (a) Any member of the labor board who during his term of office is an active member or in the employ of or holds any office in any organization of employees or subordinate officials, or any carrier, or owns any stock or bond thereof, or is pecuniarily interested therein, shall at once become ineligible for further membership upon the labor board; but no such member is required to relinquish honorary membership in, or his rights in any insurance or pension or other benefit fund maintained by, any organization of employees or subordinate officials or by a carrier.

"(b) Of the original members of the labor board, one from each group shall be appointed for a term of three years, one for two years, and one for one year. Their successors shall hold office for terms of five years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. Each member shall receive from the United States an annual salary of $10,000. A member may be removed by the President for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

"SEC. 307. (a) The labor board shall hear, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions, in respect to which any adjustment board certifies to the labor board that in its opinion the adjustment board has failed or will fail to reach a decision within a reasonable time, or in respect to which the labor board determines that any adjustment board has so failed or is not using due diligence in its consideration thereof. In case the appropriate adjustment board is not organized under the provisions of section 302, the labor board, (1) upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, (2) upon a written petition signed by not less than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or (3) upon the labor board's own motion if it is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, shall receive for hearing, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions which is not decided as provided in section 301 and which such adjustment board would be required to receive for hearing and decision under the provisions of section 303.

"(b) The labor board, (1) upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, (2) upon a written petition signed by not less than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or (3) upon the labor board's own motion if it is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, shall receive for hearing, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, all disputes with respect to the wages or salaries of employees or subordinate officials of carriers, not decided as provided in section 301. The labor board may upon its own motion within 10 days after the decision, in accordance with the provisions of section 301, of any dispute with respect to wages or salaries of employees or subordinate officials of carriers, suspend the operation of such decision if the labor board is of the opinion that the decision involves such an increase in wages or salaries as will be likely to necessitate a substantial readjustment of the rates of any carrier. The labor board shall hear any decision so suspended and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide to affirm or modify such suspended decision.

"(c) A decision by the labor board under the provisions of paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section shall require the concurrence therein of at least 5 of the 9 members of the labor board: Provided, That in case of any decision under paragraph (b), at least one of the representatives of the public shall concur in such decision. All decisions of the labor board shall be entered upon the records of the board and copies thereof, together with such statement of facts bearing thereon as the board may deem proper, shall be immediately communicated to the parties to the dispute, the President, each adjustment board, and the commission, and shall be given further publicity in such manner as the labor board may determine.

"(d) All the decisions of the labor board in respect to wages or salaries and of the labor board or an adjustment board in respect to working conditions of employees or subordinate officials of carriers shall establish rates of wages and salaries and standards of working conditions which in the opinion of the board are just and reasonable. In determining the justness and reasonableness of such wages and salaries or working conditions the board shall, so far as applicable, take into consideration among other relevant circumstances:

"(1) The scales of wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries;

"(2) The relation between wages and the cost of living;

"(3) The hazards of the employment;

"(4) The training and skill required;

"(5) The degree of responsibility;

"(6) The character and regularity of the employment; and

"(7) Inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment, the result of previous wage orders or adjustments.

"SEC. 308. The labor board—

"(1) Shall elect a chairman by majority vote of its members;

"(2) Shall maintain central offices in Chicago, Ill., but the labor board may, whenever it deems it necessary, meet at such other place as it may determine;

"(3) Shall investigate and study the relations between carriers and their employees, particularly questions relating to wages, hours of labor, and other conditions of employment and the respective privileges, rights, and duties of carriers and employees, and shall gather, compile, classify, digest, and publish, from time to time, data and information relating to such questions to the end that the labor board may be properly equipped to perform its duties under this title and that the members of the adjustment boards and the public may be properly informed;

"(4) May make regulations necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in it by this title; and

"(5) Shall at least annually collect and publish the decisions and regulations of the labor board and the adjustment boards and all court and administrative decisions and regulations of the commission in respect to this title, together with a cumulative index-digest thereof.

"SEC. 309. Any party to any dispute to be considered by an adjustment board or by the labor board shall be entitled to a hearing either in person or by counsel.

"SEC. 310. (a) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the labor board by this title, any member thereof may require, by subpœna issued and signed by himself, the attendance of any witness and the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and the taking of a deposition before any designated person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed to by the deponent. Any member of the labor board may administer oaths and examine any witness. Any witness summoned before the board and any witness whose deposition is taken shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(b) In case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in case of the contumacy of any witness appearing before the labor board, the board may invoke the aid of any United States district court. Such court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of such subpœna, or to give evidence touching the matter in question, as the case may be. Any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying or deposing, nor from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or foreiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing, as to which in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise. But no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"SEC. 311. (a) When necessary to the efficient administration of the functions vested in the labor board by this title, any member, officer, employee, or agent thereof, duly authorized in writing by the board, shall at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to any matter which the board is authorized to consider or investigate. Any person who upon demand refuses any duly authorized member, officer, employee, or agent of the labor board such right of access or copying, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right, shall upon conviction thereof be liable to a penalty of $500 for each such offense. Each day during any part of which such offense continues shall constitute a separate offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States, and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"(b) Every officer or employee of the United States, whenever requested by any member of the labor board or an adjustment board duly authorized by the board for the purpose, shall supply to such board any data or information pertaining to the administration of the functions vested in it by this title, which may be contained in the records of his office.

"(c) The President is authorized to transfer to the labor board any books, papers, or documents pertaining to the administration of the functions vested in the board by this title, which are in the possession of any agency, or railway board of adjustment in connection therewith, established for executing the powers granted the President under the Federal control act and which are no longer necessary to the administration of the affairs of such agency.

"SEC. 312. Prior to September 1, 1920, each carrier shall pay to each employee or subordinate official thereof wages or salary at a rate not less than that fixed by the decision of any agency, or railway board of adjustment in connection therewith, established for executing the powers granted the President under the Federal control act, in effect in respect to such employee or subordinate official immediately preceding 12.01 a. m. March 1, 1920. Any carrier acting in violation of any provision of this section shall upon conviction thereof be liable to a penalty of $100 for each such offense. Each such action with respect to any such employee or subordinate official and each day or portion thereof during which the offense continues shall constitute a separate offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States, and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 313. The labor board, in case it has reason to believe that any decision of the labor board or of an adjustment board is violated by any carrier, or employee or subordinate official, or organization thereof, may upon its own motion after due notice and hearing to all persons directly interested in such violation, determine whether in its opinion such violation has occurred and make public its decision in such manner as it may determine.

"SEC. 314. The labor board may (1) appoint a secretary, who shall receive from the United States an annual salary of $5,000; and (2) subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws, appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents; and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses, including salaries, traveling expenses of its members, secretary, officers, employees, and agents, and witness fees, as are necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in the board by this title and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time. All of the expenditures of the labor board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the labor board.

"SEC. 315. There is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the labor board, for defraying the expenses of the maintenance and establishment of the board, including the payment of salaries as provided in this title.

"SEC. 316. The powers and duties of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation created by the act approved July 15, 1913, shall not extend to any dispute which may be received for hearing and decision by any adjustment board or the labor board.

"TITLE IV.—AMENDMENTS TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

"SEC. 400. The first four paragraphs of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as such paragraphs appear in section 7 of the commerce court act, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(1) That the provisions of this act shall apply to common carriers engaged in—

"'(a) The transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment; or

"'(b) The transportation of oil or other commodity, except water and except natural or artificial gas, by pipe line, or partly by pipe line and partly by railroad or by water; or

"'(c) The transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless;—from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from one place in a Territory to another place in the same Territory, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, or from or to any place in the United States to or from a foreign country, but only in so far as such transportation or transmission takes place within the United States.

"'(2) The provisions of this act shall also apply to such transportation of passengers and property and transmission of intelligence, but only in so far as such transportation or transmission takes place within the United States, but shall not apply—

"'(a) To the transportation of passengers or property, or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property, wholly within one State and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any place in the United States as aforesaid;

"'(b) To the transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless wholly within one State and not transmitted to or from a foreign country from or to any place in the United States as aforesaid; or

"'(c) To the transportation of passengers or property by a carrier by water where such transportation would not be subject to the provisions of this act except for the fact that such carrier absorbs, out of its port-to-port water rates or out of its proportional through rates, any switching, terminal, lighterage, car rental, trackage, handling, or other charges by a rail carrier for services within the switching, drayage, lighterage, or corporate limits of a port terminal or district.

"'(3) The term "common carrier" as used in this act shall include all pipe-line companies; telegraph, telephone, and cable companies operating by wire or wireless; express companies; sleeping-car companies; and all persons, natural or artificial, engaged in such transportation or transmission as aforesaid as common carriers for hire. Wherever the word "carrier" is used in this act it shall be held to mean "common carrier." The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges, car floats, lighters, and ferries used by or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any common carrier operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease, and also all switches, spurs, tracks, terminals, and terminal facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation of the persons or property designated herein, including all freight depots, yards, and grounds, used or necessary in the transportation or delivery of any such property. The term "transportation" as used in this act shall include locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, vessels, and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported. The term "transmission" as used in this act shall include the transmission of intelligence through the application of electrical energy or other use of electricity, whether by means of wire, cable, radio apparatus, or other wire or wireless conductors or appliances, and all instrumentalities and facilities for and services in connection with the receipt, forwarding, and delivery of messages, communications, or other intelligence so transmitted hereinafter also collectively called messages.

"'(4) It shall be the duty of every common carrier subject to this act engaged in the transportation of passengers or property to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto, and to provide reasonable facilities for operating through routes and to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the operation of through routes, and providing for reasonable compensation to those entitled thereto; and in case of joint rates, fares, or charges, to establish just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof as between the carriers subject to this act participating therein which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such participating carriers.

"'(5) All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property or in the transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service or any part thereof is prohibited and declared to be unlawful: Provided, That messages by wire or wireless subject to the provisions of this act may be classified into day, night, repeated, unrepeated, letter, commercial, press, Government, and such other classes as are just and reasonable, and different rates may be charged for the different classes of messages: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent telephone, telegraph, and cable companies from entering into contracts with common carriers for the exchange of services.

"'(6) It is hereby made the duty of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable classifications of property for transportation, with reference to which rates, tariffs, regulations, or practices are or may be made or prescribed, and just and reasonable regulations and practices affecting classifications, rates, or tariffs, the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, and bills of lading, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the facilities for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, and all other matters relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, transporting, storing, and delivery of property subject to the provisions of this act which may be necessary or proper to secure the safe and prompt receipt, handling, transportation, and delivery of property subject to the provisions of this act upon just and reasonable terms, and every unjust and unreasonable classification, regulation, and practice is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.'

"SEC. 401. The fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as such paragraphs appear in section 7 of the Commerce Court act, are hereby amended by inserting '(7)' at the beginning of such fifth paragraph, '(8)' at the beginning of such sixth paragraph, and '(9)' at the beginning of such seventh paragraph.

"SEC. 402. The paragraphs added to section 1 of the interstate commerce act by the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," as amended, in respect of car service, and for other purposes,' approved May 29, 1917, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(10) The term "car service" in this act shall include the use, control, supply, movement, distribution, exchange, interchange, and return of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles used in the transportation of property, including special types of equipment, and the supply of trains, by any carrier by railroad subject to this act.

"'(11) It shall be the duty of every carrier by railroad subject to this act to furnish safe and adequate car service and to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rules, regulations, and practices with respect to car service; and every unjust and unreasonable rule, regulation, and practice with respect to car service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

"'(12) It shall also be the duty of every carrier by railroad to make just and reasonable distribution of cars for transportation of coal among the coal mines served by it, whether located upon its line or lines or customarily dependent upon it for car supply. During any period when the supply of cars available for such service does not equal the requirements of such mines it shall be the duty of the carrier to maintain and apply just and reasonable ratings of such mines and to count each and every car furnished to or used by any such mine for transportation of coal against the mine. Failure or refusal so to do shall be unlawful, and in respect of each car not so counted shall be deemed a separate offense, and the carrier, receiver, or operating trustee so failing or refusing shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each offense, which may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"'(13) The commission is hereby authorized by general or special orders to require all carriers by railroad subject to this act, or any of them, to file with it from time to time their rules and regulations with respect to car service, and the commission may, in its discretion, direct that such rules and regulations shall be incorporated in their schedules showing rates, fares, and charges for transportation, and be subject to any or all of the provisions of this act relating thereto.

"'(14) The commission may, after hearing, on a complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, establish reasonable rules, regulations, and practices with respect to car service by carriers by railroad subject to this act, including the compensation to be paid for the use of any locomotive, car, or other vehicle not owned by the carrier using it, and the penalties or other sanctions for nonobservance of such rules, regulations or practices.

"'(15) Whenever the commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country, the commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine: (a) to suspend the operation of any or all rules, regulations, or practices then established with respect to car service for such time as may be determined by the commission; (b) to make such just and reasonable directions with respect to car service without regard to the ownership as between carriers of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, during such emergency as in its opinion will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, upon such terms of compensation as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; (c) to require such joint or common use of terminals, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminals, as in its opinion will best meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; and (d) to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits, at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them. In time of war or threatened war the President may certify to the commission that it is essential to the national defense and security that certain traffic shall have preference or priority in transportation, and the commission shall, under the power herein conferred, direct that such preference or priority be afforded.

"'(16) Whenever the commission is of opinion that any carrier by railroad subject to this act is for any reason unable to transport the traffic offered it so as properly to serve the public, it may, upon the same procedure as provided in paragraph (15), make such just and reasonable directions with respect to the handling, routing, and movement of the traffic of such carrier and its distribution over other lines of roads, as in the opinion of the commission will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable.

"'(17) The directions of the commission as to car service and to the matters referred to in paragraphs (15) and (16) may be made through and by such agents or agencies as the commission shall designate and appoint for that purpose. It shall be the duty of all carriers by railroad subject to this act, and of their officers, agents, and employees, to obey strictly and conform promptly to such orders or directions of the commission, and in case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, receiver, or operating trustee to comply with any such order or direction such carrier, receiver, or trustee shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each such offense and $50 for each and every day of the continuance of such offense, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the right of a State, in the exercise of its police power, to require just and reasonable freight and passenger service for intrastate business, except in so far as such requirement is inconsistent with any lawful order of the commission made under the provisions of this act.

"'(18) After 90 days after this paragraph takes effect no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall undertake the extension of its line of railroad, or the construction of a new line of railroad, or shall acquire or operate any line of railroad, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transportation under this act over or by means of such additional or extended line of railroad, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line of railroad, and no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall abandon all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity permit of such abandonment.

"'(19) The application for and issuance of any such certificate shall be under such rules and regulations as to hearings and other matters as the commission may from time to time prescribe, and the provisions of this act shall apply to all such proceedings. Upon receipt of any application for such certificate the commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to and a copy filed with the governor of each State in which such additional or extended line of railroad is proposed to be constructed or operated, or all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, is proposed to be abandoned, with the right to be heard as hereinafter provided with respect to the hearing of complaints or the issuance of securities; and said notice shall also be published for three consecutive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in each county in or through which said line of railroad is constructed or operates.

"'(20) The commission shall have power to issue such certificate as prayed for, or to refuse to issue it, or to issue it for a portion or portions of a line of railroad, or extension thereof, described in the application, or for the partial exercise only of such right or privilege, and may attach to the issuance of the certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. From and after issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier by railroad may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, operation, or abandonment covered thereby. Any construction, operation, or abandonment contrary to the provisions of this paragraph or of paragraph (18) or (19) of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the commission, any commission or regulating body of the State or States affected, or any party in interest; and any carrier which, or any director, officer, receiver, operating trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such carrier, who knowingly authorizes, consents to, or permits any violation of the provisions of this paragraph or of paragraph (18) of this section, shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years, or both.

"'(21) The commission may, after hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, authorize or require by order any carrier by railroad subject to this act, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with safe and adequate facilities for performing as a common carrier its car service as that term is used in this act, and to extend its line or lines: Provided, That no such authorization or order shall be made unless the commission finds, as to such extension, that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension or facilities that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public. Any carrier subject to this act which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the commission made in pursuance of this paragraph shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each day during which such refusal or neglect continues, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"'(22) The authority of the commission conferred by paragraphs (18) to (21), both inclusive, shall not extend to the construction or abandonment of spur, industrial, team, switching or side tracks, located or to be located wholly within one State, or of street, suburban, or interurban electric railways, which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation.'

"SEC. 403. The fifteenth and sixteenth paragraphs of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, added to such section by the act entitled 'An act to amend the act to regulate commerce, as amended, and for other purposes,' approved August 10, 1917, are hereby amended by inserting '(23)' at the beginning of such fifteenth paragraph and '(24)' at the beginning of such sixteenth paragraph.

"SEC. 404. Section 2 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property or the transmission of intelligence, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation or transmission of a like kind of traffic or message under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.'

"SEC. 405. The first paragraph of section 3 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning thereof.

"Section 3 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by adding after the first paragraph a new paragraph to read as follows:

"'(2) From and after July 1, 1920, no carrier by railroad subject to the provisions of this act shall deliver or relinquish possession at destination of any freight transported by it until all tariff rates and charges thereon have been paid, except under such rules and regulations as the commission may from time to time prescribe to assure prompt payment of all such rates and charges and to prevent unjust discrimination: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not be construed to prohibit any carrier from extending credit in connection with rates and charges on freight transported for the United States, for any department, bureau, or agency thereof, or for any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof, or for the District of Columbia.'

"The second paragraph of section 3 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(3) All carriers, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers or property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates, fares, and charges between such connecting lines, or unduly prejudice any such connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper.

"'(4) If the commission finds it to be in the public interest and to be practicable, without substantially impairing the ability of a carrier owning or entitled to the enjoyment of terminal facilities to handle its own business, it shall have power to require the use of any such terminal facilities, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminal, of any carrier, by another carrier or other carriers, on such terms and for such compensation as the carriers affected may agree upon, or, in the event of a failure to agree, as the commission may fix as just and reasonable for the use so required, to be ascertained on the principle controlling compensation in condemnation proceedings. Such compensation shall be paid or adequately secured before the enjoyment of the use may be commenced. If under this paragraph the use of such terminal facilities of any carrier is required to be given to another carrier or other carriers, and the carrier whose terminal facilities are required to be so used is not satisfied with the terms fixed for such use, or if the amount of compensation so fixed is not duly and promptly paid, the carrier whose terminal facilities have thus been required to be given to another carrier or other carriers shall be entitled to recover, by suit or action against such other carrier or carriers, proper damages for any injuries sustained by it as the result of compliance with such requirement, or just compensation for such use, or both, as the case may be.'

"SEC. 406. Section 4 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4. (1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, That upon application to the commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed; and if a circuitous rail line or route is, because of such circuity, granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct line or route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on its line, the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points; and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act by virtue of orders of the commission or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the commission and not yet acted upon, shall not be required to be changed by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the commission.

"'(2) Wherever a carrier by railroad shall in competition with a water route or routes reduce the rates on the carriage of any species of freight to or from competitive points it shall not be permitted to increase such rates unless after hearing by the commission it shall be found that such proposed increase rests upon changed conditions other than the elimination of water competition.'

"SEC. 407. The first paragraph of section 5 of the interstate-commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. (1) That, except upon specific approval by order of the commission as in this section provided, and except as provided in paragraph (16) of section 1 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That whenever the commission is of opinion, after hearing upon application of any carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property subject to this act, or upon its own initiative, that the division of their traffic or earnings, to the extent indicated by the commission, will be in the interest of better service to the public, or economy in operation, and will not unduly restrain competition, the commission shall have authority by order to approve and authorize, if assented to by all the carriers involved, such division of traffic or earnings, under such rules and regulations, and for such consideration as between such carriers and upon such terms and conditions, as shall be found by the commission to be just and reasonable in the premises.

"'(2) Whenever the commission is of opinion, after hearing, upon application of any carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property subject to this act, that the acquisition, to the extent indicated by the commission, by one of such carriers of the control of any other such carrier or carriers either under a lease or by the purchase of stock or in any other manner not involving the consolidation of such carriers into a single system for ownership and operation, will be in the public interest, the commission shall have authority by order to approve and authorize such acquisition, under such rules and regulations and for such consideration and on such terms and conditions as shall be found by the commission to be just and reasonable in the premises.

"'(3) The commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such orders, supplemental to any order made under paragraph (1) or (2), as it may deem necessary or appropriate.

"'(4) The commission shall as soon as practicable prepare and adopt a plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems. In the division of such railways into such systems under such plan, competition shall be preserved as fully as possible and wherever practicable the existing routes and channels of trade and commerce shall be maintained. Subject to the foregoing requirements, the several systems shall be so arranged that the cost of transportation as between competitive systems and as related to the values of the properties through which the service is rendered shall be the same, so far as practicable, so that these systems can employ uniform rates in the movement of competitive traffic and under efficient management earn substantially the same rate of return upon the value of their respective railway properties.

"'(5) When the commission has agreed upon a tentative plan, it shall give the same due publicity and upon reasonable notice, including notice to the governor of each State, shall hear all persons who may file or present objections thereto. The commission is authorized to prescribe a procedure for such hearings and to fix a time for bringing them to a close. After the hearings are at an end, the commission shall adopt a plan for such consolidation and publish the same; but it may at any time thereafter, upon its own motion or upon application, reopen the subject for such changes or modifications as in its judgment will promote the public interest. The consolidations herein provided for shall be in harmony with such plan.

"'(6) It shall be lawful for two or more carriers by railroad, subject to this act, to consolidate their properties or any part thereof, into one corporation for the ownership, management, and operation of the properties theretofore in separate ownership, management, and operation, under the following conditions:

"'(a) The proposed consolidation must be in harmony with and in furtherance of the complete plan of consolidation mentioned in paragraph (5) and must be approved by the commission;

"'(b) The bonds at par of the corporation which is to become the owner of the consolidated properties, together with the outstanding capital stock at par of such corporation, shall not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission. The value of the properties sought to be consolidated shall be ascertained by the commission under section 19a of this act, and it shall be the duty of the commission to proceed immediately to the ascertainment of such value for the properties involved in a proposed consolidation upon the filing of the application for such consolidation.

"'(c) Whenever two or more carriers propose a consolidation under this section, they shall present their application therefor to the commission, and thereupon the commission shall notify the governor of each State in which any part of the properties sought to be consolidated is situated and the carriers involved in the proposed consolidation, of the time and place for a public hearing. If after such hearing the commission finds that the public interest will be promoted by the consolidation and that the conditions of this section have been or will be fulfilled, it may enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation, with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, and thereupon such consolidation may be effected, in accordance with such order, if all the carriers involved assent thereto, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

"'(7) The power and authority of the commission to approve and authorize the consolidation of two or more carriers shall extend and apply to the consolidation of four express companies into the American Railway Express Co., a Delaware corporation, if application for such approval and authority is made to the commission within 30 days after the passage of this amendatory act; and pending the decision of the commission such consolidation shall not be dissolved.

"'(8) The carriers affected by any order made under the foregoing provisions of this section and any corporation organized to effect a consolidation approved and authorized in such order shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the "antitrust laws," as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints or prohibitions by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by any order made under and pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section.'

"SEC. 408. The paragraph of section 5 of the interstate commerce act, added to such section by section 11 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended by inserting '(9)' at the beginning thereof.

"The two paragraphs of section 11 of such act of August 24, 1912, which follow the paragraph added by such section to section 5 of the interstate commerce act, are hereby made a part of section 5 of the interstate commerce act. The first paragraph so made a part of section 5 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(10)' at the beginning thereof, and the second such paragraph is hereby amended by inserting '(11)' at the beginning thereof.

"SEC. 409. Section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, '(5)' at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, '(6)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph, '(7)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph, '(8)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, '(9)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph, '(10)' at the beginning of the tenth paragraph, '(11)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph, '(12)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph, and '(13)' at the beginning of the thirteenth paragraph.

"SEC. 410. The third paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That the commission is hereby authorized to make suitable rules and regulations for the simplification of schedules of rates, fares, charges, and classifications and to permit in such rules and regulations the filing of an amendment of or change in any rate, fare, charge, or classification without filing complete schedules covering rates, fares, charges, or classifications not changed if, in its judgment, not inconsistent with the public interest.'

"SEC. 411. The seventh paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by striking out the proviso at the end.

"SEC. 412. The two paragraphs under (a) of the thirteenth paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended so as to be combined into one paragraph to read as follows:

"'(a) To establish physical connection between the lines of the rail carrier and the dock at which interchange of passengers or property is to be made by directing the rail carrier to make suitable connection between its line and a track or tracks which have been constructed from the dock to the limits of the railroad right of way, or by directing either or both the rail and water carrier, individually or in connection with one another, to construct and connect with the lines of the rail carrier a track or tracks to the dock. The commission shall have full authority to determine and prescribe the terms and conditions upon which these connecting tracks shall be operated, and it may, either in the construction or the operation of such tracks, determine what sum shall be paid to or by either carrier: Provided, That construction required by the commission under the provisions of this paragraph shall be subject to the same restrictions as to findings of public convenience and necessity and other matters as is construction required under section 1 of this act.'

"SEC. 413. Paragraph (c) of the thirteenth paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(c) To establish proportional rates, or maximum, or minimum, or maximum and minimum proportional rates, by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply. By proportional rates are meant those which differ from the corresponding local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.'

"SEC. 414. Section 10 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, and '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, and by inserting after the words 'transportation of passengers or property,' in the proviso in the first paragraph thereof, the words 'or the transmission of intelligence.'

"SEC. 415. Section 12 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, '(5)' at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, '(6)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph, and '(7)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph.

"'(3) Whenever in any investigation under the provisions of this act, or in any investigation instituted upon petition of the carrier concerned, which petition is hereby authorized to be filed, there shall be brought in issue any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice made or imposed by authority of any State, or initiated by the President during the period of Federal control, the commission, before proceeding to hear and dispose of such issue, shall cause the State or States interested to be notified of the proceeding. The commission may confer with the authorities of any State having regulatory jurisdiction over the class of persons and corporations subject to this act with respect to the relationship between rate structures and practices of carriers subject to the jurisdiction of such State bodies and of the commission; and to that end is authorized and empowered, under rules to be prescribed by it, and which may be modified from time to time, to hold joint hearings with any such State regulating bodies on any matters wherein the commission is empowered to act and where the rate-making authority of a State is or may be affected by the action taken by the commission. The commission is also authorized to avail itself of the cooperation, services, records, and facilities of such State authorities in the enforcement of any provision of this act.

"'(4) Whenever in any such investigation the commission, after full hearing, finds that any such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate or foreign commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, which is hereby forbidden and declared to be unlawful, it shall prescribe the rate, fare, or charge, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum, thereafter to be charged, and the classification, regulation, or practice thereafter to be observed, in such manner as, in its judgment, will remove such advantage, preference, prejudice, or discrimination. Such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be observed while in effect by the carriers parties to such proceeding affected thereby, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.'

"SEC. 417. Section 14 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, and '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph.

"SEC. 418. The first four paragraphs of section 15 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. (1) That whenever, after full hearing, upon a complaint made as provided in section 13 of this act, or after full hearing under an order for investigation and hearing made by the commission on its own initiative, either in extension of any pending complaint or without any complaint whatever, the commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge whatsoever demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers subject to this act for the transportation of persons or property or for the transmission of messages as defined in the first section of this act, or that any individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice whatsoever of such carrier or carriers subject to the provisions of this act, is or will be unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or rates, fares, or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum, to be charged (or, in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, the maximum rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto), and what individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice is or will be just, fair, and reasonable, to be thereafter followed, and to make an order that the carrier or carriers shall cease and desist from such violation to the extent to which the commission finds that the same does or will exist, and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate, fare, or charge for such transportation or transmission other than the rate, fare, or charge so prescribed, or in excess of the maximum or less than the minimum so prescribed, as the case may be, and shall adopt the classification and shall conform to and observe the regulation or practice so prescribed.

"'(2) Except as otherwise provided in this act, all orders of the commission, other than orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than 30 days, and shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified period of time, according as shall be prescribed in the order, unless the same shall be suspended or modified or set aside by the commission, or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"'(3) The commission may, and it shall whenever deemed by it to be necessary or desirable in the public interest, after full hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative without a complaint, establish through routes, joint classifications, and joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportation of passengers or property, or the maxima or minima, or maxima and minima, to be charged (or, in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, the maximum rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto), and the divisions of such rates, fares, or charges as hereinafter provided, and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated; and this provision, except as herein otherwise provided, shall apply when one of the carriers is a water line. The commission shall not, however, establish any through route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge, between street electric passenger railways not engaged in the general business of transporting freight in addition to their passenger and express business, and railroads of a different character; nor shall the commission have the right to establish any route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge when the transportation is wholly by water, and any transportation by water affected by this act shall be subject to the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water.

"'(4) In establishing any such through route the commission shall not (except as provided in sec. 3, and except where one of the carriers is a water line), require any carrier by railroad, without its consent, to embrace in such route substantially less than the entire length of its railroad and of any intermediate railroad operated in conjunction and under a common management or control therewith, which lies between the termini of such proposed through route, unless such inclusion of lines would make the through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established: Provided, That in time of shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency declared by the commission it may (either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders without answer or other formal pleadings by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine) establish temporarily such through routes as in its opinion are necessary or desirable in the public interest.

"'(5) Transportation wholly by railroad of ordinary live stock in car-load lots destined to or received at public stockyards shall include all necessary service of unloading and reloading en route, delivery at public stockyards of inbound shipments into suitable pens, and receipt and loading at such yards of outbound shipments, without extra charge therefor to the shipper, consignee or owner, except in cases where the unloading or reloading en route is at the request of the shipper, consignee or owner, or to try an intermediate market, or to comply with quarantine regulations. The commission may prescribe or approve just and reasonable rules governing each of such excepted services. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to affect the duties and liabilities of the carriers now existing by virtue of law respecting the transportation of other than ordinary live stock, or the duty of performing service as to shipments other than those to or from public stockyards.

"'(6) Whenever, after full hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative, the commission is of opinion that the divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportation of passengers or property, are or will be unjust, unreasonable, inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial as between the carriers parties thereto (whether agreed upon by such carriers, or any of them, or otherwise established), the commission shall by order prescribe the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers, and in cases where the joint rate, fare, or charge was established pursuant to a finding or order of the commission and the divisions thereof are found by it to have been unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, the commission may also by order determine what (for the period subsequent to the filing of the complaint or petition or the making of the order of investigation) would have been the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers, and require adjustment to be made in accordance therewith. In so prescribing and determining the divisions of joint rates, fares and charges, the commission shall give due consideration, among other things, to the efficiency with which the carriers concerned are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their respective operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers; and also whether any particular participating carrier is an originating, intermediate, or delivering line, and any other fact or circumstance which would ordinarily, without regard to the mileage haul, entitle one carrier to a greater or less proportion than another carrier of the joint rate, fare or charge.

"'(7) Whenever there shall be filed with the commission any schedule stating a new individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or any new individual or joint classification, or any new individual or joint regulation or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge, the commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, and if it so orders without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice; and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the commission, upon filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than 120 days beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the commission may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If any such hearing can not be concluded within the period of suspension, as above stated, the commission may extend the time of suspension for a further period not exceeding 30 days, and if the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made at the expiration of such 30 days, the proposed change of rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period, but, in case of a proposed increased rate or charge for or in respect to the transportation of property, the commission may by order require the interested carrier or carriers to keep accurate account in detail of all amounts received by reason of such increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf such amounts are paid, and upon completion of the hearing and decision may by further order require the interested carrier or carriers to refund, with interest, to the persons in whose behalf such amounts were paid such portion of such increased rates or charges as by its decision shall be found not justified. At any hearing involving a rate, fare, or charge increased after January 1, 1910, or of a rate, fare, or charge sought to be increased after the passage of this act, the burden of proof to show that the increased rate, fare, or charge, or proposed increased rate, fare, or charge, is just and reasonable shall be upon the carrier, and the commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over all other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.'

"SEC. 419. The fifth paragraph of section 15 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(8)' at the beginning of such paragraph.

"SEC. 420. Section 15 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting after the fifth paragraph two new paragraphs, to read as follows:

"'(9) Whenever property is diverted or delivered by one carrier to another carrier contrary to routing instructions in the bill of lading, unless such diversion or delivery is in compliance with a lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission, such carriers shall, in a suit or action in any court of competent jurisdiction, be jointly and severally liable to the carrier thus deprived of its right to participate in the haul of the property for the total amount of the rate or charge it would have received had it participated in the haul of the property. The carrier to which the property is thus diverted shall not be liable in such suit or action if it can show, the burden of proof being upon it, that before carrying the property it had no notice, by bill of lading, waybill, or otherwise, of the routing instructions. In any judgment which may be rendered the plaintiff shall be allowed to recover against the defendant a reasonable attorney's fee to be taxed in the case.

"'(10) With respect to traffic not routed by the shipper, the commission may, whenever the public interest and a fair distribution of the traffic require, direct the route which such traffic shall take after it arrives at the terminus of one carrier or at a junction point with another carrier, and is to be there delivered to another carrier.'

"SEC. 421. Section 15 of the interstate commerce act is hereby further amended by inserting '(11)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph, '(12)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph, '(13)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, and '(14)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph.

"SEC. 422. The interstate commerce act is further amended by inserting after section 15 a new section to be known as section 15a and to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15a. (1) When used in this section the term "rates" means rates, fares, and charges, and all classications, regulations, and practices relating thereto; the term "carrier" means a carrier by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water, within the continental United States, subject to this act, excluding (a) sleeping-car companies and express companies, (b) street or suburban electric railways unless operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation, (c) interurban electric railways unless operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation or engaged in the general transportation of freight, and (d) any belt-line railroad, terminal switching railroad, or other terminal facility, owned exclusively and maintained, operated, and controlled by any State or political subdivision thereof; and the term "net railway operating income" means railway operating income, including in the computation thereof debits and credits arising from equipment rents and joint facility rents.

"'(2) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall initiate, modify, establish or adjust such rates so that carriers as a whole (or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) will, under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment, earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation: Provided, That the commission shall have reasonable latitude to modify or adjust any particular rate which it may find to be unjust or unreasonable, and to prescribe different rates for different sections of the country.

"'(3) The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon, and such percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission. In making such determination it shall give due consideration, among other things, to the transportation needs of the country and the necessity (under honest, efficient, and economical management of existing transportation facilities) of enlarging such facilities in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation: Provided, That during the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision in whole or in part for improvements, betterments, or equipment, which, according to the accounting system prescribed by the commission, are chargeable to capital account.

"'(4) For the purposes of this section, such aggregate value of the property of the carriers shall be determined by the commission from time to time and as often as may be necessary. The commission may utilize the results of its investigation under section 19a of this act, in so far as deemed by it available, and shall give due consideration to all the elements of value recognized by the law of the land for rate-making purposes, and shall give to the property investment account of the carriers only that consideration which under such law it is entitled to in establishing values for rate-making purposes.

Whenever pursuant to section 19a of this act the value of the railway property of any carrier held for and used in the service of transportation has been finally ascertained, the value so ascertained shall be deemed by the commission to be the value thereof for the purpose of determining such aggregate value.

"'(5) Inasmuch as it is impossible (without regulation and control in the interest of the commerce of the United States considered as a whole) to establish uniform rates upon competitive traffic which will adequately sustain all the carriers which are engaged in such traffic and which are indispensable to the communities to which they render the service of transportation, without enabling some of such carriers to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, it is hereby declared that any carrier which receives such an income so in excess of a fair return shall hold such part of the excess, as hereinafter prescribed, as trustee for, and shall pay it to, the United States.

"'(6) If, under the provisions of this section, any carrier receives for any year a net railway operating income in excess of 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held for and used by it in the service of transportation, one-half of such excess shall be placed in a reserve fund established and maintained by such carrier, and the remaining one-half thereof shall, within the first four months following the close of the period for which such computation is made, be recoverable by and paid to the commission for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a general railroad contingent fund as hereinafter described. For the purposes of this paragraph the value of the railway property and the net railway operating income of a group of carriers, which the commission finds are under common control and management and are operated as a single system, shall be computed for the system as a whole irrespective of the separate ownership and accounting returns of the various parts of such system. In the case of any carrier which has accepted the provisions of section 209 of this amendatory act the provisions of this paragraph shall not be applicable to the income for any period prior to September 1, 1920. The value of such railway property shall be determined by the commission in the manner provided in paragraph (4).

"'(7) For the purpose of paying dividends or interest on its stocks, bonds, or other securities, or rent for leased roads, a carrier may draw from the reserve fund established and maintained by it under the provisions of this section to the extent that its net railway operating income for any year is less than a sum equal to 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held for and used by it in the service of transportation, determined as provided in paragraph (6); but such fund shall not be drawn upon for any other purpose.

"'(8) Such reserve fund need not be accumulated and maintained by any carrier beyond a sum equal to 5 per cent of the value of its railway property determined as herein provided, and when such fund is so accumulated and maintained the portion of its excess income which the carrier is permitted to retain under paragraph (6) may be used by it for any lawful purpose.

"'(9) The commission shall prescribe rules and regulations for the determination and recovery of the excess income payable to it under this section, and may require such security and prescribe such reasonable terms and conditions in connection therewith as it may find necessary. The commission shall make proper adjustments to provide for the computation of excess income for a portion of a year and for a year in which a change in the percentage constituting a fair return or in the value of a carrier's railway property becomes effective.

"'(10) The general railroad contingent fund so to be recoverable by and paid to the commission and all accretions thereof shall be a revolving fund and shall be administered by the commission. It shall be used by the commission in furtherance of the public interest in railway transportation either by making loans to carriers to meet expenditures for capital account or to refund maturing securities originally issued for capital account, or by purchasing transportation equipment and facilities and leasing the same to carriers, as hereinafter provided. Any moneys in the fund not so employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or deposited in authorized depositaries of the United States subject to the rules promulgated from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury relating to Government deposits.

"'(11) A carrier may at any time make application to the commission for a loan from the general railroad contingent fund, setting forth the amount of the loan and the term for which it is desired, the purpose of the loan and the uses to which it will be applied, the present and prospective ability of the applicant to repay the loan and meet the requirements of its obligations in that regard, the character and value of the security offered, and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts and details as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of granting the loan applied for and the ability of the applicant to make good the obligation, as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"'(12) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the making, in whole or in part, of the proposed loan from the general railroad contingent fund is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant and the character and value of the security offered are such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to repay the loan within the time fixed therefor, and to meet its other obligations in connection with such loan, the commission may make a loan to the applicant from such railroad contingent fund, in such amount, for such length of time, and under such terms and conditions as it may deem proper. The commission shall also prescribe the security to be furnished, which shall be adequate to secure the loan. All such loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually to the commission. Such loans when repaid, and all interest paid thereon, shall be placed in the general railroad contingent fund.

"'(13) A carrier may at any time make application to the commission for the lease to it of transportation equipment or facilities, purchased from the general railroad contingent fund, setting forth the kind and amount of such equipment or facilities and the term for which it is desired to be leased, the uses to which it is proposed to put such equipment or facilities, the present and prospective ability of the applicant to pay the rental charges thereon and to meet the requirements of its obligations under the lease, and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts and details as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of leasing such equipment or facilities to the applicant as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"'(14) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the leasing to the applicant of such equipment or facilities, in whole or in part, is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant is such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to pay promptly the rental charges and meet its other obligations under such lease, the commission may lease such equipment or facilities purchased by it from the general railroad contingent fund, to the applicant for such length of time, and under such terms and conditions as it may deem proper. The rental charges provided in every such lease shall be at least sufficient to pay a return of 6 per cent per annum, plus allowance for depreciation determined as provided in paragraph (5) of section 20 of this act, upon the value of the equipment or facilities leased thereunder. All rental charges and other payments received by the commission in connection with such equipment and facilities, including amounts received under any sale thereof, shall be placed in the general railroad contingent fund.

"'(15) The commission may from time to time purchase, contract for the construction, repair and replacement of, and sell, equipment and facilities, and enter into and carry out contracts and other obligations in connection therewith, to the extent that moneys included in the general railroad contingent fund are available therefor, and in so far as necessary to enable it to secure and supply equipment and facilities to carriers whose applications therefor are approved under the provisions of this section, and to maintain and dispose of such equipment and facilities.

"'(16) The commission may from time to time prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this section respecting the making of loans and the lease of equipment and facilities.

"'(17) The provisions of this section shall not be construed as depriving shippers of their right to reparation in case of overcharges, unlawfully excessive or discriminatory rates, or rates excessive in their relation to other rates, but no shipper shall be entitled to recover upon the sole ground that any particular rate may reflect a proportion of excess income to be paid by the carrier to the commission in the public interest under the provisions of this section.

"'(18) Any carrier, or any corporation organized to construct and operate a railroad, proposing to undertake the construction and operation of a new line of railroad may apply to the commission for permission to retain for a period not to exceed 10 years all or any part of its earnings derived from such new construction in excess of the amount heretofore in this section provided, for such disposition as it may lawfully make of the same, and the commission may, in its discretion, grant such permission, conditioned, however, upon the completion of the work of construction within a period to be designated by the commission in its order granting such permission.'

"SEC. 423. The first paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of such paragraph.

"SEC. 424. The second paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(2)' at the beginning of such paragraph, and by striking out the last sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following as a new paragraph:

"'(3) All actions at law by carriers subject to this act for recovery of their charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after. All complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, unless the carrier, after the expiration of such 2 years or within 90 days before such expiration, begins an action for recovery of charges in respect of the same service, in which case such period of 2 years shall be extended to and including 90 days from the time such action by the carrier is begun. In either case the cause of action in respect of a shipment of property shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to accrue upon delivery or tender of delivery thereof by the carrier, and not after. A petition for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be filed in the district court or State court within one year from the date of the order, and not after.'

"SEC. 425. The third, fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs of section 16 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(4)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, '(5)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, '(6)' at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, and '(7)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph.

"SEC. 426. The seventh paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(8) Any carrier, any officer, representative, or agent of a carrier, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, or agent of either of them, who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any order made under the provisions of sections 3, 13, or 15 of this act shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $5,000 for each offense. Every distinct violation shall be a separate offense, and in case of a continuing violation each day shall be deemed a separate offense.'

"SEC. 427. The eighth and ninth paragraphs of section 16 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(9)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph and '(10)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph.

"SEC. 428. The tenth paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(11) The commission may employ such attorneys as it finds necessary for proper legal aid and service of the commission or its members in the conduct of their work, or for proper representation of the public interests in investigations made by it or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the commission's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the commission in any case in court; and the expenses of such employment shall be paid out of the appropriation for the commission.'

"SEC. 429. The eleventh and twelfth paragraphs of section 16 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(12)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph and '(13)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph.

"SEC. 430. Section 17 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph.

"SEC. 431. The second paragraph of section 17 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(2) The commission is hereby authorized by its order to divide the members thereof into as many divisions (each to consist of not less than three members) as it may deem necessary, which may be changed from time to time. Such divisions shall be denominated, respectively, division 1, division 2, etc. Any commissioner may be assigned to and may serve upon such division or divisions as the commission may direct, and the senior in service of the commissioners constituting any of said divisions shall act as chairman thereof. In case of vacancy in any division, or of absence or inability to serve thereon of any commissioner thereto assigned, the chairman of the commission or any commissioner designated by him for that purpose may temporarily serve on said division until the commission shall otherwise order.'

"SEC. 432. The third and fourth paragraphs of section 17 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph and '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph.

"The fifth and sixth paragraphs of such section are hereby repealed.

"The seventh paragraph of such section is hereby amended by inserting '(5)' at the beginning of such paragraph.

"SEC. 433. Section 18 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph and '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph.

"Section 19a of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(a)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(b)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(c)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph, '(d)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, '(e)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph, '(f)' at the beginning of the tenth paragraph, '(g)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph, '(h)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph, '(i)' at the beginning of the thirteenth paragraph, '(j)' at the beginning of the fourteenth paragraph, '(k)' at the beginning of the fifteenth paragraph, and '(l)' at the beginning of the sixteenth paragraph.

"SEC. 434. Section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, and '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph.

"SEC. 435. The fifth paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(5) The commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by carriers subject to the provisions of this act, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic, as well as of the receipts and expenditures of moneys. The commission shall, as soon as practicable, prescribe, for carriers subject to this act, the classes of property for which depreciation charges may properly be included under operating expenses, and the percentages of depreciation which shall be charged with respect to each of such classes of property, classifying the carriers as it may deem proper for this purpose. The commission may, when it deems necessary, modify the classes and percentages so prescribed. The carriers subject to this act shall not charge to operating expenses any depreciation charges on classes of property other than those prescribed by the commission, or charge with respect to any class of property a percentage of depreciation other than that prescribed therefor by the commission. No such carrier shall in any case include in any form under its operating or other expenses any depreciation or other charge or expenditure included elsewhere as a depreciation charge or otherwise under its operating or other expenses. The commission shall at all times have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by carriers subject to this act, and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto, and it shall be unlawful for such carriers to keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the commission, and it may employ special agents or examiners, who shall have authority under the order of the commission to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers. This provision shall apply to receivers of carriers and operating trustees. The provisions of this section shall also apply to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, kept during the period of Federal control, and placed by the President in the custody of carriers subject to this act.'

"SEC. 436. The sixth paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(6)' at the beginning of such paragraph.

"The seventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by striking out 'Par. 7,' at the beginning of such paragraph and inserting '(7)' in lieu thereof.

"The eighth to twelfth paragraphs, inclusive, of section 20 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(8)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, '(9)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph, '(10)' at the beginning of the tenth paragraph, '(11)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph, and '(12)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph.

"SEC. 437. The eleventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting immediately before the first proviso thereof the following:

"'Provided, That if the loss, damage, or injury occurs while the property is in the custody of a carrier by water the liability of such carrier shall be determined by and under the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water, and the liability of the initial carrier shall be the same as that of such carrier by water.'

"SEC. 438. The third proviso of the eleventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act (not counting the proviso added by section 437 of this act) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such common carrier to provide by rule, contract, regulation, or otherwise a shorter period for giving notice of claims than 90 days, for the filing of claims than four months, and for the institution of suits than two years, such period for institution of suits to be computed from the day when notice in writing is given by the carrier to the claimant that the carrier has disallowed the claim or any part or parts thereof specified in the notice.'

"SEC. 439. The interstate commerce act is further amended by inserting therein a new section between section 20 and section 21, to be designted section 20a, and to read as follows:

"'SEC. 20a. (1) That as used in this section the term "carrier" means a common carrier by railroad (except a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway which is not operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation) which is subject to this act, or any corporation organized for the purpose of engaging in transportation by railroad subject to this act.

"'(2) From and after 120 days after this section takes effect it shall be unlaful for any carrier to issue any share of capital stock or any bond or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of the carrier (hereinafter in this section collectively termed "securities") or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise, in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof, or of the proposed assumption of obligation or liability in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, the commission by order authorizes such issue or assumption. The commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue or assumption (a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose.

"'(3) The commission shall have power by its order to grant or deny the application as made, or to grant it in part and deny it in part, or to grant it with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as the commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the premises, and may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may deem necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any previous order as to the particular purposes, uses, and extent to which, or the conditions under which, any securities so theretofore authorized or the proceeds thereof may be applied, subject always to the requirements of the foregoing paragraph (2).

"'(4) Every application for authority shall be made in such form and contain such matters as the commission may prescribe. Every such application, as also every certificate of notification hereinafter provided for, shall be made under oath, signed and filed on behalf of the carrier by its president, a vice president, auditor, comptroller, or other executive officer having knowledge of the matters therein set forth and duly designated for that purpose by the carrier.

"'(5) Whenever any securities set forth and described in any application for authority or certificate of notification as pledged or held unencumbered in the treasury of the carrier shall, subsequent to the filing of such application or certificate, be sold, pledged, repledged, or otherwise disposed of by the carrier, such carrier shall, within 10 days after such sale, pledge, repledge, or other disposition, file with the commission a certificate of notification to that effect, setting forth therein all such facts as may be required by the commission.

"'(6) Upon receipt of any such application for authority the commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to and a copy filed with the governor of each State in which the applicant carrier operates. The railroad commissions, public service or utilities commissions, or other appropriate State authorities of the State shall have the right to make before the commission such representations as they may deem just and proper for preserving and conserving the rights and interests of their people and the States, respectively, involved in such proceeding. The commission may hold hearings, if it sees fit, to enable it to determine its decision upon the application for authority.

"'(7) The jurisdiction conferred upon the commission by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and a carrier may issue securities and assume obligations or liabilities in accordance with the provisions of this section without securing approval other than as specfied herein.

"'(8) Nothing herein shall be construed to imply any guaranty or obligation as to such securities on the part of the United States.

"'(9) The foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply to notes to be issued by the carrier maturing not more than two years after the date thereof and aggregating (together with all other then outstanding notes of a maturity of two years or less) not more than 5 per cent of the par value of the securities of the carrier then outstanding. In the case of securities having no par value, the par value for the purposes of this paragraph shall be the fair market value as of the date of issue. Within 10 days after the making of such notes the carrier issuing the same shall file with the commission a certificate of notification, in such form as may from time to time be determined and prescribed by the commission, setting forth as nearly as may be the same matters as those required in respect of applications for authority to issue other securities: Provided, That in any subsequent funding of such notes the provisions of this section respecting other securities shall apply.

"'(10) The commission shall require periodical or special reports from each carrier hereafter issuing any securities, including such notes, which shall show, in such detail as the commission may require, the disposition made of such securities and the application of the proceeds thereof.

"'(11) Any security issued or any obligation or liability assumed by a carrier, for which under the provisions of this section the authorization of the commission is required, shall be void, if issued or assumed without such authorization therefor having first been obtained, or if issued or assumed contrary to any term or condition of such order of authorization as modified by any order supplemental thereto entered prior to such issuance or assumption; but no security issued or obligation or liability assumed in accordance with all the terms and conditions of such an order of authorization therefor as modified by any order supplemental thereto entered prior to such issuance or assumption shall be rendered void because of failure to comply with any provision of this section relating to procedure and other matters preceding the entry of such order of authorization. If any security so made void, or any security in respect to which the assumption of obligation or liability is so made void, is acquired by any person for value and in good faith and without notice that the issue or assumption is void, such person may in a suit or action in any court of competent jurisdiction hold jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the damage sustained by him in respect thereof, the carrier which issued the security so made void, or assumed the obligation or liability so made void, and its directors, officers, attorneys, and other agents, who participated in any way in the authorizing, issuing, hypothecating, or selling of the security so made void or in the authorizing of the assumption of the obligation or liability so made void. In case any security so made void was directly acquired from the carrier issuing it the holder may at his option rescind the transaction and upon the surrender of the security recover the consideration given therefor. Any director, officer, attorney, or agent of the carrier who knowingly assents to or concurs in any issue of securities or assumptions of obligation or liability forbidden by this section, or any sale or other disposition of securities contrary to the provisions of the commission's order or orders in the premises, or any application not authorized by the commission of the funds derived by the carrier through such sale or other disposition of such securities, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"'(12) After December 31, 1921, it shall be unlawful for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one carrier, unless such holding shall have been authorized by order of the commission, upon due showing, in form and manner prescribed by the commission, that neither public nor private interests will be adversely affected thereby. After this section takes effect it shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any carrier to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in respect of the negotiation, hypothecation, or sale of any securities issued or to be issued by such carrier, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the making or paying of any dividends of an operating carrier from any funds properly included in capital account. Any violation of these provisions shall be a misdemeanor, and on conviction in any United States court having jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.'

"SEC. 440. Section 24 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. That the commission is hereby enlarged so as to consist of 11 members, with terms of seven years, and each shall receive $12,000 compensation annually. The qualifications of the members and the manner of payment of their salaries shall be as already provided by law. Such enlargement of the commission shall be accomplished through appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of two additional Interstate Commerce Commissioners, one for a term expiring December 31, 1923, and one for a term expiring December 31, 1924. The terms of the present commissioners, or of any successor appointed to fill a vacancy caused by the death or resignation of any of the present commissioners, shall expire as heretofore provided by law. Their successors and the successors of the additional commissioners herein provided for shall be appointed for the full term of seven years, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Not more than six commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. Hereafter the salary of the secretary of the commission shall be $7,500 a year.'

"SEC. 441. The Interstate commerce act is hereby further amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections, to read as follows:

"'SEC. 25 (1) That every common carrier by water in foreign commerce, whose vessels are registered under the laws of the United States, shall file with the commission, within 30 days after this section becomes effective and regularly thereafter as changes are made, a schedule or schedules showing for each of its steam vessels intended to load general cargo at ports in the United States for foreign destinations (a) the ports of loading, (b) the dates upon which such vessels will commence to receive freight and dates of sailing, (c) the route and itinerary such vessels will follow and the ports of call for which cargo will be carried.

"'(2) Upon application of any shipper a carrier by railroad shall make request for, and the carrier by water shall upon receipt of such request name, a specific rate applying for such sailing, and upon such commodity as shall be embraced in the inquiry, and shall name in connection with such rate, port charges, if any, which accrue in addition to the vessel's rates and are not otherwise published by the railway as in addition to or absorbed in the railway rate. Vessel rates, if conditioned upon quantity of shipment, must be so stated and separate rates may be provided for carload and less than carload shipments. The carrier by water, upon advices from a carrier by railroad, stating that the quoted rate is firmly accepted as applying upon a specifically named quantity of any commodity, shall, subject to such conditions as the commission by regulation may prescribe, make firm reservation from unsold space in such steam vessel as shall be required for its transportation and shall so advise the carrier by railroad, in which advices shall be included the latest available information as to prospective sailing date of such vessel.

"'(3) As the matters so required to be stated in such schedule or schedules are changed or modified from time to time, the carrier shall file with the commission such changes or modifications as early as practicable after such modification is ascertained. The commission is authorized to make and publish regulations not inconsistent herewith governing the manner and form in which such carriers are to comply with the foregoing provisions. The commission shall cause to be published in compact form, for the information of shippers of commodities throughout the country, the substance of such schedules, and furnish such publications to all railway carriers subject to this act, in such quantities that railway carriers may supply to each of their agents who receive commodities for shipment in such cities and towns as may be specified by the commission, a copy of said publication; the intent being that each shipping community sufficiently important, from the standpoint of the export trade, to be so specified by the commission shall have opportunity to know the sailings and routes, and to ascertain the transportation charges of such vessels engaged in foreign commerce. Each railway carrier to which such publication is furnished by the commission is hereby required to distribute the same as aforesaid and to maintain such publication as it is issued from time to time, in the hands of its agents. The commission is authorized to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith respecting the distribution and maintenance of such publications in the several communities so specified as will further the intent of this section.

"'(4) When any consignor delivers a shipment of property to any of the places so specified by the commission, to be delivered by a railway carrier to one of the vessels upon which space has been reserved at a specified rate previously ascertained, as provided herein, for the transportation by water from and for a port named in the aforesaid schedule, the railway carrier shall issue a through bill of lading to the point of destination. Such bill of lading shall name separately the charge to be paid for the railway transportation, water transportation, and port charges, if any, not included in the rail or water transportation charge; but the carrier by railroad shall not be liable to the consignor, consignee, or other person interested in the shipment after its delivery to the vessel. The commission shall, in such manner as will preserve for the carrier by water the protection of limited liability provided by law, make such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as will prescribe the form of such through bill of lading. In all such cases it shall be the duty of the carrier by railroad to deliver such shipment to the vessel as a part of its undertaking as a common carrier.

"'(5) The issuance of a through bill of lading covering shipments provided for herein shall not be held to constitute "an arrangement for continuous carriage or shipment" within the meaning of this act.

"'SEC. 26. That the commission may, after investigation, order any carrier by railroad subject to this act, within a time specified in the order, to install automatic train-stop or train-control devices or other safety devices, which comply with specifications and requirements prescribed by the commission, upon the whole or any part of its railroad, such order to be issued and published at least two years before the date specified for its fulfillment: Provided, That a carrier shall not be held to be negligent because of its failure to install such devices upon a portion of its railroad not included in the order; and any action arising because of an accident happening upon such portion of its railroad shall be determined without consideration of the use of such devices upon another portion of its railroad. Any common carrier which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the commission made under the authority conferred by this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each day that such refusal or neglect continues, which shall accrue to the United States, and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"'SEC. 27. That this act may be cited as the "interstate-commerce act."'

"TITLE V.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

"SEC. 500. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation.

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, with the object of promoting, encouraging, and developing inland waterway transportation facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, to investigate the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of such waterways; to investigate the subject of water terminals, both for inland waterway traffic and for through traffic by water and rail, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment, and appliances in connection therewith, and also railroad spurs and switches connecting with such terminals, with a view to devising the types most appropriate for different locations, and for the more expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities, cities, and towns regarding the appropriate location of such terminals, and to cooperate with them in the preparation of plans for suitable terminal facilities; to investigate the existing status of water transportation upon the different inland waterways of the country, with a view to determining whether such waterways are being utilized to the extent of their capacity, and to what extent they are meeting the demands of traffic, and whether the water carriers utilizing such waterways are interchanging traffic with the railroads; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage inland water transportation. It shall also be the province and duty of the Secretary of War to compile, publish, and distribute, from time to time, such useful statistics, data, and information concerning transportation on inland waterways as he may deem to be of value to the commercial interests of the country.

"The words 'inland waterway' as used in this section shall be construed to include the Great Lakes.

"SEC. 501. The effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to January 1, 1921: Provided, That such extension shall not apply in the case of any corporation organized after January 12, 1918.

"SEC. 502. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of the act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment has been rendered."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

TERMINATION OF FEDERAL CONTROL.
(Section 200 of the conference bill.)

The House bill in section 200, in connection with the termination of Federal control, did not repeal the Federal-control act, but specified the powers conferred upon the President by such act, which he should no longer exercise after the termination of Federal control. The Senate bill repealed the Federal-control act and sought by general language to "continue and extend" the powers granted by that act, in so far as necessary for the settlement of matters arising out of Federal control. The conferees, in section 200 of the conference bill, adopted the House method of dealing with this question.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED BOATS AND INLAND WATERWAYS.

Section 201 of the House bill transferred to the Secretary of War on the termination of Federal control the transportation facilities acquired by the United States in pursuance of the Federal control act, which are now being operated on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers and the Erie Canal. The Senate amendment transferred these transportation facilities to the Shipping Board. The conferees in section 201 of the conference bill recommend the procedure contained in the House bill with the insertion of language making it clear that the Secretary of War is to operate such transportation facilities, so that the lines of inland water transportation established by the President during Federal control shall be continued, and authorizing the Secretary of War to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between the lines so operated by him and other rail or water carriers. The Senate amendment also contained provisions transferring to the Shipping Board boats constructed by or authorized to be constructed for the United States for the navigation of the upper Mississippi. The House bill made no provision for these transportation facilities, inasmuch as they are already under the control of the Secretary of War, but the conferees recommend the insertion of a provision that when the possession of these transportation facilities reverts to the United States, at or before the expiration of the contract under which they are now being operated, they shall continue to be operated by the Secretary of War, so as to provide facilities for water carriage on the upper Mississippi.

SETTLEMENT OF MATTERS ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

Section 202 of the House bill directed the President to settle and wind up all matters, including compensation, arising out of and incident to Federal control, and for these purposes made available all unexpended balances of the revolving fund created by the Federal control act and of the $750,000,000 deficiency appropriation of June 30, 1919, and also all moneys derived from the operation of carriers or otherwise arising out of Federal control. The Senate amendment contained no such reference to appropriations and contained no explicit direction to the President to settle Federal control matters. The conferees recommend in section 202 of the conference bill the retention of the House provisions, adding an appropriation of $200,000,000 in order to enable the President to comply with the provision in section 207 of the conference bill that the carriers, when restored to their own operation, shall have on hand at least one-half a month's working capital, which provision was contained in section 2 of the Senate amendment.

COMPENSATION OF CARRIERS WITH WHICH NO CONTRACT WAS MADE.
(Section 203 of conference bill.)

Section 2 of the Federal control act authorizes the President, in the case of any carrier with which no contract for compensation had been made, to pay to such carrier not exceeding 90 per cent of the estimated amount of compensation. The Senate amendment in section 2 required the President to pay to the carrier in such cases the total amount of just compensation or standard return provided for under the Federal control act, in all cases where necessary to pay interest upon indebtedness. The House bill contained no such provision. The conference bill recommends the insertion of section 203 of the conference bill, which requires the President, where no contract for compensation has been made, to pay to the carrier so much of the amount he estimates as just compensation as may be necessary to enable the carrier to pay interest, taxes, and other corporate expenses accruing during the period for which compensation is reckoned and dividends for the same period. The section also authorizes the President to pay to such carrier up to 100 per cent of the estimated amount of such compensation in order to permit of prompt settlement of matters arising out of Federal control. The section also contains provisions that the acceptance of any payments thereunder shall obligate the carrier to repay to the United States with 6 per cent interest the amount by which the sums advanced exceed the sum found due when compensation is finally determined.

REIMBURSEMENT OF DEFICITS DURING FEDERAL CONTROL.

The Senate amendment in section 5 contained a provision that railroads not operated by the Government during the period of Federal control should be paid the entire amount of their deficit during the Federal control period. No such provision was contained in the House bill. The conferees recommend, in section 204 of the conference bill, that carriers which sustained a deficit in railway operating income under their own operation during the period of Federal control shall be paid the amount by which such deficit exceeds the corresponding deficit during the test period. The computation of the amount payable is made by determining the deficit on income for each month of the Federal control period, during which the carrier operated its own line, and for the three corresponding months of the test period averaged together. In the case of a carrier which was in operation for less than a year during the test period, the amount payable is the entire amount of the deficit during the period of Federal control.

CAUSES OF ACTION ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

The House bill in section 204 provided for the bringing of suits against the United States based on causes of action arising out of the possession, use, or operation by the President of railroads during Federal control. Such actions were to be brought against an agent designated by the President and process was to be served upon the local agents of the railroad in respect to whose operation the cause of action arose, if a contract was made with the carrier for the conduct of litigation arising out of operation during Federal control. Provision was also made, where no such contract has been made, for service of process upon agents or officers designated by the President. The House bill also provided that suits of the character above described pending at the termination of Federal control should not abate but might be prosecuted to final judgment, substituting the agent designated by the President as defendant. The Senate amendment in section 1 provided that all actions based on causes of action growing out of the possession, use, control, or operation by the President might be brought against the United States and process served upon the United States District Attorney. The Senate amendment also provided for filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission reparation claims based on the unlawful collection of rates during Federal control. The conferees recommend in section 206 of the conference bill substantially the method of the House bill, adding a paragraph covering reparation claims and providing for the payment of final judgments out of the revolving fund, created by section 210 for the purpose of making loans during the transition period.

REFUNDING OF CARRIERS' INDEBTEDNESS TO THE UNITED STATES.

Section 205 of the House bill provided that the President should ascertain the amount of indebtedness of each carrier to the United States, incurred for additions and betterments made during Federal control and properly chargeable to capital account, and also the amount of the indebtedness of the United States to each carrier arising out of Federal control. These amounts were required to be set off against each other to the extent permitted under the terms of the "standard contract" with the carriers relative to deductions and compensation. Such "standard contract" provides that the set off shall not be made in such manner as to deprive the carrier of sums necessary to pay fixed charges, taxes, and other corporate charges and expenses, but gives the President power, if he chooses, to make a set off, even though this might leave the carrier with no funds with which to pay dividends. The remaining amount of the indebtedness of the carrier on account of such additions and betterments was to be payable in 10 equal parts, one of such parts to be payable annually, beginning at the expiration of five years after the termination of Federal control. Any other indebtedness of the carrier was to be evidenced by notes payable on demand.

The Senate amendment provided for funding, without any right of set off, for a period of 10 years, or a shorter period, at the option of the carrier, of all the indebtedness to the United States incurred for additions and betterments, or for advances made by the United States, or incurred to pay off any carriers' indebtedness properly chargeable to capital account. Any remaining indebtedness of the carrier to the United States was to be evidenced by notes payable on demand, with the right in the President to set off against such amount any indebtedness of the United States to the carrier, to the extent permitted by the terms of the "standard contract," but no such set off was to be made unless the carrier had received such sums as were necessary to enable it to pay dividends at the regular rate of dividends paid during Federal control, and, in addition, sums necessary to provide the carrier with working capital in amount not less than one month's operating expenses, or due on account of materials and supplies not retained in kind.

The conference bill in section 207 provides that the right of set-off, instead of being first made against the indebtedness on open account, as provided in the Senate amendment, or against the indebtedness for additions and betterments, as provided in the House bill, may be made against either or both of these classes of indebtedness as the President may determine, and to the extent determined by him, subject to the limitation that such right of set-off can not be exercised beyond the extent permitted under the terms of the "standard contract," nor so as to prevent the carrier from having sums required for dividends declared and paid during Federal control, and working capital of not less than one-half a month's operating expenses. The conference bill also provides that the funding of the remaining indebtedness for additions and betterments shall be for a period of 10 years from the termination of Federal control, or a shorter period, at the option of the carrier, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, subject to the right of the carrier to pay before it is due the whole or any part of such indebtedness. Under the conference bill any other indebtedness is to be evidenced by notes payable in one year or a shorter period, at the option of the carrier.

EXISTING RATES TO CONTINUE IN EFFECT.

Section 206 of the House bill provided that all rates and divisions of joint rates in effect on the termination of Federal control should continue in force and effect until changed by State or Federal authority, respectively, or pursuant to authority of law. The Senate amendment provided that such rates and divisions of rates should remain in force until changed by competent authority. The conference bill, in section 208, adopts the House method of statement and provides that prior to the expiration of the guaranty period no rate shall be reduced without the approval of the commission.

GUARANTY TO CARRIERS AFTER TERMINATION OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

(1) Carriers included. The guaranty provided by section 207 of the House bill applied only to a carrier by railroad under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates, or which engaged as a common carrier in general transportation and competed for traffic with a railroad under Federal control. It also excluded from the guaranty a carrier which within 60 days after Federal control terminated did not file with the commission schedules embodying general increases in its rates. The Senate amendment in section 5 did not contain this latter requirement, but included within the guaranty the roads which had competed for traffic, or connected, with a railroad under Federal control. The conference bill in section 209 in substance adopts the Senate definition of carriers to whom the guaranty is to apply.

(2) Period of guaranty. The Senate amendment provided that schedules of rates filed with the commission within 60 days after Federal control terminated should become effective four months after being filed with such changes as might be ordered by the commission, provided that until the commission rendered its decision, or until the expiration of the four months' period the guaranty should be applicable, thus making it possible for the guaranty to expire before the new rates became effective. The House bill, in section 207, fixed as a definite guaranty period the first six months after the termination of Federal control. The conference bill in section 209 adopts the House period of guaranty.

(3) Amount of guaranty. The House bill, in section 207, guaranteed to each carrier entitled to a guaranty that its railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole should not be less than the average of such income for the three corresponding periods of six months during the test period, and in case during the test period the carrier had a deficit in railway operating income, the guaranty should be the amount by which any deficit in railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole exceeds the deficit for the three corresponding periods during the test period, averaged together. The Senate amendment provided that in case of a carrier which had made with the President a contract for compensation under the Federal control act, the guaranty should be of an operating income for the guaranty period proportionate to the compensation so agreed upon, but that in respect to those carriers with which no contract had been made, and with respect to carriers not under Federal control, the guaranty should be based upon the railway operating income during the test period, and if the carrier had a deficit in the test period the guaranty should be against the entire deficit in operating expenses and taxes during the guaranty period.

The conference bill, in section 209, provides with respect to carriers with which a contract-fixing compensation has been made, that the railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half the amount named in such contract as annual compensation, including increases in such compensation provided for in section 4 of the Federal control act, relating to additions and betterments made by order of, or with the approval of, the President during the period of Federal control.

The conference bill provides with respect to carriers entitled to compensation under the Federal control act, with which such contract has not been made, that the railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half of the annual amount estimated by the President under the Federal control act, including the increases in such compensation provided in section 4 of the Federal control act. Provision is made that if the carrier does not accept the President's estimate and tries its remedy in the Court of Claims and it is there determined that a larger or smaller amount is due as compensation, the guaranty shall be increased or decreased accordingly.

With respect to any carrier, whether or not entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, with which such a contract has not been made and as to which the President has not made any estimate of compensation and which in the test period sustained a deficit in railway operating income, the conference bill provides that the guaranty shall be the amount by which the deficit for the guaranty period as a whole exceeds one-half its average annual deficit for the test period plus an amount equal to one-half the annual sum fixed by the President under section 4 of the Federal control act as interest on additions and betterments made by his order or with his approval during the period of Federal control.

With respect to a carrier not entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, which for the test period as a whole had an average annual railway operating income, the conference bill provides that the guaranty shall be not less than one-half of the average annual railway operating income of such carrier during the test period.

(4) Return of excess over guaranty: The Senate amendment, in section 5, provided that the guaranty should not be payable unless the carrier accepts in writing the provisions of the guaranty section. It further provided that if any carrier during the guaranty period received an income in excess of the guaranty it should pay such excess into the Treasury. The House bill contained no such provision. The conference bill, in section 209, adopts the Senate provision with the limitation that the carrier may retain out of the amount of any such excess such amounts as are necessary to enable it to pay its fixed charges accruing during the guaranty period.

(5) Computation of railway operating income: The House bill contained detailed provisions as to the computation of railway operating income and provided for necessary adjustments made necessary to make the income for the guaranty period properly comparable with the test period income as defined in the Federal control act. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. The conference bill, in section 209, accepts the House provisions.

(6) Advances: The House bill made provision for advances to the carrier during the guaranty period not in excess of the estimated amount of guaranty, to enable it to meet its fixed charges and operating expenses upon execution of properly secured contracts for repayment of any overpayments. The Senate bill contained no such provision which the conference bill retains.

(7) American Railway Express guaranty: The House bill also contained a provision guaranteeing the American Railway Express Co. against a deficit during the guaranty period. The Senate bill contained no such provision. The conference bill, in section 209, retains the House provision, with the limitation that there shall not be included in operating expenses so much of the charge for payment for express privileges to carriers on whose lines the express traffic is carried as is in excess of 50.25 per cent of gross express revenue. The conference bill also inserts a provision that any operating income earned by the American Railway Express Co. in excess of the guaranty shall be paid into the Treasury, the acceptance of this provision, in writing, being a condition of obtaining the guaranty.

NEW LOANS TO RAILROADS.

The House bill in section 208 created a revolving fund of $250,000,000 for the purpose of making loans to carriers during the transition period following the termination of Federal control. Detailed provision was made for the recommendation of the loans by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the making of such loans by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate amendment appropriated $500,000,000 for loans to railroads, without any provision as to how these loans should be made, or any limitation as to the time during which they might be made. The conference bill, in section 210, adopts the provisions of the House bill, but increases the amount of the revolving fund to $300,000,000.

DISPUTES BETWEEN CARRIERS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES AND SUBORDINATE OFFICIALS.

(Title III of conference bill.)

The House bill limited the disputes which were to be considered under its labor provisions to those involving employees who are members of certain specified railroad brotherhoods and shopmen's unions. The Senate amendment provided for the consideration of disputes of all employees and subordinate officials of carriers, organized or unorganized. The bill agreed to by the conferees provides for the adjustment of disputes of all railroad employees, not only members of the four brotherhoods or the shopmen's union, but also of other railroad labor organizations. Unorganized employees and employees of sleeping-car or express companies and subordinate officials are also included. The officials included within this last term are to be determined by the commission under the authorization of paragraph (5) of section 300.

The House bill established three adjustment boards, comprised of an equal number of the representatives of the specified railway brotherhoods and shopmen's unions and the railroads appointed directly by the employees and carriers. Such adjustment boards were authorized to receive disputes of any kind for consideration if both the railroad and the employees jointly agreed to submit the dispute to the consideration of the proper adjustment board. If the adjustment board failed or refused to decide the dispute, either half of the members of the board might refer it to a corresponding appeal commission, composed in the same manner as the adjustment board.

The Senate amendment placed disputes in two classes, those relating to wages and working conditions and those relating to grievances and matters of discipline. The latter class of disputes were to be considered by local regional boards of adjustment comprised of an equal number of representatives of labor and the carriers, appointed by the transportation board from nominees presented by the carriers and their employees. There was further created and established a committee of wages and working conditions, formed in the same manner. This committee had original jurisdiction over all disputes involving wages and working conditions and the power to amend or disapprove the decisions of the regional boards for the purpose of securing uniformity of practice. The Senate amendment provided special temporary tribunals for the consideration of disputes of subordinate officials. Finally, disputes as to grievances and matters of discipline which the regional boards failed to decide might be referred to the committee on wages and working conditions, and all decisions of the committee on wages and working conditions were denied effect until approved by the transportation board.

The conference bill (see section 302) permits the formation by agreement between the carriers and their employees of voluntary adjustment boards with jurisdiction over disputes involving grievances, rules, or working conditions. There is further established a railroad labor board composed of nine members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three from nominees offered by the carriers, three from nominees offered by the employees of the carriers, and three to be directly appointed and to be representatives of the public (see section 304). The railroad labor board has exclusive jurisdiction over disputes involving wages, and also of disputes involving grievances, disputes, and working conditions in case no adjustment board has been formed by the carriers and employees who are parties to such dispute. The railroad labor board has appellate jurisdiction upon its own motion or upon the request of an adjustment board, in case such adjustment board is formed but fails to decide such disputes.

The House bill provided for no representation of the public upon any of its boards or commissions. The Senate amendment subjected all decisions of its tribunals to review by a public board, the transportation board. The conference bill (see section 307 (c)) provided for appointment of members to represent the public along with those representing the carriers and employees upon its supreme tribunal, and, moreover, requires that though a decision may be reached by a majority vote, nevertheless a decision in respect to wages is not effective unless at least one of the public representatives concurs therein.

The House bill made it the duty of carriers and their employees to take all possible means to adjust their differences in the first instance before referring the dispute to any adjustment board. The Senate amendment had no provision upon this subject. The conference bill contains a declaration, similar to that in the House bill, directing the officials of a carrier and their employees to appoint representatives to confer over all matters of dispute. In case of the failure of such conference, the House bill provided that no dispute should come within the jurisdiction of an adjustment board unless both the carriers and the employees jointly agreed to submit it to the adjustment board. The Senate amendment permitted disputes to reach a regional board or the committee on wages and working conditions upon the application of either party to the dispute, but made no provision for any action by any tribunal upon its own initiative. The provisions of the conference bill (see section 307 (a) and (b)) permits action by the railroad labor board not only upon application of either party or by petition of unorganized employees but also upon the adjustment board's or the railroad labor board's own motion.

The House bill made permanent all decisions issued by the Railroad Administration or the adjustment boards in connection therewith in respect to wages and working conditions. The Senate amendment had no provision upon this subject. The bill of the conferees, however (see section 312), forbids the carrier to reduce wages agreed to under such decisions during the guaranty period only.

The House bill contained no enforcement provisions, but relied on the voluntary observance by the parties of all decisions made by them. A blanket penalty was contained in the House bill, but there were no corresponding duties save that representatives upon the boards and commissions "shall" reach a decision, to which the penalty applies. The Senate amendment made extensive use of criminal penalties to enforce all decisions of its tribunals and provided for a fine of $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months for any carrier or official thereof who fails to obey any decision of its tribunals and for any person who enters into a conspiracy to restrain the operation of trains in interstate commerce. The conference bill contains no penalty provisions for a violation of a decision of the railroad labor board, but provides that all decisions shall be given extensive publicity. There is a further provision—see section 313—that the railroad labor board may, after notice and hearing, determine whether any decision by an adjustment board has been violated by either party to which the decision applies. In case the railroad labor board determines that such violation occurs, it may make public such findings in such manner as it may determine.

The House bill provided for the transfer to the adjustment boards and appeal commissions of certain records of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, established under the Newlands Act, but both the House bill and Senate amendment permit the general jurisdiction of that board over all railroad labor disputes to remain. The conference bill, however, denies jurisdiction of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation over any dispute which may be adjusted by the adjustment boards or the Railroad Labor Board.

NATURAL GAS.

The House bill, in section 400, amended section 1 of the interstate commerce act so that the transportation of natural gas by pipe line was included within the jurisdiction of the commission. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. The conference bill, in section 400, continues the provisions of existing law under which such transportation of natural gas is not subject to the jurisdiction of the commission.

FREE PASSES BY CARRIERS.

The House bill, in section 400, amended the existing provisions of the interstate commerce act so as to put further restrictions on the right of carriers to issue free passes. The Senate amendment contained no such amendment of existing law. The conference bill strikes out the amendment contained in the House bill.

CAR SERVICE—REFRIGERATOR CARS.

Section 34 of the Senate amendment empowered the transportation board to require carriers to furnish refrigerator cars for the transportation of perishable commodities. The House bill contained no specific provision respecting refrigerator cars. Section 402 of the conference bill defines "car service" so as to include "special types of equipment," which term will embrace refrigerator cars, and makes it the duty of every carrier by railroad to furnish adequate car service.

CAR SERVICE—COAL CARS.

Section 402 of the House bill required carriers by rail to make just and reasonable distribution of cars for the transportation of coal among coal mines served by them, and, in time of car shortage, to maintain and apply just and reasonable ratings of such mines, and to count against each mine every car furnished to it. Section 34 of the Senate amendment required carriers by rail, during any period of car shortage, to make just, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory distribution of cars to coal mines, to establish regulations providing for rating such mines and the distribution of cars among them, to count against each mine every car furnished to it, and not to furnish cars in excess of such ratings, an exception being made in the case of cars used for coal necessary for the movement of trains. The provisions of the House bill were agreed to, and are contained in section 402 of the conference bill.

CAR SERVICE—POWER OF STATES.

Section 402 of the House bill provided "that nothing contained in this act shall impair the right of the State, in the exercise of its police power, to require just and reasonable freight and passenger service and the fair exchange and distribution of equipment for intrastate business." The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The conference bill provides in section 402, "That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the right of a State, in the exercise of its police power, to require just and reasonable freight and passenger service for intrastate business, except in so far as such requirement is inconsistent with any lawful order of the commission made under the provisions of this act."

CONSTRUCTION AND ABANDONMENT OF LINES OF RAILROADS.

The House bill in section 402 provided that the authority of the commission over the construction and abandonment of lines of railroads should not extend to any line located or to be located wholly within one State, or to any street car or electric interurban line. The Senate amendment specified that the authority of the transportation board in this connection "should not extend to the construction or abandonment of side tracks, spurs, industrial, team or switching tracks, located or to be located wholly within one State, or street, suburban, and interurban electric railways which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation." Section 402 of the conference bill adopts the Senate provision, substituting the commission for the transportation board, however.

JOINT USE OF TERMINALS.

Section 405 of the House bill provided that the commission might require the terminal of any carrier to be open to the traffic of other carriers upon such terms and for such compensation as the commission might prescribe. The Senate amendment, in section 11, provided that the transportation board might require one carrier to permit another carrier to use its "terminal, or other facilities including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminals," on such terms as the carriers might agree on or as the board might fix. Section 405 of the conference bill contains provisions on this subject similar to those in the Senate amendment. It is provided that the commission, if it is found to be in the public interest and practicable, may require one carrier to allow another to use its terminal facilities "including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminal," on such terms as the carriers may agree upon, or as the commission may fix, subject to the right, however, of the carrier whose terminal facilities are thus thrown open to sue for any damages sustained, or any compensation owed.

NON-DISCRIMINATION—EXTENSION OF CREDIT.

Section 404 of the House bill and section 35 of the Senate amendment both amended section 2 of the interstate commerce act, extending the provisions of such section prohibiting discriminations by carriers. Section 404 of the conference bill adopts the extension of the prohibition of discrimination to the transmission of intelligence, while section 405 provides that, after July 1, 1920, no railroad shall relinquish possession of freight at destination until all rates and charges thereon have been paid, except under such rules as the commission may prescribe to assure prompt payment and prevent unjust discrimination. The latter provision virtually continues the operation of general order No. 25 of the Railroad Administration as supplemented, relating to the extension of credits by railroads.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL.

The House bill contained no amendment to the so-called long-and-short-haul provisions of section 4 of the interstate commerce act. The Senate amendment in section 37 provided that, in exercising its authority to grant departures from the strict long-and-short-haul rule contained in section 4 of the interstate commerce act, the commission might not permit rates to the more distant point which were not "fairly compensatory," nor allow a circuitous route to maintain higher rates to intermediate points. The Senate amendment also stipulated that departures should not be permitted on account of merely potential water competition. The conference bill in section 406 adopts the provisions of the Senate bill on this subject, except that rates to the more distant point must be "reasonably compensatory," instead of "fairly compensatory," in order to be within the class of permitted departures, and an exception is made in favor of rates in conflict with the long-and-short-haul rule which have already been filed with the commission.

FEDERAL INCORPORATION.

The House bill contained no provision for Federal incorporation of railway carriers. The Senate amendment in sections 15 to 20, inclusive, provided for the conversion of State railroad corporations into Federal corporations, and in sections 21 to 23, inclusive, provided for the incorporation of new Federal railroad corporations, and in section 32 provided for the dissolution of such Federal corporations. These provisions, in connection with the compulsory consolidation provisions in the Senate amendment, were intended to bring about eventual Federal incorporation of all railroad carriers. The conference bill strikes out all of these sections providing for incorporation, reincorporation, and dissolution of Federal railroad corporations.

CONSOLIDATIONS, MERGERS, AND POOLING.

The House bill permitted consolidations, mergers, and pooling of earnings or facilities, subject to the approval of the commission, and for the purpose of carrying out any order of the commission approving a consolidation, merger, or pooling declared that the carriers affected by such order should be relieved from the operation of the antitrust and other restrictive or prohibitory laws. The Senate amendment, in section 9, declared that it is the policy of the United States to require consolidation of all the railroads of the country into not less than 20 nor more than 35 separate systems and provided (section 10) that the transportation board should prepare a plan for such consolidation. Voluntary consolidations were provided for within the period of seven years after the passage of the act, but at the end of that period the transportation board was given power to compel such consolidations. The Senate receded from the provisions for compulsory consolidation and agreed to the House provisions with respect to pooling as revised by the conferees. The House agreed to the Senate provisions for voluntary consolidations as revised by the conferees in section 407 of the conference report. Under these provisions the commission is authorized to permit the acquisition by one carrier of the control of another by lease or purchase of stock. The commission is directed to prepare a plan of consolidation, preserving existing routes and competition so far as possible. Before adopting such plan the commission is required to give a hearing and notify the governor of each State affected. Consolidations or mergers in harmony with the commission's plan are permitted, subject to the approval of the commission and subject to the requirement that the capital of the consolidated corporation shall not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission. An order of the commission approving a specified consolidation may be carried out notwithstanding any State or Federal restraining or prohibitory law to the contrary.

RAILROAD-OWNED WATER LINES.

The House bill, in section 408, amended the provisions of the Panama Canal act, relating to the ownership of water lines by railroads, so as to allow the commission, when satisfied that the public interests would not be injured, to continue existing service of water lines owned by a railroad or to permit the establishment of a proposed new service, except on inland waters. The Senate amendment contained no such provision and the conference bill strikes out this provision in the House bill.

POWER OF COMMISSION OVER INTRASTATE RATES.

Section 415 of the House bill provided that the commission should have authority to make such findings and orders as might in its judgment tend to remove any undue advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in interstate commerce, on the one hand, and intrastate or foreign commerce, on the other hand, or any undue burden on interstate or foreign commerce; and that such findings or orders should be observed by the carriers, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding. The Senate amendment provided that the commission shall make such findings and orders as will in its judgment remove any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in interstate or intrastate and foreign commerce, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, and shall make the rates which in its judgment will remove such advantage, preference, or prejudice. The Senate amendment further declared that nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States or other local authorities in relation to taxation or the lawful police powers of the several States, including the power to make intrastate rates, except as provided otherwise in the interstate commerce act.

The conference bill in section 416 provides that whenever the commission finds that any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate and foreign commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, it shall prescribe the rate, fare, or charge or the classification, regulation, or practice in such manner as in its judgment will remove such advantage, preference, prejudice, or discrimination. The carriers are compelled to observe the orders of the commission, the law of any State, or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

JOINT RAIL AND WATER RATES.

Section 15 of the interstate commerce act, as amended by section 417 of the House bill and section 44 of the Senate amendment, authorized the commission to prescribe joint rates, fares and charges and the maximum or minimum or maximum and minimum to be charged in connection with through routes. Section 44 of the Senate bill, however, provided that the commission should not prescribe the minimum rate to be charged by a water carrier. The conference bill in section 418 limits the commission to prescribing maximum rates for through routes in any case where one of the carriers is a water line.

DIVISIONS OF RATES.

Section 417 of the House bill and section 44 of the Senate amendment provided that the commission might, in case it found the division of any joint rate among carriers to be "unjust, unreasonable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial," establish a just and reasonable division of such rate, and require adjustments to be made accordingly. The Senate bill also mentioned certain factors to be taken into consideration by the commission in determining proper divisions of rates. Section 418 of the conference bill authorizes the commission to establish "just, reasonable, and equitable" divisions of rates where it finds such divisions to be "unjust, unreasonable, inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial," and adopts substantially the language of the Senate bill with respect to the elements to be considered by the commission in reaching its decision.

SUSPENSION OF RATES.

The House bill in section 417 authorized the commission to suspend rates for 120 days after their filing, at the end of which time they were to go into effect whether or not the commission had concluded its hearing, but that as to freight rates the carrier should keep a record in all cases where the commission had not concluded such hearing, and, if the commission finally found the rates too high the carrier was required to make refunds to the shippers affected. The Senate amendment provided for a suspension for 120 days, and, if the hearing was not then concluded, for a 30 days' further extension, after which time the rates were to go into effect whether or not the hearing was concluded, and without any duty on the carrier to make refunds if the rate was later found to be excessive. The conference bill retains the House provision but inserts the 30 days' further suspension provided for in the Senate amendment.

WATER CARRIERS—EMBRACING ENTIRE LENGTH OF LINE IN THROUGH ROUTE.

(Section 418 of the conference bill.)

The House bill and the Senate amendment both continued the provisions in section 15 of the interstate commerce act, forbidding the commission to require any railroad to embrace in a through route "substantially less than the entire length of its railroad," but the Senate amendment contained the provision that this restriction should not hinder the establishment of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line. The conference bill practically adopts the Senate provision on this subject, specifically relieving the commission from this restriction where one of the carriers is a water line.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK.

Section 44 of the Senate amendment provided that through rates on live stock should include unloading and other incidental charges in the case of shipments consigned to public stockyards. The House bill contained no reference to this matter. The conference bill amplifies the provision of the Senate amendment and provides that "transportation wholly by railroad of ordinary live stock in carload lots destined to or received at public stockyards shall include all necessary service of unloading and reloading en route, delivery at public stockyards of inbound shipments into suitable pens, and receipt and loading at such yards of outbound shipments, without extra charge to the shipper," with certain exceptions concerning which the commission may prescribe rules.

DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC.

Section 419 of the House bill added to the interstate commerce act a provision that whenever property is diverted or delivered by one carrier to another carrier contrary to routing instructions in the bill of lading, the carrier thus deprived of its right to participate in the haul of the property should have a right of action against the carrier by which or to which such traffic was unlawfully diverted for the total amount of the rate or charge it would have received had it participated in the haul. It was provided that this provision should not apply where the diversion or delivery was in compliance with a lawful order of the commission, and that the carrier to which the property was diverted should not be liable if it could show that, when it carried the property, it had no notice of the routing instructions. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision, but afforded no relief if the diversion or delivery was in compliance with an order of the commission, and did not clearly give a right of action against the initial carrier guilty of the diversion. It also based the amount of damages upon the revenues accruing from the diverted traffic. The conference bill in section 420 accepts the House provision as appearing in the House bill.

TRAFFIC NOT ROUTED BY SHIPPER.

The Senate amendment contained a provision not contained in the House bill that with respect to traffic not routed by the shipper the transportation board might direct the route which such traffic should take after it arrives at the terminus of one carrier and is to be delivered to another carrier. The conference bill in section 420 contains this provision of the Senate amendment, giving the power to the commission, whenever the public interest and fair distribution of the traffic require, to direct the route which such traffic shall take after it arrives at the terminus of one carrier or at a junction point with another carrier and is to be there delivered to another carrier.

RULE OF RATE MAKING.

The House bill continued the existing law authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe just and reasonable rates. Section 6 of the Senate amendment added to the just and reasonable rule a requirement that the rates must be adequate to enable the carriers as a whole to earn a fair return on the aggregate value of their property, and provided that if from such rates any carrier's railway operating income exceeded 6 per cent of the value of its railway property a portion of the excess should be turned over to the Government and placed in a railroad contingent fund, to be used for the purpose of making loans to or providing equipment for railroad carriers generally. The House receded from its disagreement to these provisions of section 6 and agreed to them as revised by the conferees in section 422 of the conference report. This section directs the commission to make rates adequate to provide the carriers as a whole—either in the entire country or in rate groups or territories to be established by the commission—with an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal as nearly as may be to a fair return on the aggregate value of the railway property held for and used in the service of transportation. The Senate bill required the establishment of rate districts, but the conference bill leaves their establishment to the discretion of the commission. The commission is authorized to determine the value of railway property, and is specifically directed in this connection not to give undue consideration to the property investment accounts. The commission is also authorized from time to time to determine and publish what percentage constitutes a fair return on railway property, except that for the two years beginning March 1, 1920, it is declared in this section that 5½ per cent of the aggregate value of the railway property shall constitute a fair return, unless the commission in its discretion adds thereto, in whole or in part, one-half of 1 per cent of such value to make provision for improvements and betterments chargeable to capital account. The result of these provisions is that 5½ per cent is fixed as a minimum and 6 per cent as a maximum during the next two years, and thereafter the matter is left to the discretion of the commission.

Section 6 of the Senate bill provided that one-half of any excess income between 6 and 7 per cent should be paid into the carrier's reserve fund and the other one-half into the contingent fund, and that the excess of such income above 7 per cent should be payable one-fourth to the carrier's reserve fund and three-fourths to the contingent fund. The conference bill provides that if any carrier earns in any year a net railway operating income in excess of 6 per cent of the value of its railway property, one-half of such excess must be placed in a reserve fund until such fund equals 5 per cent of the value of the carrier's property, and thereafter may be used for any lawful purpose by the carrier. The other one-half of such excess income must be paid into a general railroad contingent fund to be administered by the commission. The conference bill adds a provision that the value and the income of a group of carriers which are under common control and management and are operated as a single system shall be computed for the system as a whole.

The general railroad contingent fund is to be used to make loans to carriers to meet expenditures for capital account or to purchase equipment to be leased to the carriers. The making of such loans and the obtaining and leasing of such equipment is left to the commission.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Section 424 of the House bill provided that all actions at law by carriers for recovery of charges shall be brought within two years from the time the cause of action accrues; and that all complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the commission within two years after the cause of action accrues, unless the carrier after the expiration of such two years, or within 90 days before such expiration, begins an action for recovery of charges in regard to the same service, in which case such period of two years shall be extended to 90 days from the time the carrier's action is begun. In either case the cause of action shall be deemed to accrue upon delivery, or tender of delivery, of the shipment by the carrier. This provision was not contained in the Senate amendment. The conference bill retains the House provision as it appeared in the House bill.

DIVISIONS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The interstate commerce act now provides that in proceedings before the commission involving valuation of railroad property, under section 19a of the interstate commerce act, not less than five members of the commission shall participate. The House bill in section 429 amended this so as to require the participation of not less than three members. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. The conference bill in section 431 amends the provision of the interstate commerce act authorizing divisions of the commission, so as to provide that each division shall consist of not less than three members.

DEPRECIATION ACCOUNTING.

Section 433 of the House bill required the commission to establish, and the carriers to comply with, schedules of depreciation for all classes of equipment and fixed improvements. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. Section 435 of the conference bill requires the commission to prescribe the classes of property for which depreciation charges may be included under operating expenses, and the percentage of depreciation which shall be charged with respect to each class of property. The commission may modify these classes and percentages when it deems necessary. Carriers are forbidden to charge to operating expenses depreciation charges on other classes of property, or to employ a percentage of depreciation other than that prescribed by the commission. Provision is also made for avoiding duplication of depreciation charges.

SECURITIES ISSUES.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained substantially similar provisions giving the commission power to regulate issues of securities by railroad carriers. The House bill provided in section 437 that the provisions of the section should not apply to notes maturing in not more than two years after the date thereof and aggregating (together with all other then outstanding notes of a maturity of two years or less) not more than 10 per cent per annum of the par value of the securities of the carrier then outstanding. The Senate amendment had a similar provision, but specified 5 per cent per annum in place of the 10 per cent per annum fixed in the House bill, and did not contain the provision of the House bill that, in considering the aggregate amount of the notes, there should be added the amount of similar notes then outstanding. The conference bill, section 439, retains this latter provision, but adopts the 5 per cent of the Senate amendment.

INCREASE OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The House bill in section 438 increased the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission from 9 to 11 members, increased their compensation from $10,000 to $12,000 annually, and increased the salary of the secretary of the commission from $5,000 to $7,500 per annum. The Senate amendment did not increase the membership of the commission or the salary of the secretary, but did increase the salary of the commissioners as in the House bill. The Senate amendment further created a transportation board to be composed of five members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, to which board was transferred practically all the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission except the power with respect to rates. The conference bill in section 440 adopts the House section exactly as appearing in the House bill, and contains no provision for a transportation board.

THROUGH FOREIGN SHIPMENTS BY RAIL AND WATER.

The House receded from its disagreement to the provisions of section 45 of the Senate amendment and agreed thereto with verbal changes by the conference in section 441 of the conference bill. This provision requires water carriers in foreign commerce whose vessels are registered under our laws to file with the commission a schedule of sailing dates, routes, and destinations, which schedules shall be published by the commission and distributed to railway agents for the information of shippers. On application by a shipper, a carrier by rail is required to secure from the carrier by water, which is required to furnish, rates for any specified shipment, and the carrier by water, on advice from the carrier by rail that such rates are accepted, is required to make firm reservation for the transportation of such shipment and to advise the carrier by rail of such reservation and of the prospective sailing date. Provision is made for the issuance by the rail carrier of through bills of lading under rules to be made by the commission, but it is expressly declared that the issuance of such through bill shall not constitute "an arrangement for continuous carriage or shipment" within the meaning of the interstate commerce act.

SAFETY DEVICES.

Section 439 of the House bill added to the interstate commerce act a provision authorizing the commission to order a railroad to install automatic train-stop or train-control devices complying with the specifications prescribed by the commission, such order to be issued at least one year before the date specified for its fulfillment. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. The conference bill, in section 441, contains the House provision adding to the power of the commission a similar power as to other safety devices, but requiring the order, in case of all devices, to be made at least two years before the date specified for its fulfillment.

SECTION 10 OF THE CLAYTON ACT.
(Section 501 of conference bill.)

The Senate amendment in section 50 extended to July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the Clayton antitrust act prohibiting common directors of carriers and of corporations from which they purchase supplies. The House bill contained no such provision. The conference bill, in section 501, accepts the Senate provision making the effective date January 1, 1921.

UNLIMITED TICKETS.

The Senate amendment in section 51 provided that passenger tickets, except tickets at special rates for excursions, conventions, and other special occasions, shall not be limited and shall be honored when presented by any lawful owner. The House bill contained no such provision, and the conference bill eliminates it.

JOHN J. ESCH,
E. L. HAMILTON,
SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule there is allowed five hours' debate, two and one-half hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and two and one-half hours by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-one Members are present. A quorum is present. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is recognized for two hours and a half.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the very large demand for time upon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and myself, and in view of the importance of the legislation, I ask unanimous consent that five legislative days may be allowed for Members of the House to print their remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that five legislative days be allowed to all Members to print remarks on the pending bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would make that "their own remarks."

Mr. ESCH. I accept that suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The request is that they be permitted to print only their own remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if that includes the printing of remarks of Members who have not spoken?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the demands made upon me for time, I shall try to confine my remarks to one hour. In that brief space I shall try to go over what may be considered material features of the bill as modified by the committee of conference.

It was stated on this floor yesterday that there had been unnecessary and unusual delay in connection with the preparation of this bill and of the report by the conference committee thereon. For the information of the House, I wish to state that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the 15th of July last began hearings, and on the 17th of November, just four months afterwards, a bill was passed through the House. The Senate passed its bill on the 19th of December, and two days thereafter the Senate and House bills were sent to conference, and the conferees, regardless of holiday recesses, held sessions mornings and afternoons and even Sundays, and concluded their labors last Wednesday. There has been no slacking on the job from beginning to end. If Members could realize the tremendous complexities of the problems that were presented, the diverse interests claiming recognition, and the difficulty, the almost insurmountable difficulty, of securing an agreement between the Senate and the House, they would not come to the conclusion that we have taken an unreasonable time to present this conference report. [Applause.]

The President in his message to both Houses a year ago stated, in effect, that as to the solution of the railroad problem he did not have a confident judgment of his own. Since this message no suggestions or recommendations as to the proper solution of the complicated railroad problem have come either to Senate or House Committees on Interstate Commerce from the White House. The committees therefore worked out their own solution as embodied in the pending conference report.

As to the conference report, it may be gratifying to the membership of the House to know that the form and structure of the House bill have been preserved. I think that the form and structure commend themselves to everyone because of their simplicity and because they render reference to the act much more easy. We not only secured acceptance by the Senate as to form and structure, but practically as to substance. There is but one substantive proposition contained in the Senate bill which was not contained in the House bill that was yielded to by the House conferees and yielded to only with material modifications. That is so-called section 6, providing for the rate of return on the value of the property. The other important and novel propositions presented in the Senate bill and which are not in the House bill, namely, the creation of a transportation board, compulsory consolidations, and Federal incorporation have gone out of the bill as the result of the work of the conferees. That, therefore, leaves section 6—now section 422—as the main new proposition as presented in the Senate bill.

I wish to take up some of the salient paragraphs or sections of the bill as to which material changes were made by the committee of conference. In section 201 we sought to perpetuate the operation of the barge lines on the lower Mississippi and the Black Warrior Rivers and also on the upper Mississippi River. We believed that it was absolutely essential, in view of the fact that the Government had already invested something like $9,000,000 in the barge line on the lower rivers and had commitments for several million dollars more, that this new venture should not fail, but should be continued in order to demonstrate its practicability and in order to aid transportation and relieve congestion. To that end the House bill provided that the management and operation of these barge lines should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of War. The Senate bill intrusted this to the Shipping Board. The Senate receded. The Secretary of War has jurisdiction.

In order to provide for the financing of these barge lines we make available unexpended balances out of former appropriations and also authorize an appropriation for the construction of the necessary transfer or exchange terminals at such points as East St. Louis, Natchez, a point opposite Vicksburg, Memphis, and the city of New Orleans. In view of the fact that the State of Louisiana owns the dockage rights on the Mississippi at New Orleans, private enterprise is barred, so the bill permits a loan to be made by the Government to the State of Louisiana for the construction of suitable terminals in the city of New Orleans. We trust that with this authorization in the statute it will not be difficult—and it ought not to be difficult—to secure the necessary appropriation which will make this venture on the lower Mississippi River and the Black Warrier a signal success. It can not be made a success until these necessary terminal facilities and the full equipment are provided as now contemplated. [Applause.]

On the upper Mississippi we provide that should the existing contract be terminated before its term, or upon the completion of the term, then the Secretary of War is to take over the operation of the barge lines now being provided for the upper river. Like jurisdiction is given with reference to the barge line on the Erie Canal.

Another matter of considerable importance in connection with the conference report is contained in section 203, with reference to the settlement of matters arising out of Federal control.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, will it disturb the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. ESCH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WELTY. I understood the gentleman to say that an appropriation was made for the operation of these boats on the lower Mississippi, the Black Warrior River, and the upper Mississippi.

Mr. ESCH. I said unexpended balances in existing appropriations were made available for the completion of existing contracts.

Mr. WELTY. But there is nothing in the bill which provides for the continuation of the operation of those boats now constructed out of the funds allowed, namely, something over $9,000,000.

Mr. ESCH. We thought we had covered that in the bill.

Mr. WELTY. I think if you will refer to section 202 you will see that you simply refer to subdivision (a) of section 201, and do not refer to subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 201, so that this bill evidently has made no appropriation for the continuation of the barge lines and the boats that were constructed out of this $10,000,000.

Mr. ESCH. We say that authority shall be given to the Secretary of War to operate these lines. There would be warrant in that statute for the securing of appropriations to continue the operation should the unexpended balances be held insufficient.

Mr. WELTY. That is subdivision (b)?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. Now, if you will refer to section 202—and I do not care to be critical—it says:

For these purposes and for the purpose of making the payments specified in subdivision (a) of section 201, all unexpended balances in the revolving fund created by the Federal control act—

And so forth. But it does not refer to subdivision (b), which provides for their operation. Nor does it make any appropriation under subdivision (d). So that, if this bill passes, on March 1 there will be absolutely no funds available for the purpose of using these boats, which have been constructed at the expense of probably $10,000,000.

Mr. ESCH. I do not anticipate the difficulties that the gentleman sets forth. I believe that has been safeguarded, and that there will be no difficulty about the continuance or operation of these barge lines on the lower river.

Mr. WELTY. If the gentleman will yield further——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No!

Mr. ESCH. I am very anxious to go on, and I am allotting to myself only one hour. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

In regard to the settlement of matters arising out of Federal control, you will notice that in section 203 of the bill we provide that there shall be appropriated in this bill the sum of $200,000,000 in addition to the amount made available in the section. The necessity for this large appropriation at this time is made clear through a request made of the conferees by Director Sherley of the Division of Finance of the United States Railroad Administration. And in order that this may be fully explained, I wish to read the statement of Director Sherley on this very matter:

In fuller explanation of the reasons that prompted the Railroad Administration to ask the conferees to carry in the pending bill an appropriation of $200,000,000 to be available for the purposes for which the previous $1,250,000,000 of appropriations were available, I beg to say that the immediate financial situation which will confront the Railroad Administration as of the 1st of March is that there will be to its credit in the Treasury and in the central administration after the payment of vouchers to meet requirements of various roads as of March 1, touching fixed charges, etc., approximately $100,000,000. There will be in the hands of Federal treasurers in the field approximately $215,000,000, and in the hands of agents and conductors in the form of cash and assets easily convertible into cash approximately $95,000,000, but these two latter sums will be fully required, together with lap-over items subsequently collected, for the payment of outstanding obligations of the Government, the greater part of these obligations being for wages for the last half of February and for materials and supplies and other current indebtedness coming over from the operation of the railroads.

By the terms of the funding section of the pending bill the Government, prior to the exercise of any right of set-off, must have furnished the carriers the sums sufficient to enable them, with other available corporate funds to meet their fixed charges, etc., and to have as a working capital a sum equal to one-twenty-fourth of the operating expense for the calendar year 1919. The requirement as to working capital, together with other requirements of the carriers, will probably result in the need of paying out to the carriers as of March 1 or shortly thereafterwards approximately $180,000,000. In addition to this immediate need there will shortly thereafter be demands made upon the Railroad Administration by various carriers for additional sums to enable them to meet subsequent interest charges. It was apparent, therefore, that in order to be in a position promptly to deal with this situation the Railroad Administration should be in immediate possession of additional funds in an amount not less than $200,000,000. As the financial statement submitted herewith shows, after these funds are made available there will need to be a final appropriation of approximately $436,322,885. It was thought there would be no valid objection to an appropriation in this bill in the amount of some $200,000,000 practically on account. This would enable the Railroad Administration to submit in regular course, as it expects to do, an estimate for the balance for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and subsequently of the Congress itself. The consideration of such an estimate will enable the Congress to make such inquiry as may be desirable touching details of these very large figures to the same extent that an estimate for the total of the two sums would give. The plan has the advantage, however, of making sure that the Government will have immediately available sums that are unquestionably needed as of the first of the month. If no appropriation were carried in this bill the Railroad Administration would be under the necessity of presenting an emergency estimate to the Congress and asking immediate consideration of it. After consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. GOOD, yourself, and Senator CUMMINS, it seemed in the interest of the Government to make the request that was made, that there be carried in this bill the sum of $200,000,000.

Under the bill as agreed to by the Senate provision was made for one month's working capital. In conference we agreed to one-half month's working capital. The average working capital, based upon the Federal control period, amounts to practically $375,000,000 a month. We allow $200,000,000 as being half of one month's working capital plus a small additional amount to meet extra charges.

Unless this money is made available on the 1st of March, the Railroad Administration will not be able to meet the current accounts as they come due, and the Director General feels compelled to come to Congress and ask for this appropriation in this bill rather than to come to Congress to secure an urgent deficiency appropriation. It will not add one dollar to the Government's expense, because this is only part payment of the amount of $646,000,000 which the Government will still have to appropriate in order that we may clean up this entire matter of Federal control. I therefore trust that no objection will be made to the inclusion of this large item in the pending bill.

I have here a statement showing the various expenditures itemized and concentrated, drawn from more elaborate statements made to us by Mr. Sherley. These figures may be of interest, and I read them:

The Government's total expenditures for additions and betterments up to March 1, when Federal control is to end under the proclamation of the President, amount in even numbers to $1,152,000,000. The amount paid out for new equipment—that is, for the 100,000 freight cars and the 1,900 locomotives ordered during the period of Federal control and which were allocated to the several carriers—is $372,000,000. Of this sum $15,000,000 has already been paid in cash by some of these carriers, leaving, therefore, a balance for equipment of $357,000,000 which the Government has expended.

The amount paid for additions and betterments to roadways and equipment for the whole period of Federal control amounted to $70,000,000; but against this sum, under the terms of the bill, offsets are allowed by placing against the indebtedness of the carrier to the Government the Government's indebtedness to the carrier resulting from compensation under the Federal control act. There can be offset under the bill against the $780,000.000 for additions and betterments the sum of $461,000,000, leaving, however, as the sum to be funded $319,000,000. This latter sum is to be funded for a period of 10 years, with the option of the carrier to pay any time within the 10 years.

The net excess of operating expenses and compensation to the carriers over the operating revenues for all the roads up to March 1 is $854,000,000. There is due the corporations as compensation for interest and open accounts $1,442,000,000, against which can be applied interest due on Government notes and open accounts and additions and betterments and indebtedness of $709,000,000, making the net sum that must be paid the roads under the terms of the bill $733,000,000.

After set-offs there will be owing the Government on account of additions and betterments $319,000,000; allocated equipment—cars, locomotives, and so forth—$357,000,000; and other indebtedness which will be represented in long-time notes or one-year notes, $239,000,000, a total of $915,000,000. The total amount which the Government must appropriate to make up what may be considered a shortage is $646,000,000. If the $200,000,000 herein appropriated is made it would still leave $436,000,000 to be appropriated.

The Director General will appear before the Committee on Appropriations early in April setting forth the facts and circumstances and asking for that appropriation. In short, gentlemen, the Government as a result of our experience under Federal control will have appropriated approximately $1,900,000,000. Of that sum $1,250,000,000 represents what has already been appropriated and the additional $200,000,000 herein provided will make $1,450,000,000.

The difference would approximately be what I have already stated the amount which the Government must still appropriate. So that this in a financial way represents our experience with Federal control. This additional sum of $646,000,000 will practically have to be charged off as a war cost. There may be those who will say that this is an expensive experiment. So it is. And yet, it is worth the price, because without the railroads during the war period transportation would have failed, and we would not have been able to supply our men across the seas with the necessities of life, with munitions, and all war material. So that the war cost that we must charge off is what we pay for the railroads' part in the winning of the war. [Applause.]

Another thing I wish to call your attention to is in regard to the short-line railroads. I do not think any one subject in connection with the bill has caused more discussion and aroused a greater interest than the short-line roads. We have sought to deal generously with those carriers. The conference agreement deals with them more generously than did the House bill. In the House bill we did not take care of all the short lines on the question of guaranty. We practically limited them to those that were in competition with the roads under Federal control, but did not take care of those "connected with" a road under Federal control.

The Senate bill had the latter provision, and the House has agreed to it. So that these short-line roads are now taken care of in the provision as to deficits and the guaranty provision. This guaranty provision is for a period of six months. Under the Senate bill there was uncertainty as to the period of the guaranty. It allowed two months in which to file claims for increases and four months thereafter in which the commission could determine the amount of such increases, leaving, therefore, the period rather undefined. The Senate has yielded and adopted the House provision as to a straight six months' guaranty.

But the question will be raised why we should guarantee at all. When Federal control ceases why not have the guaranty of the Government for a standard return also cease? The reason lies in the financial straits of the carriers when Federal control shall cease.

What is the situation? Prior to the war 60.38 per cent of the roads of class 1 earned a dividend and paid their interest. The balance did not. During the period of Federal control only 57 of the 175 class 1 roads earned their interest and only a few paid dividends. One hundred and eight of them did not earn their interest, and, of course, could not pay dividends, and many did not earn their operating expenses.

With this situation confronting the carriers on the 1st day of March, the committee of conference indorsed the attitude of both Senate and House, continuing the guaranty in the House bill for a straight term of six months.

In 1919, 108 class 1 roads lacked $60,000,000 of earning their interest and fixed charges. The net operating income last year was only practically half of the standard return which we guaranteed. Should we thrust these roads on their own resources on the 1st of March without a guaranty, I make the prediction that within three months 50 per cent of them would go into receiverships. Do we want to do that? Ought we to do it? No; because receiverships for railroads means receiverships for industrial plants and all classes of business throughout the country. [Applause.]

I believe that in other respects we have well taken care of the short lines with respect to the matter of the rule of rate making. The short line as a rule got only a pro rata of the distance haul, did not get a pro rata of really what its service was worth. In this bill we prescribe that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have the right, even on its own initiative, to create just and equitable divisions of rates between the short line and its trunk-line connections, and we prescribe what the commission shall consider in arriving at what is a proper division of the rates. We also take care of them in the matter of the diversion of traffic. They have often suffered because the trunk line would divert traffic from the short line. We take care of them also with regard to traffic which is not routed by the shipper, but which the trunk line could at junction or terminal points divert to a favorite carrier. We take care of that situation. We also permit the joint use of terminals, and we adopt the Senate suggestion to the effect that there shall be included within terminal facilities main-line track or tracks within a reasonable distance outside of the terminal. It will avail a short line nothing if it can get to the city limits and then can not go over the tracks of the trunk line and into its terminal. We protect that situation under the supervision of the commission.

We take care of them in the matter of consolidations, and also allow them 100 per cent compensation under the Federal control act. We also take care of them in the matter of loans to carriers. I think on the whole the short-line roads have been fairly and possibly generously treated, but unless they are fairly and generously treated the trunk line itself may suffer, because the short line is the feeder for the trunk line, and it is as necessary to the people living thereon as is the trunk line to the people it serves.

In the guaranty section, the Senate bill provided that the excess of the guaranty over the standard return based on the test period should be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The House bill had no such provision. The House in this particular receded and the excess is to be paid into the Federal Treasury, but the House bill safeguarded this matter by giving the Interstate Commerce Commission supervisory control over the expenditures of the carrier during the six months, because you can readily understand that unless there is some supervisory control over these expenditures for maintenance of way, equipment, and so on, the carrier might spend so much money thereon that there would not be any surplus. The carrier might make abnormal, unreasonable expenditures. We give the commission a supervisory control over expenditures during the six-month period, and the commission can say to the carrier, "We shall demand a restatement of accounts at such time as we see fit and proper, in order that there may be no padding of the expense account of your roads during the six-month guaranty period." We go further and say to the roads that if during the six-month guaranty period they need advances to help pay operating expenses, we will make advances on proper security, and should the advances exceed the guaranty, the excess will have to be repaid.

We also provide for loans to carriers. The Senate bill had no provision with reference to creating a revolving fund out of which to loan money to carriers in need of funds. All the Senate provided was a short paragraph saying that the amount shall consist of $500,000,000. The House provision carried $250,000,000. The conferees agreed on $300,000,000. This was a very large concession by the Senate. The $300,000,000 provides for a fund to loan to carriers. Application for the loan must be within the first two years, and the loan can extend not beyond five years. It is necessary to create this revolving fund in order that the carriers may be able during this critical reconstruction period to borrow money at a reasonable rate of interest. We charge 6 per cent per annum for moneys loaned from this revolving fund.

As to the free-pass provision, I think that has caused many Members of this House more concern than even the larger and more important provisions of the bill, for everyone has been flooded with letters and telegrams in respect to it. The conferees of the House yielded to the Senate and struck out the provision relating to passes to attorneys and physicians and surgeons who do not devote the larger portion of their time to the service of the carrier. This leaves the law as it has been ever since the last amendment to the antipass provisions made by the Mann-Elkins Act of 1910.

An amendment of the long-and-short-haul clause is in the bill. It was not in the House bill. It was opposed in the House.

The Senate amended the fourth section of the interstate commerce act, but did not by any means make it rigid. The Senate amendment, in section 37, provided that, in exercising its authority to grant departures from the strict long-and-short-haul rule, contained in section 4 of the interstate commerce act, the commission might not permit rates to the more distant point which were not "fairly compensatory," nor allow a circuitous route to maintain higher rates to intermediate points. The Senate amendment also stipulated that departure should not be permitted on account of merely potential water competition. The conference bill, in section 406, adopts the provisions of the Senate bill on this subject, except that rates to the more distant point must be "reasonably compensatory," instead of "fairly compensatory," in order to be within the class of permitted departures, and an exception is made in favor of rates in conflict with the long-and-short-haul rule which have already been filed with the commission.

With reference to consolidations, the House bill provided for voluntary consolidations and the Senate bill provided for voluntary consolidations up to a period of seven years and then made them compulsory, giving the Government the right of exercising the powers of eminent domain in condemning the securities of carriers, forcing a new incorporation under a Federal charter. We did not go that far. The Senate receded.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Before the gentleman leaves the long-and-short-haul clause, is there anything in the bill that will eliminate the unjust discriminations against intermountain States and the intermediate stations that now exist?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I think the amendment will relieve that situation quite materially.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Permit me to explain a little bit further. The last provision we had on that question we provided that in the future no greater charge should be made for a long haul than a short haul in any new rate without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

But we provided in that bill, unfortunately, that existing discriminations should continue, if an application is filed for its continuation, until a hearing by the commission to set it aside, and under that provision these existing discriminations have continued and the railroad commission has not been able to have hearings amounting to 5 per cent of those existing discriminations, so that the bill has resulted in the perpetuation of an unjust discrimination made in the long-and-short-haul clause under the old law, and I would like to know if there is anything in this bill that will correct that status as to existing discriminations?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I think we have taken care of that, and believe we have met some of the objections of the intermountain country. Senator POINDEXTER was specially urgent in the conference that this provision be put in the bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman, before he concludes his speech, explain the provision?

Mr. ESCH. I am afraid I have not the time; I have already consumed 45 minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I trust the gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. ESCH. As I was saying in regard to consolidations, we leave them voluntary, and we have inserted this very salutary provision, in my judgment: before a consolidation for the purposes of ownership and operation can be effected under the permission of the commission there must be a revaluation of the companies seeking to consolidate, and under that revaluation the securities that can be issued by the constituent parts seeking consolidation can not exceed the valuation as fixed by the commission. Now, if there is any water in any road of the constituent elements trying to make up the consolidation there is an opportunity for the commission to use the squeezing-out process. We think it will have a salutary effect, to what extent we do not know. Under the bill we give the commission the power to make a survey of all the railroads of the United States, with the view of putting all the railroads of the United States into a limited number of systems. No consolidation can hereafter be made unless it complies with the plan as prescribed by the commission. We have safeguarded this matter of consolidation in every possible way.

But, gentlemen, my time is short. I shall take up what is known as section 6. You will find it in section 422 of the pending bill. It provides for a rate of return on the valuation of the railroad property either taken as a whole or within a given district or territory. This provision was not in the House bill. Against it the House conferees stood for five or six weeks and until the compromise was finally reached. The whole basis for section 6 can be found in these words in the bill, on page 91, paragraph 5:

(5) Inasmuch as it is impossible (without regulation and control in the interest of the commerce of the United States considered as a whole) to establish uniform rates upon competitive traffic which will adequately sustain all the carriers which are engaged in such traffic and which are indispensable to the communities to which they render the service of transportation, without enabling some of such carriers to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, it is hereby declared that any carrier which receives such an income so in excess of a fair return shall hold such part of the excess, as hereinafter prescribed, as trustee for and shall pay it to the United States.

The large problem that has given difficulty to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to every regulatory body heretofore has been the fixing of rates on competitive traffic which will not allow one road to earn excessive income while another road on the same rate does not get a sufficient income. No formula has under existing law yet been discovered to meet that situation. You can meet it in two ways—by consolidation of all carriers under one system, where there would not be the problem of the weak and the strong, or under the plan suggested in section 422. The valuation of all railroad property used in the service of transportation in a given district or territory or in the country as a whole is to be made by the commission. The commission then prescribes such level of rates as will produce, as near as may be, a 5½ per cent return on such valuation. In this House I have strongly contended that we should adhere to the existing standard for rate making—that is, that rates should be just and reasonable—but longer consideration has driven me to the opinion that capital will not invest in railroad securities on merely a declaration that the commission shall fix just and reasonable rates.

Investors want something definite and fixed upon which they can reckon. The provisions of section 422 give that stability, that standard which, I trust, will encourage investment; but it is objected that we are making a standard based on the rate of return on the value of the property. What is the value of the property? For the present I acknowledge we have not yet available the physical valuation as prescribed by the act of 1913, but much information is already available to the commission secured under this act. Under section 422 the commission, in determining the aggregate value, shall give to the property investment account only such consideration as is allowed under the law of the land. We do not make capitalization—please mark this—we do not make capitalization the basis of valuation. It may amount to something, or it may amount to nothing. It is only one of the elements which the commission prior to the completion of the valuation work shall consider as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the leading case of Smythe against Ames, One hundred and sixty-ninth United States Reports, opinion by Harlan, justice. What the valuation made by the commission will be I can not state. It will not be property investment account or the book cost, now estimated to be about $19,000,000,000, for everybody knows that book cost or property investment account exceeds the capitalization. Prior to 1907, when the uniform system of accounting was prescribed, these property investment accounts were no doubt padded, but since that time every dollar invested in railroad property is accounted for and can be found in the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It may be said, therefore, that neither the property investment account nor the capitalization will be the permanent standard of valuation. But the standard will be such as the commission will fix in the light of the information it already has and will secure as the result of the physical valuation act of 1913.

It is stated in the press and elsewhere that the railroads of the country are not worth more than, say, $12,000,000,000, based on the tentative valuation of three or four small roads, such as the Kansas City & Southwestern, the Texas Midland, and a Georgia road—as these valuations amount to only 50 per cent of the book cost or property investment account, all the railroads of the United States are worth practically only 50 or 60 per cent of their book cost or property investment account. When the valuation of the great trunk lines, the lines that do 90 per cent of the country's business, is completed I am confident we shall find that their valuation in many cases will equal and, in some, exceed the capitalization. The Burlington & Quincy has a low capitalization; the Pennsylvania has a low capitalization. The Pennsylvania in the last 20 years has invested $400,000,000, taken from its earnings without adding this vast sum to its capitalization. It spent this sum for betterments and improvements, thereby increasing the facilities of transportation and adding to the comfort and convenience of the people.

The valuation having been made, it does not mean that the Government guarantees to every carrier a 5½ per cent return upon its valuation. I know that there are some papers and some individuals who believe that section 422 constitutes a guaranty and that every road is to get a 5½ per cent return on the valuation of its property.

Nothing of the kind. There is no guaranty here in the respect that the Government must make good the difference between 5½ per cent and what the road actually does earn out of its business. There is no such guaranty. The Government does not make good a dollar. On the contrary, the Government takes one-half the excess over the fixed return and puts it into a Government fund for use in transportation. Under this section some roads may earn 2 per cent, some 3, some 4, and some 5 per cent. It will depend upon each road as to whether or not it will earn 5½ per cent. It is up to the roads, through efficiency, economy, and wise management, to increase their earnings, and if they get up to 5½ per cent or 6 per cent, in the discretion of the commission, one-half per cent being allowed for additions and betterments, not included in capital account, they keep every dollar of it. When they get beyond that there must be a division. The division is a 50-50 proposition, beyond the point where this minimum return stops.

I know there are men in this House, as there are elsewhere, who have great doubts as to the constitutionality of the power of Congress to take this surplus and devote it to other uses than to the uses of the agency which develops the surplus. There are eminent counsel on both sides of this proposition. Ex-Justice Hughes, Mr. Thom, and Judge Lovett claim that this is an unconstitutional exercise of power. We have as eminent counsel on the other side who say they have no doubt but that it is a constitutional exercise of power. Elihu Root, John S. Miller, and John R. Milburn are of that opinion.

I am persuaded after further study, although in no way claiming to be an authority, that we have this power. Its constitutionality is further indorsed by the three men who in my opinion can speak with largest authority on the subject. These three men are Commissioner Clark of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the senior man in service on that commission, a man of great ability and large experience under the interstate commerce act. In his opinion Congress has this power; that this is no more a violation of the Constitution than it is for Congress to take excess-profits taxes and put them into the Treasury of the United States and then loan them out through the farm-loan act. He contends that this plan is the only way in which we can meet the problem of so fixing the rates between competitive points that they will not produce an excessive return to one carrier and less than a reasonable return to another. He stands for this proposition and for a division of the excess.

Who else supports this proposition? Judge Prouty, for many years the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, one of the ablest chairmen that that commission has ever had, he, too, is in accord with this plan. And lastly, Director General Hines supports this plan. These three men do not have any qualms as to the constitutionality of an act of Congress giving one-half the excess to the Government.

What is the Government going to do with its half? Does it take money from one railroad and give it to another, as is so generally contended? It does not. The excess that goes to the Government goes to the Interstate Commerce Commission and constitutes a fund out of which the commission can loan money to the needy carrier at 6 per cent interest, or out of which it can purchase equipment for leasing the same to the carriers at a rental which will represent 6 per cent on the value of the equipment plus a depreciation charge.

The Government is losing nothing. This is not a guaranty. The Government will secure a large sum of money in peace times, when things again become normal. I do not expect the Government to get much of a fund in the very near future, but in time this plan will develop a considerable fund to be used for the purposes I have enumerated. So the Government is not losing anything. The Government is gaining something and commerce and transportation will be vastly stimulated by reason of it. [Applause.] We do not destroy the initiative of the carriers. I know that argument is made many times. Why, they get a half over the 6 per cent or the 5½ per cent, and that is a stimulus for the roads to use more efficiency, more initiative, more wise management, because the more the road earns above the minimum the larger the company's share will be.

We require that these excess earnings on the part of the carrier shall be utilized to develop a reserve fund that shall in time grow to be 5 per cent of the valuation of the road; and after this reserve fund has been accumulated the carrier can use the money as it deems best.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed one hour.

Mr. ESCH. I will occupy 10 minutes more.

I had at times some misgivings that we could come to an agreement on all these great disputed points that were submitted to conference. After eight weeks of constant effort we present our report. The Senate bill provided that the rate of return fixed in the act should continue for five years, thereafter to be changed by the commission in quinquennial periods with proper revaluations. The conference report lowers this five-year period to two years. We did this for the purpose of getting greater flexibility. We can not tell what the commercial conditions of the country will be for any period in the future.

We say that at the end of two years the stated return fixed in the act shall cease and then the rate of return shall be established by the commission. By that time the physical valuation of the roads will have been completed. By that time we will have had experience under the operation of the 5½ per cent return and with all this information the commission will be able to act wisely in determining what the rate of return shall be.

There is another matter, gentlemen, that I can only allude to briefly, and that is the question of labor. You know that the Senate provisions and the House provisions were radically different. The Senate bill provided for regional boards and for a board of wages and working conditions, with a final appeal to what is known as a transportation board. These regional boards were to take care of matters of grievances, and so forth. The wages and conditions board had charge of matters of wages and hours of service. There was more or less of compulsion all along the line. Then in case two or more employees conspired to stop or interrupt the transportation of the mails or interstate commerce, penalties were to be inflicted. This is the so-called antistrike clause of the Cummins bill. The House bill as it passed the House provided for the creation of adjustment boards, three in number, the membership of which, so far as the railroad employees were concerned, being specifically mentioned in the act. Then for each one of these adjustment boards we created a commission to act on appeals. On these boards and commissions there were to be an equal number of representatives of the carriers and an equal number of the representatives of the employees. There was no final appeal in the House bill. There was a penalty provided for a violation of the first and second sections of Title III of the House bill.

The conference report adopts portions of the so-called Anderson amendment and of the bill as the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce originally reported it to the House. There is nothing in the conference bill of an antistrike character. There is no compulsion in the bill. The only thing that can be done by the railway labor board is to subpœna witnesses—to secure the attendance of witnesses—in order that a full, complete, and thorough investigation may be made.

We provide in the conference bill for the voluntary creation of adjustment boards, either by a single road or by a group of roads, by a single railroad employees' organization or by a group of railroad employees' organizations, and these adjustment boards are to have jurisdiction over disputes and matters of discipline, but not as to the matter of wages. The matter of wages is left to the railroad labor board, and this board can take jurisdiction of all appeals from adjustment boards and can determine them, and its decisions, so far as the machinery goes, is to be final.

There is nothing in the bill regarding the compulsory putting into effect of the award of this railway labor board. It relies for its effect upon the force of public opinion, and public opinion in this country is more effective than acts of legislatures and more effective than the decrees of courts. Public opinion once directed, as it will be, by the decisions of this railway labor board, will result in the adjustment of difficulties or will discourage the initiation of such difficulties. [Applause.]

I have been consistently opposed to antistrike legislation. I had not felt that it would be workable, even though it should be enacted into law, and I had come to that conclusion after a considerable study of the operation of antistrike laws in the various countries of Europe, countries which are as intelligent as our country and which have had large experience in railroad matters.

I find that whereas practically all of the countries of Europe during the first half of the last century have had antistrike legislation, and some of them had continued that legislation to comparatively recent years, these nations have repealed such laws. Let me call attention to some of these: France, by the act of 1849, made a strike a penal offense, but it was generally violated, and there were hundreds of prosecutions. So the act of 1864 recognized the right to strike on State railways particularly, as well as on public utilities. The Government in the great railroad strike in 1910, which started on the northern roads and spread to all the railroads of France, stopped that strike, although there was no law against striking. France stopped that strike, but how? By ordering the employees of the railways to the colors and threatening them with military punishment unless they responded or stayed at their tasks. But France has compulsory military service. We have not—yet. [Applause.]

Germany had no strikes prior to the war. The reason is plain. The Prussian railroads belonged to the Government, and every employee of the German roads was a Government official, semimilitary in character. Of course there were no strikes in Germany. The employees were not permitted to join unions. But since the war, since the armistice, there has not been any antistrike legislation, and the employees have the right to strike. Take Austria-Hungary. By the act of 1852 all strikes were made illegal. That law is no longer in force and effect. She has had her experience with such a law. She has repealed the law.

Italy, before 1889, made all strikes aud lockouts illegal. By the act of 1907 all State railway employees are made public servants, and yet with these laws Italy did not stop strikes. Look at the record. There were strikes in 1904, 1905, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1914, and only three weeks ago all Italy was tied up with a country-wide strike. With this experience of nations as intelligent as our own, will antistrike legislation be more workable in America than it has been found to be in the countries of Europe?

We believe that in the bill we have presented a fair and a just method of adjusting and settling labor disputes. Even a portion of labor is in favor of this plan as presented in this bill. One hundred and ten thousand employees of railroads have expressed their indorsement of this bill. The more it is studied and the better it is understood the more it will win favor with the American people.

Gentlemen, we must pass this legislation or there will be no legislation on the 1st day of March. The President, by proclamation issued December 24, ordered that the roads should return to private operation at 12.01 a. m. March 1. I am one of those who believe that that action on the part of the President is a completed act. Under the Federal control act, which gave him the authority to return the roads prior to 21 months after the proclamation of the treaty of peace, he has exercised the power granted him in that act, and his order so proclaimed is not revocable. So that on the 1st of March the roads will return to private operation, and unless this bill is enacted there will be no legislation to take care of them in the interim. Will you run the risk? Will you fail to pass this bill to enable the roads to live? [Applause, the Members rising.]

I append a synopsis, prepared by Middleton Beaman, of the House legislative drafting service, covering the provisions of the bill relating to short-line railroads; also the proclamation of the President of December 24, 1919, relinquishing Federal control of the railroads:

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL H. R. 10453, BENEFITING SHORT-LINE RAILROADS.

REIMBURSEMENTS OF DEFICITS DURING FEDERAL CONTROL.

Section 204 of the bill, on page 9, contains an important provision for the benefit of short lines. Under the terms of this section the carrier which operated its own lines during the period of Federal control and sustained a deficit is to be paid the amount by which its deficit during that period exceeds the corresponding deficits during the test period. If it was not in operation for at least a year of the test period, the amount payable is the entire deficit during the period of Federal control.

GUARANTY FOR SIX MONTHS.

Section 209 of the bill, on page 21, includes within the definition of carriers to whom the guaranty is applicable practically all short lines whether or not under Federal control.

If the line was under Federal control and a contract for compensation was made, the guaranty is of one-half the annual amount fixed for compensation. If the carrier had made no contract, the guaranty is that the railway operating income of the carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half of the amount estimated by the President as just compensation, with opportunity to the carrier to secure additional amounts if the Court of Claims overturns the President's estimate. If the contract has not been made and no estimate of just compensation is made by the President and the road during the test period was under a deficit, the guaranty is of the amount by which the deficit for the guaranty period as a whole exceeds one-half the annual deficit of the test period. If during the test period the road had a railway operating income the guaranty is that during the guaranty period as a whole the income shall not be less than one-half the average annual income during the test period.

RULE OF RATE MAKING.

An important benefit to the short lines is contained in the provisions of section 422 of the bill on pages 88 and following, which direct the commission to establish rates so that carriers as a whole will earn a fair return on the value of their property. The section also provides that railroads earning more than 6 per cent on the value of their property must divide the excess equally with the Government. The part so paid to the Government is to be placed in a revolving fund for the purpose of making loans to the weak roads and leasing to them equipment.

THROUGH RATES AND DIVISIONS OF RATES.

Section 400 of the bill, on page 52, lines 19 to 23, adds to the existing law a provision making it the duty of all carriers to establish just, equal, and equitable divisions of joint rates.

Section 418 of the bill, on page 83, line 23, to page 85, line 5, gives the commission power in all cases to determine what are the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions of joint rates, and in reaching its decision the commission is required to give due consideration to the efficiency with which the carriers are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their property, the importance to the public of the transportation services of the carriers, and also whether any participating carrier is an originating, intermediate, or delivering line, and any other fact which would ordinarily, without regard to the mileage haul, entitle one carrier to a greater proportion of the joint rate than another carrier.

DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC.

Section 420 of the bill, on page 87, gives to a carrier which has been deprived of its haul by reason of the diversion or delivery of traffic from its lines contrary to the routing instructions in the bill of lading a right of action against the carrier by which and to which such diversion is made, and the damages are the total amount of the rate or charge it would have received had it participated in the haul.

TRAFFIC NOT ROUTED BY SHIPPER.

Section 405 of the bill, page 65, lines 3 to 5, makes it unlawful for any carrier to unduly prejudice any connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper; and section 420 of the bill, page 88, lines 4 to 9, gives the commission power with respect to traffic not routed by the shipper to direct the route which such traffic shall take after it arrives at the terminus of one carrier or at a junction point with another carrier and is to be there delivered to another carrier. This provision removes the evil now existing resulting from the practice of the initial carrier in delivering freight at its terminus or junction point at the end of its haul to a favored carrier, thus depriving the short line of any opportunity for a fair division of the traffic.

JOINT USE OF TERMINALS.

Section 405 of the bill, in the paragraph beginning on page 65, line 6, authorizes the commission to require the terminal facilities of one carrier to be open to the use of another carrier, including within terminal facilities main-line track or tracks within a reasonable distance outside the terminal. This gives to many short-line roads opportunity to reach important traffic centers now closed to them.

CONSOLIDATIONS.

Section 407 of the bill, page 68, provides that the commission shall have authority to authorize pooling of traffic and earnings when found in the public interest. The commission may also authorize one carrier to acquire control of another by lease or stock control if in the public interest. The section further provides that the commission shall adopt a plan for the consolidation of railroad properties into a limited number of systems. Thereafter the commission may permit consolidations to be made in accordance with this plan. In all of the above cases, when the approval of the commission has been given, the carriers involved are relieved from all restraining or prohibitory laws, State or Federal, in so far as necessary to enable them to carry out any plan provided by the commission.

100 PER CENT OF COMPENSATION FOR FEDERAL CONTROL PERIOD.

Section 203 of the bill, on page 8, relieves the short lines against that provision of the Federal control act which allowed the President in cases where no compensation contract had been made to pay to the carrier only 90 per cent of the estimated amount of compensation. Section 203 permits the President to pay up to 100 per cent of the estimated amount in all cases and requires him to pay 100 per cent wherever necessary to enable the carrier to meet its fixed charges and the dividends accruing during the period for which compensation is due. The section further provides that the acceptance of benefits by the carrier will not deprive it of the right to pursue its remedies under the Federal control act for whatever amount it claims to be due.

LOANS TO RAILROADS.

Section 210 of the bill, on page 31, establishes a revolving fund of $300,000,000 for the purpose of making loans to the carriers during the two years' transition period following the termination of Federal control.

RELINQUISHMENT OF FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROADS AND SYSTEMS OF TRANSPORTATION.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, in the exercise of authority committed to me by law, I have heretofore, through the Secretary of War, taken possession of and have, through the Director General of Railroads, exercised control over certain railroads, systems of transportation, and property appurtenant thereto or connected therewith, including systems of coastwise and inland transportation, engaged in general transportation and owned or controlled by said railroads or systems of transportation, including also terminals, terminal companies and terminal associations, sleeping and parlor cars, private cars and private car lines, elevators, warehouses, telegraph and telephone lines, and all other equipment and appurtenances commonly used upon or operated as a part of such railroads and systems of transportation; and

Whereas I now deem it needful and desirable that all railroads, systems of transportation, and property now under such Federal control be relinquished therefrom;

Now, therefore, under authority of section 14 of the Federal control act approved March 21, 1918, and of all other powers and provisions of law thereto me enabling, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, do hereby relinquish from Federal control, effective the 1st day of March, 1920, at 12.01 o'clock a. m., all railroads, systems of transportation and property, of whatever kind, taken or held under such Federal control and not heretofore relinquished, and restore the same to the possession and control of their respective owners.

Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, or his successor in office, is hereby authorized and directed, through such agents and agencies as he may determine, in any manner not inconsistent with the provisions of said act of March 21, 1918, to adjust, settle, and close all matters, including the making of agreements for compensation, and all questions and disputes of whatsoever nature arising out of or incident to Federal control, until otherwise provided by proclamation of the President or by act of Congress; and generally to do and perform, as fully in all respects as the President is authorized to do, all and singular the acts and things necessary or proper in order to carry into effect this proclamation and the relinquishment of said railroads, systems of transportation, and property.

For the purpose of accounting and for all other purposes, this proclamation shall become effective on the 1st day of March, 1920, at 12.01 o'clock a. m.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done by the President, through Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, in the District of Columbia, this 24th day of December, the year of our Lord 1919, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-fourth.

[SEAL.] WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:

ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] used 1 hour and 12 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is recognized for 35 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the responsibility assumed by any Member of the House, and especially by a member of a conference committee on legislation of this importance, when he finds it impossible to agree to the bill reported from the conference. For nearly nine months, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I have labored with the committee under the able and distinguished leadership of my good friend and colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], in whose courage and honesty of conviction I have the utmost confidence, in order that we might produce a measure which every Member of this House might support without apology. But I know of no safe guide in the performance of private or public duty except the conscience and the judgment with which Providence may have endowed us. Believing, as I do, that this measure as here presented is built upon a false conception of the functions of government, that it violates the fundamental principles of this Republic, that it in effect sets up a favored class and confers upon them guaranties and safeguards accorded by legislation to no other class, I can not support it without doing violence to my convictions and to the oath which I took upon entrance into this House.

When this measure came before the House originally in November last from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, after the elimination of certain objectionable features which it contained, I supported it as it passed the House. While I did not agree to all its provisions, it was so much better than anything that seemed likely to pass through the Senate, so much better than the measure which had been reported from the appropriate committee of that body, that I felt constrained to give it my support. Therefore it can not be claimed that my opposition to this measure as now reported is based on any mere desire to defeat railroad legislation. I recognize full well that if and when the railroads are returned to their owners there must be legislation which will properly safeguard the rights and interests of all the people. But proper and sufficient legislation can be had without chaining the American people to this juggernaut of speculation which will result from the passage of this measure.

In a matter of this great importance, involving the rights and the interests of more than 100,000,000 people, involving also a legislative departure from any precedent ever set by this or any other similar legislative body, we owe it to ourselves no less than to those for whom we propose to legislate to scrutinize to the utmost and with every instrument available the effect which the passage of this measure will have upon the people as a whole, and upon the character and traditions of our Nation.

There are several provisions of this bill to which I object, but some of those objections might be overcome if others were not so serious, and, to me, insurmountable.

I think in fairness I should also say that there are some good provisions in the bill, for which, apart from the others, I would be glad to vote. There are many salutary amendments to the commerce act which I have heretofore indorsed, and which I have in my humble way assisted in having included in the bill which originally passed the House and even in the measure now before us. But in my opinion these excellent and salutary amendments to the general commerce act are entirely overbalanced and vitiated by what I believe to be the most uncalled-for and insidious departure from the true functions of legislation ever attempted by Congress in dealing with private industry or investment.

It is not necessary in this connection to discuss in any detail the policy or the necessity which resulted in the taking over of the roads by the Government during the war. It is well known by all who are familiar with conditions that this step was a prime necessity as a war measure. It is usually futile to speculate upon what might have happened in any circumstances if something had transpired that did not transpire. Therefore it is not worth while discussing now what might have been the result in the prosecution of the war and in the maintenance of the transportation facilities of the country if the Government had not taken over the roads and placed behind them and under them the power and the credit of the Government.

But we did take them over. We did operate them during the war. We did agree to pay them a sum equal to their average income for the three years previous, and we did agree that when returned they would be in practically as good physical condition as when taken over. In order that these agreements might be kept we have taxed the American people something over $850,000,000 in order to pay out of the National Treasury the losses sustained by the Government in the operation of the railroads. This amount must be wiped off the books as a war loss, due entirely to the fact that the expenses of the roads on account of increases in wages and costs of materials were larger than the increase in revenues resulting from increased rates.

The Government, however, has done much more than merely make good this loss. It has advanced to the roads out of the Treasury practically a billion and a quarter of dollars. Congress has already appropriated $1,250,000,000, and the pending bill carries an additional appropriation of $200,000,000, and the Railroad Administration informs us, through the director of finance, Mr. Sherley, that $436,000,000 more will be necessary as soon as the roads are returned to their owners, making a total of $1,886,000,000 taken out of the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the railroads. The human mind refuses to grasp these enormous figures, but we may catch a faint conception of what they mean when we understand that this sum represents nearly one-third of all the taxes paid into the Federal Treasury by the American people during the year just closed. Whether still other appropriations will be required need not now be discussed, but we may be prepared to expect that they will be requested if the amounts already provided for are not sufficient.

I do not claim that these enormous expenditures or advancements could or should have been avoided. It was perhaps necessary for the Government to become the creditor of the roads, since the Government possessed and operated them. But in dealing with them in this pending bill, and in providing for their operation and control in the future, we must keep constantly in mind what has already been done in order that we may not lose sight of the sum total of past and prospective future outlays in money, either directly out of the Treasury or from the people in the form of increased rates or increased taxes.

The bill now under consideration also creates a so-called revolving fund, taken from the Treasury, which is to be loaned by the Government to the railroads on long-term notes, amounting to $300,000,000. In addition it guaranties to them for the next six months the same proportionate income which they have received from the Government during the period of Federal control, and if the same ratio of revenue and expenses should prevail during that six months which has prevailed on the average during the Federal control, the loss to the Government by reason of this guaranty will amount to nearly $200,000,000. In addition to all this, the pending bill proposes to make good the losses of all the railroads sustained during the period of the war and Federal control, whether the roads were ever taken over or not and regardless of whether they rendered any service to the Government in connection with the war.

This is nothing more nor less than a gift out of the Public Treasury amounting to more than $25,000,000, which Congress is presenting to certain railroads, many of which have neither a legal nor a moral claim upon the bounty of the Government. Adding all these various sums together, we find that in addition to the clear loss of $854,000,000 which the Government has sustained during the period of Federal control, due to the causes heretofore stated, the Government will have invested in the railroads in the form of loans, advances, and expenditures for their improvement and equipment the enormous sum of more than $1,500,000,000, coming directly from the Treasury, and which got into the Treasury through the Government's power to tax the people.

Let us admit that these expenditures and this investment of public funds were necessary. Let us admit even that it was the duty of the Government to make them. We must not ignore the fact that the Government during the period of Federal control was paying the roads an average compensation greater than that which they received for any other period of three consecutive years which may be selected in all the history of American railroading, and we must not overlook the further fact that except for this enormous advancement of money by the Government for betterments, improvements, and equipment, the roads would have been compelled to borrow it from private sources or make the expenditures, so far as possible, from current earnings. In other words, during the period of Federal control the railroads have received the highest average rate of compensation for any like period in their history, have been able to pay their usual dividends and the interest on their bonds, have been able to borrow from the Government already more than a billion of dollars, and will be returned to their owners in practically as good condition as and in many instances better condition than when they were taken over by the Government.

In view of all these financial contributions to the roads by the Government and by the people, may we not with propriety pause to ask ourselves whether it is our duty, under the guise of returning the roads to their owners, to fasten upon the people of the Nation a legislative guaranty of 6 per cent, or any other per cent, upon the value of all the railroad property in the United States? May we not with propriety and candor ask ourselves whether we should embark upon this untried sea of fixing by law the net return which shall be guaranteed to any form of private industry?

When this bill was reported to the House in November last it contained a provision authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission, in determining the justness and reasonableness of rates and charges, to take into consideration four things: The interest of the public, the interest of the shipper, the expenses of operation, including wages and taxes, and a fair return upon the value of the property held and used for transportation.

The House will remember the serious objections which were urged against this provision, because it singled out four things, at least two of which were vague and meaningless and by implication eliminated scores and even hundreds of other matters which the commission has always considered, and ought always to consider, in passing upon rates. By an overwhelming vote in the House that provision was stricken out of the bill and the law restored and left as it has existed ever since the commerce act was passed originally. This law and the practice of the commission have required that in the adjustment of controversies growing out of rates and charges by the railroads the chief consideration should be given to the question of justness and reasonableness, and this justness and reasonableness was a quality which must be applied not only to the railroads themselves but to the public as well.

For a rate that is unreasonably high for the carriers immediately becomes unjust to the public, and a rate that is unreasonably low for the public becomes unjust to the carriers. Consequently, the rule which has required that rates must be just and reasonable has been made to apply with equal force to the roads and to the public served by them.

When this railroad bill was originally introduced into the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] it did not contain the provision which has since become generally known as "section 6," but is now section 422 of the pending bill, which in the bill as it passed the Senate provided that the commission should so adjust and fix the rates to be charged by the railroads as to produce a return of 6 per cent net upon the value of the property of all the railroads in the United States, the value to be ascertained and fixed by the commission. However, when the railroad bill was finally reported to the Senate from the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce it contained this section 6, and it was included in the measure as it passed the Senate in December; and this section, and the guaranty provisions which it contained, constituted one of the great stumbling blocks over which the House and Senate conferees labored for many weeks.

During the long hearings held by the House committee on this legislation, covering a period of more than two months and a half, when the proponents of this guaranteed return appeared and urged its inclusion in the House bill, it received scant consideration, in spite of the able counsel who were employed to urge it upon the committee. I am sure my distinguished friend from Wisconsin, the chairman of the committee [Mr. ESCH], will not contradict that statement. It was given so little serious consideration that it was not proposed by anyone in the committee, and it is doubtful whether it would have received a vote if it had been proposed.

But there has been in existence during all the consideration of this legislation an organization whose sole object has been to foist this proposal upon the American people. While the people of the Nation have been bending their energies to solve the great problems which have come to the surface as a result of the World War, while they have their minds on other things, this organization has camped on the doorsteps of Congress, engaging in and directing the most powerful propaganda ever undertaken in behalf of private interests, and as a result of their activities we find in this measure what I consider the most vicious and insidious departure from established principles of equality and justice ever sanctioned by a legislative body. This poverty-stricken organization has maintained in the National Capital for more than a year luxuriously appointed quarters, with high-salaried agents constantly on hand to urge that legislative safeguards be afforded to them which no other class of industry or investment has ever received or requested.

In order that we may understand just what this provision does for the railroads and to the people, let me state it in a few sentences. It directs the commission to "initiate, modify, establish, or adjust" rates so that carriers as a whole will earn an aggregate annual net income equal to a "fair" return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation; and then follows a provision which declares that for the next two years this "fair" return shall be fixed at 5½ per cent plus an additional one-half of 1 per cent for betterments and improvements, which makes a total of 6 per cent net that the bill instructs the commission to produce on the aggregate value of all the property of all the railroads in the country. It then provides that if any road shall make more than 6 per cent under the rates fixed by the commission one-half of the excess shall be set apart in a fund to be used by the roads in making improvements and betterments chargeable to capital account, and the other one-half shall be paid to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the creation of a "revolving" fund to be used in making loans to other railroads or in purchasing equipment, such as cars, engines, and other equipment to be leased to them.

Those who have urged this proposition upon Congress have set up the claim that it is necessary to do it because the Interstate Commerce Commission has not treated the railroads fairly in the past in fixing rates. They claim that this thing must be done in order that capital may be induced to invest in railroad securities, in order that new capital may be brought into the railroad industry, in order that there may be larger extensions of railroad lines and railroad facilities in the United States. In other words, they tell us that in order that credit may be restored to the railroads of the country it is necessary for Congress by legislative enactment to put stilts under them and inject into their stocks values to which they are not entitled under normal conditions.

Let us examine the administration of the law which has existed for more than a quarter of a century. Let us look briefly into the history of railroading, the history of dividends, the history of the growth of American railroads in order to determine whether this indictment against the Interstate Commerce Commission is just or well founded. And in that connection I hope the Members of this House will not forget that the enactment of this measure in its present form is a legislative confirmation of all the charges and assertions which have been made against the commission by certain railroads which have for years been clamoring against it. It is a legislative indictment of the policy of the commission which has been upheld by the Supreme Court in scores of cases which they have decided. It is a legislative approval of all the anathemas which have been hurled at the commission by the railroad security holders who have demanded that, whatever else may happen, their dividends must be vouchsafed and guaranteed to them.

I maintain that this unprecedented, un-American, and unwholesome departure from the true functions of legislation is unnecessary, and in support of that assertion I summon the statements and records of the railroads themselves on file under oath before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I quote briefly from a table taken from "Statistics of railways in the United States," based upon the records on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is as follows:

I call attention to the fact that in 1888, one year after the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, one year after the passage of the act to regulate commerce, which became necessary on account of flagrantly abusive practices engaged in by some of the railroads, and before this commission had even adopted a policy of any sort or any uniformity of decisions, the percentage of railroad stock which paid dividends to the stockholders was only 38.35 per cent of the entire stock of the railroads. What was their trouble then? The commission had done nothing to them, for it had just been created. But under this repressive, stingy, and niggardly regulative body the percentage of railroad stock which paid dividends to the stockholders gradually increased until in 1917, the year before the roads were taken over by the Government, 63.32 per cent of all the railroad stock in the United States paid dividends, representing an increase of more than 64 per cent in dividend-paying railroad stock during 30 years of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This table also shows that while in 1888 the amount of dividends actually paid, if scattered over all the roads in the country, would have amounted to an average of 2.08 per cent upon the whole, under the policy of regulation under the administration of the commission subsequent to that date the condition of the roads and their earning power gradually became better until, in 1917, the amount of dividends actually paid, if scattered over all the roads in the country, would have amounted to 4.24 per cent upon the total amount of stock outstanding.

I desire to submit also and briefly quote from another table compiled from statements and records on file before the Interstate Commerce Commission showing the average rate of dividends paid by dividend-paying stock from June 30, 1892, to June 30, 1916, and for the calendar years 1916 and 1917, also the rate of earnings per mile of line, the per cent of property investment per mile for the same period, and the corporate surplus accumulations for each year from 1910 to 1917, both inclusive:

It will be seen from these figures that in 1892, four years after the adoption of the commerce act, only four years after the creation of the commission, the average dividend paid by the dividend-paying roads was only 5.35 per cent. But in 1917, 25 years afterwards, during all of which time this alleged repressive policy of the commission had been in operation, the dividends paid by the dividend-paying roads, comprising 65 per cent of the total, amounted to a net income of 6.81 per cent upon the stock, as represented by their dividends.

Therefore it is my earnest contention that there is no basis for the claim that in the past the Interstate Commerce Commission has held back dividends necessary to create credit among the railroads of the country.

It will be observed also from the statement contained in the table to which I have referred that during the past 25 years there has been an increase in the net earnings of the railroads per mile of line from $2,194 in 1892, until in 1916 the net earnings per mile of line amounted to $4,277, and in 1917 it was $3,811 per mile. In 1892 the ratio of income to cost per mile was 3.77 per cent, while in 1917 it was 5.27 per cent, and for the previous year it was 6.17 per cent. As already stated, the dividend rate had advanced from 5.35 in 1892 to 6.81 in 1917, and this is abundantly confirmed by the facts which show beyond all doubt that for the three years just prior to Federal control the roads had made the greatest earnings for any similar period in their history.

But these figures do not tell the whole story. The advocates of this guaranty proposal have told us that railroad construction will not continue in this country unless this guaranty of earnings is provided by law; and that it is necessary for Congress to legislate out of existence for them the ordinary hazards of business, and the human equations which enter into the question of failure or success in every other human enterprise. But in my judgment this claim, like the others, can not be sustained by the records and the information at our disposal with reference to the increase in railroad mileage in this country during the past years. I call your attention to the following table, which shows the increase in railroad mileage for each decade beginning with the year 1835 and ending with 1917:

Increase in railroad mileage in United States since 1835.

	Per cent.
1835 to 1840, from 1,098 to 2,818; net increase, 1,720	170
1840 to 1850, from 2,818 to 9,021; net increase, 6,203	220
1850 to 1860, from 9,021 to 30,635; net increase, 21,614	240
1860 to 1870, from 30,635 to 52,922; net increase, 22,287	73
1870 to 1880, from 52,922 to 93,671; net increase, 40,749	86
1880 to 1890, from 93,671 to 159,271; net increase, 65,600	70
1890 to 1900, from 159,271 to 192,940; net increase, 33,669	21
1900 to 1910, from 192,940 to 238,609; net increase, 45,669	24
1910 to 1913, from 238,609 to 249,803; net increase, 11,194	5
1910 to 1917, from 238,609 to 258,913; net increase, 20,304	8½

It will thus be seen that the increased mileage for the past 20 years amounts to more than 65,000 miles, a most remarkable record in view of the fact that gradually the virgin territory for the construction of pioneer railroad lines has grown less and less as the total mileage has increased. And while the percentage of increase for the earlier years is large as compared with the percentage for more recent years, we must not overlook the fact that as the total mileage increased, thus increasing the basis for calculation, the relative percentage would necessarily decrease, as indicated in the figures already given.

Not only has the increase in mileage in the last 20 years been enormous and uninterrupted, taking into consideration the gradual lessening of the areas suitable for railroad construction, but the increase in new construction since 1890 has kept pace with the increase in the population of the country. I quote again from the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission and from a table furnished to me by a member of that commission, showing the population of the country each year from 1890 to 1915, together with the total railway mileage for the same period, the miles of line per 100 square miles of territory, and the inhabitants per mile of line:

From 1890 to 1915 the population of the country increased 60 per cent, the railroad mileage increased 58 per cent, and the miles of line per 100 square miles of territory 54 per cent, showing that population and railroad mileage have gone along hand in hand in the development of the Nation. And this parallel is more remarkable when we consider that the territory and need for new railroad construction has grown less as compared with the necessary increase in population.

Again, we have been told that in order to induce new capital to invest in railroad securities, it is necessary for Congress to guarantee a net return of 6 per cent upon the value of railroad property. That the roads have lost their credit, and in order that they may restore it, we must give them a privileged status never given by legislation to any other group of men or interests in the history of the United States. I deny that there is any such condition, or that, if it exists, it is due to anything the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other branch of this Government has done in dealing with the railroads. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

According to the statements of the railroads themselves on file before the Interstate Commerce Commission, in 1908 the railway capital of all the roads in the country was $16,198,731,489. In 1917 their railway capital, according to their own figures, was $19,754,941,991, an increase of $3,556,210,502 in a period of nine years. Their actual investment, as reported by and taken from their statements, in 1908 was $13,213,766,540, and in 1917 it was $18,574,297,873, an increase in investment of $5,360,531,333 in the same period of nine years. It seems preposterous to me to claim that the Government, through any agency it has set up, has so held the roads back, so repressed and depressed them, that they have lost their credit and are unable to invite capital to invest in them, when their actual investment has increased in 10 years more than 25 per cent, if they are telling the truth, and their mileage has increased as I have shown, their net return per mile and as a whole has constantly increased, and all the elements of growth and profit have been constantly increasing ever since they have been regulated under the law. There is but one conclusion which can be accepted as a result of these admitted facts. If the credit of the railroads has been impaired or lost, it is due to the conduct or misconduct of those who have manipulated them in an orgy of speculation, which resulted in the wrecking of many of the roads of the country in times too recent to be forgotten. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We are asked now to pass a law that will penalize all the people in order to condone past misconduct and give value to stocks which were robbed of their value by financial manipulators. What will be the result if this measure shall pass and become a law?

My friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] tells us that this is not a guaranty; and he is correct to the extent and in the sense that any deficit that might occur on any individual railroad would not be paid out of the Public Treasury. But I can see no difference in principle between levying taxes direct by the Federal Government to be turned over to the railroads and telling or instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission that it shall not only permit but see to it that the railroads themselves may tax the people direct in the form of increased railroad rates. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have asked officials of the commission to estimate for me what it will take in increased rates to restore the relationship between income and expenses which existed before Federal control and to provide for the guaranteed net return established by this bill, and I am informed that it will take increases which will amount in the aggregate to $1,214,000,000 per annum over the present revenues of the roads, to be collected from the people who are already overburdened with taxes and expenses of living. In a speech delivered not long ago by Director General Hines, whom I regard as one of the ablest railroad men in the United States, he made the statement that each dollar's increase in freight rates was multiplied four or five times in the ultimate cost to the consumer. I do not know whether his estimate is absolutely correct or not; but if we shall cut it down 50 per cent and say that he was only half correct in his estimate, the result of this legislation will be that the American people will have to dig out of their pockets between two and a half and three billion dollars for the railroads of the country in order that the unsuccessful, the mismanaged, and, in many cases, the extravagant and dishonest railroads may declare dividends, and in order that there may be injected into their stocks a value to which they are not entitled under any reasonable or normal conditions that exist in any industry in the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What else will this legislation do? The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] has told us to-day that this is not a guaranty. But when he presented the original Esch bill to the House in November he discussed this very question in his report to the House and made one of the best arguments against it which I have heard or seen from anybody who has discussed it. In that report, filed on November 10, 1919, after discussing at some length the objections to such a scheme from the standpoint of both propriety and legality, and with reference also to its practical workability, and after condemning it in unmeasured terms with what I believe was perfect candor and sincerity, he used the following language:

> It is contended that this plan is not in fact a guaranty, in that the Government is not responsible for losses. Yet the Government, through the commission, assures the security holders of the railroads that it will, under all circumtances and regardless of fluctuations in traffic, so adjust the rates that they will produce 6 per cent, for example, on the aggregate property investment account. This is nothing less than a guaranty.

That is the language of the gentleman from Wisconsin in his report upon the bill that passed this House in November. It was, in his opinion, a guaranty then, and it is equally a guaranty now. It is a guaranty, and the mere fact that the money which goes to make it good does not flow directly from the Treasury of the United States does not make it any the less a guaranty, because the same people who pay money into the Treasury of this Government will be compelled to pay the increased costs of transportation necessary to make good to the railroads the guaranty contained in this measure.

I can not, Mr. Speaker, support a measure which compels the people of the Nation to pay tribute to inefficiency and extravagance, in order that railroads that do not deserve 6 per cent or any other fixed or established per cent shall receive that return, and in order that the ordinary hazards of business and investment shall disappear through the magic touch of legislation. I can not support a measure which insures one class against failure by levying tribute upon others not similarly protected.

But in order to give this proposal a semblance of propriety, it is provided that if any railroad in the United States shall make more than 6 per cent, upon rates which have been declared to be legal, just, and reasonable, one-half of that excess shall be taken from it and used to create a fund to be loaned to other roads, or used to purchase equipment to be leased to them. In other words, after the commission has fixed rates that under the law are presumed to be just and reasonable, if any railroad, by honesty, efficiency, economy, and good management, should make more than 6 per cent, it is to be penalized by taking from it one-half of the excess above 6 per cent for the benefit of other roads which may not have been so efficiently, economically, or honestly managed, or which in the nature of things could not keep pace with their competitors.

I can not rid myself of the deep conviction that this is an unprecedented, if not vicious, departure from the legislative history of this Nation, for never before have we gone so far as to penalize economy and efficiency in order that the opposite qualities might receive more than their share of the rewards of honest effort. And if this policy shall be adopted with respect to the railroads, is there any reason in logic why it ought not to be adopted or why it may not be demanded with respect to other business in the United States?

The Constitution confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign countries. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court and the practices of the commission and other bodies from time to time established by Congress this power has developed into the regulation not only of commerce itself but also of the instrumentalities of commerce, which includes the railroads. Therefore, if it is wise and proper, if it is in accordance with the theories and principles of our Government, that Congress shall not merely regulate commerce but shall regulate the earnings of commerce, why shall we not be compelled to follow this policy in logical sequence in the future and regulate the earnings of individuals and corporations which ship commerce over the railroads or produce things that enter into commerce? If we are to embark upon the policy of taking away from prosperous and successful railroads in order to give to unsuccessful or poorly managed railroads, why is it not just as righteous and as fair to take away from prosperous corporations or individuals a part of their earnings in order that it may be given to the improvident and the shiftless?

I maintain that neither of these things is constitutional. I took an oath when I came into this House to support the Constitution of the United States. I interpret that oath to mean that I would not, in the performance of my duties as a Member of this House, violate the fundamental law of the land upon the preservation of which depends the perpetuity of this Republic. There is a provision in that immortal document which declares that property shall not be taken from its rightful owner for the use of others without due process of law; nor can it be taken from its owner even for a public purpose without just compensation.

Let us see how this legislation will operate to do violence to that solemn constitutional safeguard to the rights of property. In order that this average of 6 per cent net may be guaranteed to all the railroads it will be admittedly necessary for those who live along or patronize well-managed, successful, and honest roads to pay more than the service they receive is worth, more than the roads themselves may ask for or need, in order that a fund may be created which is to be used for the benefit of others. Therefore if these well-managed and successful roads, under lawful rates which must in theory at least be "just and reasonable," are able by the exercise of economy and prudent business management to earn more than 6 per cent net, under the law and under the guaranties provided in the Constitution it belongs to them. If the rate is lawful, if it is approved by the commission as just and reasonable, they are entitled to earn all they can under that rate, and they are entitled to keep it as their reward for efficiency and economy.

We have no constitutional right to take away from them what they have saved honestly through efficient management in order to bolster up the credit of weak, mismanaged, or inefficient railroads. And if, upon the theory that a particular road is earning more than it is entitled to, we have a right to take away a part of its earnings, certainly we have no right, in the first place, to take it away from the people who pay it. For if a railroad earns more than it is entitled to earn or retain, it is because it is permitted or compelled to collect from the people an unreasonable rate which results in the excess, and if the people are paying an unreasonable rate to one road, in order that some other road somewhere else may be helped, we are taking away from them a part of their property without due process of law and without compensation. This, in my opinion, renders the law doubly unconstitutional. If the rates which the railroads collect are lawful rates, are just and reasonable for the service rendered, the roads are entitled to the earnings they may be able to realize from them. If they collect, even with the permission of the commission or under its compulsion, rates which are more than reasonable, and therefore unreasonable and unlawful, the excess belongs to the people, and they are entitled to retain what is theirs until it is taken away from them in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. And if this provision for taking a part of the excess shall be declared unconstitutional, and many roads are allowed or compelled to collect rates higher than they are entitled to, the result will be the taking from the people of hundreds of millions of dollars in excessive freight rates without even receiving an indirect benefit from the excess payment. There would in that event be no provision for the recapture of any of the excess or for its return to those who had paid it.

Now, let us see about the question of the valuation of the railroads upon which this 6 per cent net return is to be based. In 1913, seven years ago, Congress passed an act providing for the physical valuation of the railroads of the country. Up to the present time only five or six of them have been valued, and those five or six are contesting the valuation placed upon them by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is admitted by everybody who knows anything about it that the valuation of the railroads of the whole country can not be completed within the next two years. Therefore during that two years we can not know with any degree of accuracy what the total value of the railroads is upon which we propose to fix this net return of 6 per cent. I received in my mail to-day a letter from Mr. Samuel Rae, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., inclosing a speech which he had made somewhere asserting that the total value of the railroads of the United States amounts to more then $24,000,000,000. Under the Interstate Commerce Commission's reports their total capital is a little more than $19,000,000,000 and their total investment a little more than $18,000,000,000. Others whose opinions are entitled to consideration contend that their real value is much less than either figure given above. Whose estimate is to be taken? Whose figures are to be used as the basis upon which this tribute from the American people is to be required? It may be said that the commission shall fix its own value. But what will be its standard of valuation in the absence of the completed valuation provided for in the valuation act? Will its valuation be what it would require to reproduce the property at present prices? Or would its standard be the price the property would bring at a fair voluntary sale? Or shall the valuation be based upon earning capacity? All these standards may result in different amounts, and a combination of the three in still different figures.

The absurdity of fastening upon the country a rate structure which is designed to guarantee 6 per cent net upon a valuation that can only be guessed at is so obvious that it is almost inconceivable that Congress would seriously consider it. And the absurdity increases when we realize that this standard of return will be a permanent standard, for notwithstanding the bill provides that after the two years shall expire, after the rate structure has been set and ordained to produce 6 per cent, the commission may establish a different standard of what is a "fair" return, we know it will not be reduced, because the congressional sanction of 6 per cent as a minimum will be powerfully persuasive to operate against any reduction that might be possible. Therefore we are by this legislation compelling the commission to guarantee to the roads 6 per cent upon the value of their property when they themselves do not know what that value is.

This is a guaranty against failure. This is an attempt at legislative favoritism never before conceived by Congress nor proposed by others. It would be impossible of accomplishment if the people were fully aware of its real significance. This bill removes the incentive to individual initiative and responsibility. It takes away the hope of highest reward for work well done, the most powerful driving force that ever spurred men on to noble effort. It penalizes industry and brains and economy, and pays a tribute to inefficiency and improvidence. It reverses the doctrine of the Sacred Book by taking from those who can and will what is theirs and bestowing it upon those who can not or will not. It attempts to insure one class of investors against the risks of adversity and poor judgment, leaving all other classes to struggle along handicapped and hindered by the human frailties that beset us all. But I presume we should not despair. Congress is tedious, and the people are patient and long-suffering, and it may be that in due time legislation will remove the inequalities of judgment and foresight with which Providence has seen fit to burden us, and we will all be legislated into a common and monotonous level of intellect and merit where 6 per cent net may be our portion, whatever comes or goes.

During the past five years ending with 1919, the total liabilities of commercial concerns which failed in the United States amounted to the sum of $959,250,991, which is more than one-twentieth of the value of all the railroads of the country as claimed by the roads. There was never any thought of guaranty against loss or failure there, nor any congressional declaration of a fixed return upon the value of their property.

The liabilities of commercial enterprises and the proportion of men who enter business and fail have been variously estimated from time to time. But according to information contained in the issue of January 20, 1920, of Dun's Review, issued by the Mercantile Agency of R. G. Dun & Co., the average number of concerns in business in the United States per year during the last 30 years was 1,375,000. During that period of 30 years 391,289 commercial concerns failed. This was 28.5 per cent of the average number engaged in business during that period. Their total liabilities amounted to the enormous sum of $4,596,821,576, an amount equal to one-fourth the value of all the railroads in the United States, and do not include bank failures, amounting to $731,551,050. But nobody has ever proposed that Congress shall by legislation insure commercial enterprises against failure or financial stress. It would have been a wonderful thing if 25 or 30 years ago Congress had possessed the foresight to guarantee everybody against failure and bankruptcy. Billions of dollars in losses would have been avoided, and hundreds of thousands of men and women would have been saved from suffering and humiliation.

Why shall we guarantee one branch of industry, one kind of security, against failure or fluctuation, while we leave all others out in the weather to battle with the surging sea of competition and strife? The merchant must take his chances of success. The lawyer and the physician must accept the uncertainty which goes with their professions. The manufacturer must undergo all the hardships and all the hazards of the producing world before he is sure of success. The farmer must contest with soil and season and all the vicissitudes which the elements may visit upon him. All these and others have no guaranty from the Government, and never have had. Perhaps they may never ask one. But is it fair to them, is it fair to the millions in this Nation who toil and spin, who ask the Government for nothing except the right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"—is it fair to ask them, and all who shall come after them, to bear increased burdens in order that special favors may be bestowed by law upon one class which is set apart? To ask the question is to give its most emphatic answer.

I have no desire that the railroads of this country shall be dealt with other than in a spirit of liberality. I want them to succeed. I want them to pay dividends. I would like for every stockholder to be satisfied with his investment and realize upon it. But I look with great alarm upon the policy of saying by statutes what private industry shall earn and compelling those not engaged in it to make good the declaration.

I am willing to leave that liberality to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I have faith in their ability and their integrity. I think they, like everybody else, have learned something from the history of the past few years, and I know they are better qualified than Congress to determine the question both of earnings and of compensation for the services performed by the railways of this Nation. I am not willing to say by legislation that their policy in the past has been unjust, or that they have failed to recognize their obligation to the people and to the carriers over whom they have exercised jurisdiction. If Congress has lost its confidence in this great commission, which has grown in the respect and admiration of the people from its organization, it ought to abolish it and set up some other tribunal to take its place. This legislation will open a Pandora's box of trouble for the future, from which we will not soon escape. It commits us to a policy unsound in theory, insidious in its effect, and demoralizing to the Nation as a whole.

It enthrones money and makes a commodity of human labor, for while it makes it the duty of the roads and their employees to settle their wage and other controversies among themselves without resort to the tribunals set up in the act, it provides that those mutual agreements and settlements may be interfered with or set aside if calculated to interfere with dividends and net return of 6 per cent. It makes it impossible for either roads or employees to know whether their mutual and friendly settlements among themselves will be respected or permitted to endure, and thus by making everything revolve around the question of guaranteed return, forgetting the rights and the interests of those whose toil and whose patronage make success possible, this measure is designed to lift finance and the devotees of finance by pressing down upon all others.

Hence I protest against it. I protest against it in the name of the Constitution. I protest against it in the name of legislative propriety. I protest against it in the name of the sacred and fundamental doctrines of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, upon which the Nation was built and has grown great. I protest against it in the name of a hundred million people who will be compelled to pay tribute to the blunders of the past and the improvidence of the future. It is in this spirit that I express the hope that this measure may be sent back to the conference committee, where its objectionable features may be eliminated and a measure brought back which men can support without apology or regret, in the belief that they have performed their duty to their country. [Applause on the Democratic side, the Members rising.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin wish to yield to some one now, or shall I do so?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; we will yield to some one now, if agreeable to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. If it is agreeable to me that the gentleman from Wisconsin should yield further time?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield, in behalf of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if one were to accept all the premises that are laid down in an argument made by any individual, it would follow as a matter of pure reasoning that the conclusion arrived at by that individual was correct. And, therefore, if one were to accept all the premises laid down by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], it would follow naturally as a sequence in reasoning that his conclusion was correct. But some of the premises laid down by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] are not correct.

In the first place, he asserts here, and asserts it beyond the fear of contradiction, that there is an explicit guaranty of 5½ or 6 per cent to every railroad in the country. I assert with equal positiveness, as a lawyer, that nowhere in this bill—in any line thereof—can he find by clear implication or by direction that there is a guaranty to any specific railroad of any particular amount. [Applause.] The contingent fund is to be devoted to certain purposes clearly outlined and defined in the bill, and it nowhere expresses any intent or declaration that any road in any region nor any road in a system as a whole is to be given a guaranty of either 5½ or 6 per cent. All that the contingent provision does say is that it shall be raised from the excess earnings of the various companies, and that it shall be paid to the Interstate Commerce Commission as a trustee, and that that trustee shall pay out that money for the improvement and betterment of the various companies as the need may be, and for the payment of rental for leased lines for transportation facilities. There is a vast difference in the explanation of the gentleman's bill as he defines it and in the explanation of the bill as it is written. Therefore that premise is not correct, and therefore his conclusion is not correct.

In the next place, he says this legislation is an indictment of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I refute that. One of the most prominent members of the Interstate Commerce Commission is Mr. Clarke; another, an ex-member of that commission, is Judge Prouty; and both of them indorse this legislation and this plan. [Applause.] Would they, as members and ex-members of this commission, be willing to write an indictment against themselves and then plead guilty to the same? So much, then, for these premises that are laid down by my distinguished friend from Kentucky.

Now, let us get down to the essence of this thing. I have prepared here in my humble way an argument as to the constitutionality of this clause in reference to rate making. I have some preliminary remarks here which I desire to have placed in the RECORD, but rather than take up the time of the committee—and only 15 minutes have been assigned to me—I propose to get right down to the question that has been propounded by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], to wit: Is this provision of rate making and this division of the excess earnings of these various companies constitutional or not? I have just as much reverence for the Constitution as the gentleman claims and no doubt has. I do not know a man upon the floor of this House who does not join in that sentiment. But there are various constructions of what may be or may not be constitutional. And right here I beg leave to differ with the gentleman in regard to this construction.

Now, let me give you, if I can, very briefly, the reasons for my belief. I have, preliminary to what I am about to say, summarized the provisions of this clause of the bill. I have pointed out, as well as I am able, that this bill endeavors and does actually consider the transportation systems of the country as a whole or in regional districts. I have tried to show that the bill considers that phase of the question, and that phase of the question only, in making up these rates, and determining what shall be a just, fair, and reasonable rate. And there can be no doubt that if anyone reads the bill he must come to the conclusion inevitably that the purpose of the legislators here was to consider the transportation system of the country as a whole or in regions to be designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, taking that as a premise, what follows?

During the consideration of railroads, and so forth, under Government control one should be able to free his mind from all prejudice, local sentiment, or personal interest, and at the same time try to legislate for the greatest good to the greatest number, regardless of classes or persons or interests directly and selfishly affected. This may be difficult, as all are naturally subject to the influences of environment and personal welfare, but the duty is imperative when one honestly desires to obtain the best results. The mere statement of some facts will demonstrate the above assertion. This legislation affects the welfare of all the people of this country, in number over 100,000,000. The mileage of the railroads in the year 1918 was 257,618 miles, and of this mileage 240,179 miles were taken over by the Government. The stockholders owning this mileage number 670,000; the bondholders of the various railroads over 300,000. In 1913, $1,200,000,000 of railway stocks and bonds were held by savings banks and trust companies, and it is now estimated that savings banks, with over 4,000,000 shareholders, held $1,500,000,000 in railway securities in 1918. In addition to this, it is estimated that the National and State banks hold at least $500,000,000 of railway securities, and that the life insurance companies have of their assets above 30 per cent invested in such securities. Over 2,000,000 men are employed in railroad service, with a total pay roll of over $2,500,000,000 per annum, and the amount invested in 250,473 miles of line in 1918, with deductions properly made, was nearly $18,000,000,000.

When, in addition to these startling facts, we also consider the great number of people dependent upon the 2,000,000 railway employees, and the very great number of shippers and travelers over these arteries of trade and communication, one should be more than ever impressed with the gravity of the problem that confronts the legislator in trying to solve it and obtain the best remedy in the solution.

There are many who are opposed to any form of legislation at this time and who approach this subject in a spirit of opposition. There are others who seem to be governed by partisan feeling, and again others are influenced by class distinction; and there may be—and no doubt are—many who are selfishly influenced by financial considerations. Whilst all these elements naturally have some weight in the personal determination of the legislator, I sincerely believe that one should attempt to free himself as much as possible from these considerations and view the matter solely in the light of the greatest good to the greatest number, and with the desire to enact some legislation rather than to oppose all forms of legislation because of the considerations above mentioned. The subject is so large that in the limited time given for debate no one can fully discuss the entire theme, and I shall not attempt in the brief time allotted me to discuss more than one feature of the conference report and the bill submitted by the conference.

I, however, shall refer to section 422, page 88, of the present bill, which contains the rule of rate making, and the discussion of which is found on pages 67 and 68 of the conference report. In brief, this section directs the commission to make rates adequate to provide the carrier as a whole—either in the entire country, or in rate groups or territory to be established by the commission—with an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return on the aggregate value of the railway property held for and to be used in the service of transportation. The designation of the rate districts is left to the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the same commission is authorized to determine the value of railway property and is specifically directed not to give undue consideration to the property investment account of the railroads. The commission is also authorized from time to time to determine and publish what percentage constitutes a fair return on the value of railway property, except for the two years beginning March 1, 1920. The bill declares in this section that 5½ per cent of the aggregate value of the railway property, as above ascertained, shall constitute a fair return, unless the commission in its discretion adds thereto, in whole or in part, one-half of 1 per cent of such value, to make provision for improvements and betterments chargeable to capital account. The result of these provisions is that 5½ per cent is fixed as a minimum and 6 per cent as a maximum during the next two years, and thereafter the matter is left to the discretion of the commission.

The bill further provides, in this regard, that if any carrier earns in any year a net railway operating income in excess of 6 per cent of the value of its railway property, as above ascertained, one-half of such excess must be placed in a reserve fund until such fund equals 5 per cent of the value of the carrier's property, and thereafter may be used for any lawful purpose by the carrier. The other one-half of such excess income must be paid into a general railroad contingent fund to be administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and this contingent fund is to be used to make loans to carriers, to meet expenditures for capital account, or to purchase equipment, to be leased to the carriers. The making of such loans and the obtaining and leasing of such equipment are left to the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The above analysis and statement briefly sums the gist of this portion of the bill. It will be noted the rate-making power still remains with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it should also be noted that the commission shall not only initiate but that it has the right to modify or adjust rates, so that carriers—or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate—will under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for structures and equipment earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation. Let me call your attention to the phrase, "A fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation."

The commission is also charged with the duty of considering, in the making of rates, the transportation needs of the country and the necessity of enlarging such transportation facilities, and it is impressed with the duty of making rates uniform for all in the rate group or territory which may be designated by the commission, and, further, that in consideration of this question of rates, due consideration shall be given to all the elements of value recognized by the law of the land for rate-making purposes, but shall give to the property investment account of the carrier only that consideration which under such law it is entitled to in establishing value for rate-making purposes.

From the reserve fund above mentioned the carrier may draw a sum sufficient to pay dividends or interest on its bonds or other securities or rent for leased roads, except only, however, to the extent that its net railway operating income for any year is less than a sum equal to 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held for and used by it in the service of transportation, determined as hereinbefore referred to, and this reserve fund shall not be drawn upon for any other purpose.

The purposes of the contingent fund have already been mentioned, but are more specifically set forth on page 94 of the bill under subdivision 10 of section 211. In brief, this contingent fund shall be used by the commission in the furtherance of public interests in railway transportation, either by making loans to carriers to meet expenditures for capital account or to refund maturing securities originally issued for capital account or by purchasing transportation equipment and facilities and leasing same to carriers—all such loans to be adequately secured—and if there is a balance remaining in the contingent fund it shall be invested in obligations of the United States or deposited in authorized depositaries of the United States from time to time.

Care has been taken in this summary to present the salient features of this portion of the rate-making provision, because argument, no doubt, will be made that the creation of such a contingent fund and such a reserve fund and payment to the Government of the earnings in excess of 6 per cent and dividing the same in the way designated by the provisions of the bill is unconstitutional, in that when a carrier under the rules and regulations prescribed, declaring how a rate shall be made and how it shall be earned, earns more than the designated per cent that the earning carrier is legally entitled thereto. In other words, that when a rate has been declared a reasonable rate, and that rate which has been ascertained by certain rules is also declared to be just and reasonable, no portion of the earnings obtained by such rate can afterwards be declared as unfair and unreasonable, and that the taking away by the Government, except by taxation or similar process, is unlawful and unconstitutional. I am frank to say that when I first met this problem my old-fashioned idea of the rights of property and the sanctity thereof inclined me to the belief that this position was well taken, but approaching the matter with an open mind and a sincere desire to do what is best under all circumstances and having due regard to the legal phases of the question I am now of the opinion that this form of rate making and this division of excess earning above specified, 6 per cent, in the way provided in this bill is warranted by law. I desire, without unduly lengthening this argument, to give my reasons for that belief.

The leading case upon this subject, in my judgment, is that of Smyth against Ames, One hundred and sixty-ninth United States, page 524, in which it is explicitly decided that "the legislature has power to fix rates, and the limitation of judicial interference is protection against unreasonable rates." "This power, however, is not a power to destroy nor to compel service without reward." Budd against New York, One hundred and forty-third United States, pages 517 and 547. It seems clear from this case that under the commerce clause of the Constitution the Federal Government has the undoubted right to fix rates, and that the limitation upon that power by judicial interference is protection against unreasonable rates. In other words, the rates must be fair and just and reasonable. They dare not be destructive or confiscatory, nor dare they be such as to compel service without reward.

On the other hand, it is not compulsory upon the legislature to enact such laws as to insure to the railway company or like corporation such return as would pay a reasonable profit upon an honest investment, because it is decided in the Covington & Lexington Turnpike Co. against Sanford, One hundred and sixty-fourth United States, pages 578, 596, and 597, that such company is operating a public highway for use of the public, and even though a loss is incurred by the stockholders in the operation of such public highway, such loss would not be an excuse for an unreasonable rate. In other words, investors must take their chances in some degree. A railway company also operates what might be termed a public highway, but when it obtains its charter its rights are impressed with the duty of rendering service to the public, and also with the knowledge that the rights of the public are paramount and superior to the rights of the individual or corporation, so far as such public service is concerned.

In this connection let me also refer to the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway against Wellman, One hundred and forty-third United States, pages 339 and 344. Going one step further in this matter let us ask, Is 6 per cent a reasonable return for such investments? In that connection I refer to the case of Wilcox against the Consolidated Gas Co., Two hundred and twelfth United States, page 49, in which it is declared that such a per cent would be reasonable under the circumstances attending that case, and in that case consideration is given to the risk. It therefore follows that the Supreme Court has declared that 6 per cent can be established under such circumstances as a reasonable return and a fair return for such investments of this character. If you have thus far followed me, and agreed with me that Congress has power to fix rates, and if you also accept the decision in the Wilcox case, that the legislature can fix a certain per cent as reasonable, then the remaining question is, If a railroad company, under the rules of rate making as established, earned more, can such amount above the established per cent be taken by the Government and used by it for purposes indicated in the bill? In this connection it must be observed that the Government is not taking from the railroad company anything which it now possesses. It is not violating any contract relation between the Federal Government and the railway company. It is not legislating for the past; it is legislating for the future; and, therefore, I maintain that this legislation is not taking a property right of the railroad company; it does not take at this time anything which the railroad now possesses, either in land or tenements, or in present profits or earnings.

What it is attempting to do and what it actually does is to limit the amount that the railroad company shall receive as a fair and reasonable return upon its investment in property used for transportation service and in other investments made as specified in the bill, but even if this were not so the Supreme Court of the United States in defining the regulatory power of the Federal Government under the commerce clause of the Constitution has gone so far as to say that though a contract is valid when it was made as between a railroad company and an individual that if subsequent to the making of that valid contract Congress passes legislation which invalidates that contract for the purposes of interstate commerce such contract is nullified by such legislation. The statement of this is very clearly set forth in the case of Louisville & Nashville v. Motley (219 U. S., 467), with particular reference to page 485, in which it is decided that "if one agrees to do a thing which it is lawful for him to do and it becomes unlawful by an act of legislature the act avoids the promise."

This case clearly establishes that Congress has the right to regulate interstate commerce and that such right is not negatived or impeded by a contract which in any way directly interferes with proper regulations, even though the contract when made was valid, and also that when the rights were given under a charter or contract they were given with the knowledge that future events might compel modification or change in the interests of interstate commerce. A very curious case in this regard is referred to in the Motley case, and that is the case of the Union Bridge Co., in which the bridge was constructed over a navigable stream and after it had been completed for a number of years it was determined by the Federal authorities that the bridge somewhat impeded navigation and the Government compelled an alteration of the bridge to meet the new requirements and also was sustained in compelling the bridge company to pay the expense of such alteration. A similar decision was rendered in the Scranton bridge case, where the piers were erected on submerged land and it was afterwards determined that this structure must be changed and the expense thereof paid by the bridge company. All this notwithstanding the fact that at the time the bridges were constructed they had been approved by the Federal authorities under acts of Congress and charter privileges had been given for the making of such bridges.

The Minnesota rate case (230 U. S., 432) has been referred to in an argument on this subject, and in regard to that case permit me to say that Justice Hughes in rendering the decision clearly recognized the power of the Federal Government to supervise the rates of intrastate commerce when they are so intermingled with interstate commerce on roads engaged in both and when in the interests of interstate commerce such regulation becomes necessary. I beg leave to quote what he said in that case:

> But these considerations are for the practical judgment of Congress in determining the extent of the regulation necessary under existing conditions of transportation to conserve and promote the interests of interstate commerce.

I take it, therefore, that the Congress has the right to fix the definite per cent under its regulatory power given by the commerce clause of the Constitution. I affirm also that such definite rate may be a certain amount, to wit, 6 per cent; and now what shall be done with the surplus earnings of any one road, providing that this road is in a group in a rate region or territory? This bill considers the transportation system of the country as a whole. It also considers it in regional territories and declares that in such territories the rate system shall be uniform.

The rights of the public are to have efficient transportation not only over one road but, if possible, over all roads in the country. The rights of the public are paramount and superior to the rights of any one unit in the transportation system. Under the rate-making power and under any rule that may be established it would be impossible to make all rates for all roads, considered as units, exactly just, fair, and reasonable. In the very nature of things some would be excessive and others to the contrary. It therefore follows that in order to serve the public by a general transportation system—considered as a whole, or, if you please, considered in regions—there must be some plan devised by which equalization can be obtained as nearly as possible, so that all parts of the system, as a whole or as a region, may be efficiently and economically administered and a fair and a just return upon property investment honestly made.

If this bill did not consider, and in its very terms provide for, the use of this reserve fund and this contingent fund, obtained by the excess, in the way that it does, there might be some question as to the constitutionality of this provision; but the bill provides that a fair return shall be ascertained, and in making such determination the transportation needs of the country shall be taken into consideration, and that inasmuch as it is impossible, "without regulation and control in the interests of the commerce of the United States, considered as a whole," to establish uniform rates upon competitive traffic which will adequately sustain all the carriers which are engaged in such traffic, and which are indispensable to the communities to which they render the service of transportation, without enabling some of such carriers to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, it is hereby declared that any carrier which receives such an income so in excess of a fair return shall hold such part of the excess, as hereinafter prescribed, as trustee for, and shall pay it to, the United States; and then the bill provides that the United States, when receiving this fund from the trustee, again becomes a trustee, and it shall expend this excess, which is then a contingent fund, for the furtherance of the public interests in railway transportation, either by making loans to carriers to meet expenditures for capital account, or to refund maturing securities originally issued for capital account, or by purchasing transportation equipment and facilities and leasing the same to carriers as hereinafter prescribed, and that moneys in the fund not so employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or deposited in authorized depositaries of the United States. What, then, becomes of this surplus fund above the 6 per cent? A portion of it is used to create a reserve fund for the benefit of the company, which portion shall not exceed 5 per cent of the honest investment of the company in property held for and used in the service of transportation, and the other half of the excess income is to be paid into this general railroad contingent fund to be administered by the commission, not for the benefit of any one particular road nor for the benefit of a few particular roads, but for the benefit of the transportation system considered in regional districts as a whole where rate-making power has been enforced.

With all due deference, then, to the opinion of others, I maintain that this provision in the bill is not only constitutional but that it is for the furtherance and conservation of the transportation facilities of the country.

Because of these reasons and these authorities cited, I beg leave to differ with the gentleman from Kentucky as to the constitutionality of this provision. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one of the most nefarious one-sided measures ever offered a legislative body for action. It hurls insult and defiance in the face of 2,000,000 railroad men, and it is an affront to every Member of Congress who believes in a "square deal" and common justice to the working people. [Applause.]

The bill gives the railroad corporations of the country everything that they desire; it presents them with $300,000,000 of the people's money to finance them, guarantees them 6 per cent on their stocks and bonds, perpetuates the freight rates set up during the period of war, and provides the way for their further increase.

The bill, indeed, provides generously for the welfare of corporate interest, but in no spot or place has protection been accorded the public or the great army of railroad employees. This bill as reported by the conference committee places property rights above human rights; it makes the rights of capital superior to the rights of the common people.

On November 14 last, after a hard battle, a bill passed this House carrying with it a fairly decent labor section, and while it was not altogether satisfactory it was accepted because it did protect the employees of the railroads, in so far as it perpetuated the wages and working conditions granted them by the United States Government. This House bill also took good care of the railroads; it provided them with a revolving fund of $250,000,000, and through its provisions assured the railroads that they would prosper on their return to private ownership, but because it contained a fair labor section it was not satisfactory to the "big interests" of the country, and I have received in my office booklets and pamphlets calling attention to the good features of the bill that protected the railroads but declaring it was inconceivable that Congress knew what it was doing when it passed the bill with the Anderson amendment perpetuating the wages and conditions granted the employees of the railroads by the Government. I am led to believe, too, that possibly this had something to do with the side tracking of the House bill and is the reason for the present damnable, drastic bill which ties the railroad men hand and foot being substituted in its place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MANN of Illinois). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman let me have five minutes more?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BURKE. This bill, with its compulsory arbitration board, is no more like the bill that passed the House last November than day is like unto night.

True, it takes better care of the corporate interest, but not one atom of protection is accorded the great army of workers. It deals a body blow to their organized efforts to at any time attempt to better their condition or secure an increase in wages, because the compulsory railroad labor board established is aimed to destroy the railroad organizations.

This bill makes sure in more ways than one that the men are tied. It gives the railroad managements the privilege of having the compulsory board interfere if the management even suspects there will be any trouble. It plays further into the hands of the managements, in so far as a petition signed by 100 unorganized workers could have the board interfere in any dispute, and it leaves the board free to act of its own accord and intervene in any wage dispute. The railroad employees have no choice but to go to the board. They are forced under this bill to accept the findings of the board. What an injustice! What a crime against a loyal and law-abiding class of American citizens!

The talk going around of it being necessary to do something to prevent strikes will not deceive anyone; it is all tommy-rot, and is only an excuse to hide behind doing what the "big interests" of the country want done, and to detract the attention of the public from other features of the bill. For 35 years there has been no nation-wide strike; the men have gone along and settled their own differences, and it has not taken a compulsory board, established for corporate interest, composed of nine members, comprising six against one, at a salary of $10,000 each per year, or $90,000 yearly of the people's money, to effect a settlement.

Let me say to this Congress that compulsory arbitration is just as objectionable to the American people as antistrike legislation; and there is a reason for it, for the working classes have always received the worst of it when their differences were submitted to arbitration.

However, so that no Member of Congress may deceive himself, or attempt to justify his action in voting for this bill, which in its present shape is considered by the working people of the country as an outrageous encroachment upon their constitutional rights, let me say that there is just as much antistrike in this bill as in the original Cummins bill passed by the Senate. The wording may be changed, the issue beclouded, but the antistrike feature is embodied in the compulsory board established, and the rights of the railroad employees jeopardized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman give me just one minute more?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has the right to extend his remarks.

Mr. BURKE. Just one minute more. I want to finish this statement.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. BURKE. Just think of it! The railroad employees are to have a board to regulate their wages and working conditions; a board with authority to reduce wages if it sees fit. But the meat packers of the country can fix the price of meat without any interference by a board; the shoe manufacturers of the country can fix the price of shoes; the clothing manufacturers, the price of clothing; the food profiteers and all the exploiters in the necessities of life can establish their own prices without any tribunal to interfere. But the man whose life is daily endangered by his work, who earns his wages honestly, must pay the prevailing prices in food and clothing, for he has no say in the matter, and the only restriction made upon him is that he must have no say in regard to his own wages or working conditions. A board established by law will decide that matter for him.

When the President, in taking over the railroads, declared that they were the arteries of the Nation's life and called on the railroad employees to do their part and keep the trains moving, the men responded with a generosity and a loyalty unequaled in history. All through the period of the war they stood at their post of duty; they kept troop trains moving, equipment trains going, and when other fields of labor offered better opportunity they remained at their post because they were skilled in the work, experienced in their line of duty, and though the wages they received were insufficient and far less attractive than those paid in other lines of work, the railroad man considered himself as a soldier on duty; he placed his country's interest above his personal interest and was faithful to his duty, because no inexperienced man could do his work.

It is a poor return for their loyalty and a scant appreciation of their services to attempt now to restrict them in their rights and to hamper them in such manner as to prevent them getting a "square deal."

The railroad men desire a continuation of Government ownership for at least two years in order that it might be thoroughly tested, but as this Congress is determined to return the roads at any cost, and Government ownership seems out of the question, then I believe the least thing Congress can do is to send this bill back to the conference committee with instructions to bring in a bill with a fair and decent labor section; to be just as generous to the human interest as it has been to the corporate interest.

This Congress can not justify the passage of any bill which places the value of corporate wealth above the value of human rights, and no Member can ever justify his position or explain to the American people why he votes to protect the railroad corporations of the country and to destroy the constitutional rights of 2,000,000 American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, three classes of people are vitally interested in this legislation—railroad owners, the employees, and the public—but this report does not attempt to care for the shipper and the general public, probably because they did not have their representatives at the Capitol during the period this bill was under consideration.

In the matter of the labor section, I can not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], who has just spoken on this report. After reading the labor provision over and over again, I do not find where any person is compelled to submit to even compulsory arbitration. Section 302 provides for an adjustment board composed of employers and employees and gives this board power to decide all disputes. Section 304 provides for a Railroad Labor Board composed of nine members, three from the employers, three from the employees, and three to represent the public, all to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. But the Railroad Labor Board has no jurisdiction to settle disputes unless the adjusting board, composed of employers and employees, are unable to agree.

Thus you will see that any employee can quit his employment whenever he pleases, and is required to arbitrate only if there is a difference which can not be settled by the adjustment board. But, if there is an honest difference, why should either the employee or employer refuse to discuss their differences? The railroads are not operated in behalf of the owners and employees alone, but there are over a hundred million people directly or indirectly affected if transportation should be stopped because of a difference between the employers and employees. I am against any antistrike clause, because I do not see where any good can be accomplished by forcing a man to work if he does not want to; but I do think he should not cause others to quit until after arbitration is exhausted. Another feature I would like to see enacted is to make it unlawful to discharge an employee without cause. I want to make these statements because I shall vote to recommit the report to eliminate certain objectionable features, and if the same is not carried I shall vote "no" when it comes to the passage of the bill; but I will not vote against this report because of the labor features contained therein but because of special legislation in behalf of the railroad owners.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION AND COURT DECISION.

However, special legislation is not a new feature, for labor has a number of times received special favors at the hands of Congress since 1912. In 1914 Congress passed what is known as the Clayton Act, exempting labor unions and farm organizations from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law, and since the decision of the Danbury Hatters' case, in 1908–1915, Congress specifically exempted labor and farm organizations when appropriating money for the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law. I am calling these matters to the attention of labor and farm organizations because strong efforts will be made to repeal these special acts, and although I am against the passage of class legislation I do not think it should be done until the cause is removed.

And, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the cause is not with the legislative branch of our Government, but because the judiciary has utterly failed to interpret the Sherman antitrust law. Congress never intended that this act should apply to labor and farm organizations, but to combinations of capital in restraint of trade. Yet the Supreme Court enforced this law strictly in 1908 and 1915 in the Danbury Hatters' case, when the rights of labor were involved, but made a farce of it in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases in 1911, in which cases they held that reasonable restraint was permissible. Because of these decisions the case against the United States Steel Co. et al., in which the Government charged unlawful combination in steel, and the case of United States against Reading Railroad, where the Government charged unlawful combination in coal, have been on the docket since that time and still remain undecided by the court. These cases were again argued by the Department of Justice last October. Now, I happen to know something about the Steel Trust. They pride themselves as being a $2,000,000,000 corporation. While prosecuting attorney of my county I remember a few cases where the grand jury indicted certain steel combinations who sold bridges to the county for twice their value, and pipes for four times the market price. I remember in one case the county paid a little over $10,000 for a bridge, and the evidence showed that the contractor paid out one-half of this amount to the other contractors in order to induce them to bid higher. This was in 1908 and 1909; they were crude then. I was able to produce the drafts showing payments to others who never furnished a pound of steel to my county, and this same Steel Trust had their subsidiary agents present at the different lettings. I do not know the character of the evidence submitted to the Supreme Court by the Department of Justice, but in my county the babes and sucklings know how they made some of their billions, yet the Federal courts have been contemplating since 1911 whether these and other acts constitute a violation of law.

In the face of these facts, is labor justified in its attacks on the legislative branch of our Government? Would the appointment of our Federal judges for a period of 15 or 20 years, instead of for life, help in this matter? There are those who object to this, because it might remove one of our landmarks, for they believe the judges should hold office for life; and yet these very men claim that a Member of Congress should be elected for only two years because it might produce an autocracy.

I believe that the present unrest is largely due because of this inequality before our courts. Man is attempting to find a solution—a resolution born in the mind and heart, seeking equality and righteousness. There are those who appear alarmed and demand drastic legislation, permitting punishment for advocating changes of laws. There is no need of becoming hysterical, as neither our public schools nor the religion of our fathers taught the use of force to destroy our Government. But the people are demanding a change of conditions. The Constitution was framed by our fathers in their knowledge of governments, and it was impossible for them to reach perfection with the only light from governments then existing.

The Constitution provided that the legislatures of the several States should elect the Senators for six years, because they represented wealth, while the judges are appointed by the President for life. And, gentlemen, ever since there has been constant strife between the rights of property and individuals, but in every contest, thank God, man has triumphed over wealth. Look at our history, as evidenced by the decisions of our Supreme Court. The decision of McCulloch against Maryland, which held the national bank act of 1816 constitutional, was reversed by the people under the leadership of Andrew Jackson in 1830. The Dred Scott decision of 1856 brought on the Civil War, the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution, while the income-tax decision of 1895 brought on the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution. What the decision of the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases of 1911, permitting reasonable restraint by wealth, while it denied the same in the Danbury Hatters' case in 1908 and 1915, will bring about no one seems to know.

There is no doubt in my mind that the present unrest is the best sign of life and that we are to have a new birth. Education and religion demand progress. The feudal days are gone, never to return again. Just now we seem to be striking aimlessly and in every direction, and at times one becomes impatient and almost despairs. I believe that our sane solution is to have our judges appointed for a term of years and then let them return to the people, there to mingle as one of the crowd. A life term is entirely too long and makes autocrats of the best of us. Let us not lose our independence by failing to be dependent upon each other.

Strong minds have spoken on this. Mr. Roosevelt once made a speech advocating the recall of judicial opinions, but he soon admitted the fallacy of that. W. J. Bryan advocates the election of our judges, but since so few of our people come in contact with and know the members of the Supreme Court and circuit courts of appeal, comprising in most cases more than one State, that would make it impossible to select the best men and it would be impractical to provide election machinery.

NO APPROPRIATIONS FOR WATERWAYS.

However, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I did not take the floor to discuss the labor features of this bill, and would not have done so had it not been for the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], who has just left the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the chairman of this committee to one feature of this bill. The Federal Government had appropriated $6,336,000 for the construction of boats for the lower Mississippi. It appropriated $3,300,000 for the construction of boats on the upper Mississippi, and, in addition to this, they have 29 boats now under operation and under Government control, also some barges on the Erie Canal and Warrior River. Under section 201 this act transfers the operations of all boats to the Secretary of War, and authorizes him to complete the contracts and expend the balance of the $9,636,000, but it does not provide for the operation of the waterways. Five hundred million dollars have been appropriated in this act for the purpose of taking care of the railroads, but not one cent has been appropriated for the purpose of taking care of waterways. When March 1 comes around there is not one penny for the purpose of continuing the operation of the boats on the Mississippi, the Warrior River, or the Erie Canal.

Let us examine the language of this report. Subdivision (a) of section 201 of the report provides:

> On the termination of Federal control * * * all boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities, on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways * * * acquired by the United States * * * are transferred to the Secretary of War, who shall operate * * * such transportation facilities * * * and assume and carry out all contracts.

Subdivision (b) provides that—

> All payments after such transfer in connection with the construction, utilization, and operation of any such transportation facilities, whether completed or under construction, shall be made by the Secretary of War out of funds now or hereafter made available for that purpose.

Subdivision (c) provides that—

> The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, out of any moneys hereinafter made available therefor, to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between transportation facilities operated by him under this section—

And so forth.

Section 201, in part, provides:

For the purpose of making the payments specified in subdivision (a) of section 201, all unexpended balances in the revolving fund created by the Federal control act, etc., * * * are hereby reappropriated and made available until expended.

Thus you will note a beautiful legislative joker. If the person who drafted section 202 intended to operate these boats, as provided in subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 201, why did he omit these two subdivisions when it came to making the money available?

If the gentleman from Wisconsin wrote this section, it was an oversight, for I do not believe he ever knew how to serve two masters during his membership of 20 years in this House; but my guess is that some one else wrote this and some other sections of this report. It is plainly evident that whoever prepared this section believed that these boats and barges, valued at millions of dollars, should not be permitted to function. But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, history again repeats itself. This is the first evidence that the railroads are going to play the same old game of cutthroat competition. After the Civil War one could clearly see the outlines of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers by the line of smoke of hundreds of steamers carrying the commerce of our country, but the railroads procured most of these agencies of commerce and permitted them to rot along the banks of these wonderful rivers, capable of carrying so much commerce.

The report turns back the railroads and appropriates $500,000,000 for their use, and guarantees in addition an income of 5½ per cent on the value of their property and one-half of 1 per cent for improvements, but not one cent for waterways.

Selfishness will eventually ruin any nation and every business. The railroad interests are blind if they think that the people are not going to take a real active hand in this matter. The records of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors show that the Government has expended $203,062,537.93 to canalize and improve the Mississippi River, $23,828,149.69 on the Missouri, $160,467,695.23 to canalize the Ohio and its tributaries, making a total of $387,368,382.85 for these highways of commerce, to say nothing of millions spent on other rivers and harbors. I want to help build up our transportation systems, but we can not do it in this selfish manner. Early in the history of railroad transportation they thought to influence the State and county officers by issuing passes to those from whom they had occasion to ask favors. But public sentiment would not stand for this and other practices. The result was that the favors received by the railroads were few and far between, and transportation facilities were being crippled by our officers and those who exploited their resources, so that they were glad when the President took them over under Federal control.

Now, here we come into a new era when all realize that transportation is the lifeblood of a community, State, and Nation. The railroads in the past have been crippled by mismanagement, cutthroat competition, hostile legislation, and the issuance of watered stock. Each has had its inning; all received a knockout blow. The past is a dead issue, and we hope for a square deal. We must have these agencies and more of them. Water transportation never did injure rail transportation. We produce more than we consume. Our merchant marine, which cost us billions, must be maintained. Heavy bulky cargoes should be permitted to be hauled by water in order to relieve the railroads. The inland cities and communities have the right to have the cargoes delivered as near their door by boats and barges as possible. The people of New York State, who expended over $150,000,000 to rebuild the Erie Canal, have a right to use the same without interference on the part of the railroads. The Government reports show that the rail rates along waterways are 50 per cent less than the rate where there is no water competition. What has made the city of New York the largest city of the world but the Erie Canal and the fact that the railroads carry freight across this State for one-half of what they carry at other points?

Before the rebuilding of the Erie Canal freight was hauled from Chicago to New York by water for 7½ cents per hundred pounds, while the rail rate from New York to Lima, Ohio, is 25.2 cents per hundred pounds. Thus you will note why the railroads do not want water competition. In passing let me remind the man who is opposed to waterways, and cites the Erie Canal as an example, that since 1895 this canal has been under constant transformation. At that time they had over 500 boats carrying freight. Then the reconstruction period commenced. It was 6 feet deep and followed the natural depressions and streams; afterwards it was diverted along the hillside to avoid freshets, and finally they placed it back in the original bed and made it 9 feet deep, and then a fourth improvement came when it was made 12 feet deep, and the same is still uncompleted. If anyone tells you that little or no traffic is now on the Erie Canal, agree with him, but ask him how he expects any traffic while under construction. New York is an empire, and their people know how it came about. Inland cities can not compete unless they have cheaper transportation.

EFFECT OF PANAMA CANAL ON RAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Look at the effect the Panama Canal had on rail transportation. The records of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that soon after the opening of the canal a 40-cent rate was granted the Southern Pacific Co. between the Pacific and Atlantic terminals in order to compete with the water rate, making a reduction of from 10 to 45 cents per hundred pounds, depending on the commodity. But what happened to the Mississippi Valley? The rates, for instance, from north Pacific terminals to Lima, Toledo, and Cincinnati are as follows, per hundred pounds: Canned goods, 85 cents; steel and iron and paint, $1.80; canned salmon, 70 cents; and the rates from New York to these cities on the same commodities are: Twenty-five and two-tenth cents to Lima, 24.6 cents to Toledo, and 27.4 cents to Cincinnati. Thus you will note that to date the Panama Canal has not proven any benefit to the States not along the Atlantic or Pacific coasts. There seems only one hope to equalize this injustice to the States in the valley, and that is to procure a rate via New Orleans. Hearings were granted by the Railroad Administrator, upon the application of interested parties in the Mississippi Valley, on July 15, 1919, and the administrator granted shippers in Ohio, Indiana, and southern Michigan the same export rate via New Orleans as New York, effective December 31, 1919. Thus, if this rate is permitted to stand, all commerce from the Pacific States, the Orient, and South American Republics destined for the Mississippi Valley would go via New Orleans instead of New York. In this way the shipper in Ohio can procure practically the same rate from the Pacific States as the Atlantic Seaboard States. Is it any wonder the railways want to kill waterways? Should we of the Middle West sit idly by and permit all our cities and farm life to be stunted in growth because of lack of transportation? Gentlemen, this report should be recommitted and the waterways given at least half a chance.

ORDER OF DIRECTOR OF RAILROADS.

But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, what else is going on? Protest was filed by the eastern railroads to this order of the Railroad Administrator, and already notice is being served on the Commerce Commission that as soon as the railroads go back to private ownership they expect to hog tie and deliver the people of these sovereign States to one port, and you are helping them by your vote to enact into law this conference report. The following correspondence, by and between the Railroad Administrator and Mr. Willard, acting for the eastern roads, may be of interest to shippers in the Mississippi Valley, and especially to Ohio, Indiana, and southern Michigan, to wit:

NOVEMBER 26, 1919.

Mr. WALKER D. HINES,
Director General of Railroads, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: There has been brought to the attention of the railroad corporations in eastern territory the matter of an order issued by the Division of Traffic of the Federal Administration providing for the application of the same rates on traffic for export through the Gulf and other southern ports, from certain territory east of a line running north and south substantially through the center of Indiana, as are concurrently applied via New York, thus creating a condition which the interested corporations regard as inimical to their interests, and they accordingly desire this letter to be considered a protest against the action indicated.

The system carriers chiefly interested in the matter are the New York Central, Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio, and Erie, with others largely so, and upon whose behalf this protest is written.

Among other things, the establishment of the rates referred to creates an entirely new situation or condition from any that has heretofore existed. To accomplish the purpose stated will require the movement of a considerable part of the business affected substantially double the distance that it is from a greater part of the territory involved to New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore. It will work to "short haul" a number of the carriers upon whose lines the business originates and reduce their earning power accordingly. It will have the effect of introducing such an abnormal rate adjustment in the territory under consideration as to constitute a menace to the rate structure as a whole, fourth section violations being a prominent feature in the proposed adjustment.

It is, in the view of the corporations, a distinct departure from the principles enunciated in the fifteenth section of the interstate-commerce act, which provides that in establishing a through route—

"The commission shall not require any company without its consent to embrace in such route substantially less than the entire length of its railroad * * *."

The eastern carriers interested in this matter have not been given a hearing on the subject nor afforded an opportunity to state their objections.

In the event that a considerable volume of traffic should be diverted from the establishment of these rates it will have the effect of introducing an uneconomic burden upon the carriers, in that it will require the transportation of much of the business twice the distance that it would move through normal and well-established channels; that is to say, to New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and thus make necessary a higher charge on other business to overcome this economic loss.

The interested railway corporations earnestly hope that their protest in this matter will be heeded and the proposed rates be not established.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) D. WILLARD,
Chairman Presidents' Committee,
Official Classification Territory.

DECEMBER 8, 1919.

Mr. DANIEL WILLARD,
Chairman Presidents' Committee,
Official Classification Territory, Baltimore, Md.

MY DEAR MR. WILLARD: I have your letter of November 26 in regard to export rates recently published from central freight association territory to the South Atlantic and Gulf ports. These rates have been under consideration for nearly a year past. Numerous conferences have been held upon them. The publication is the last thing to be done. It was only after very thorough analysis and consideration that they were authorized. The basis is the same as is in effect to New York; Boston; Portland, Me.; Montreal, St. John, and Halifax, Canada. This same basis has been in effect from the same points of origin to New Orleans for many years past. It is practically extending the New Orleans rate to other Gulf ports and to South Atlantic ports south of Norfolk. Eastern railroads have no good grounds for objection on the basis of mileage as the distance to the Canadian ports is very considerably greater than to the South Atlantic or Gulf ports. The gross revenue will not be changed by the new adjustment, and the divisions of these rates will be fair and reasonable. If anything is thought to be out of line with the divisions after the roads are returned to private operation it can be readily adjusted by application to the Interstate Commerce Commission. You, I think, appreciate the difficulty at times in the past moving export freight through the ports of New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia. The expense at those ports is constantly increasing. It is a question whether the cost to carriers for the further haul to South Atlantic or Gulf ports as compared to New York and Philadelphia is as great as if the traffic was hauled via the ports last mentioned. It is certainly in the best interest of the country as a whole to distribute the export traffic in a reasonable way among all ports, which is what we have in mind in this adjustment.

I believe these rate changes will make no serious reduction in the revenues of the central freight association carriers.

Yours, very truly,

WALKER D. HINES.

I want to submit the arguments advanced before the Railroad Administrator by persons interested in the commerce of the Mississippi Valley at the hearing to correct the revision of export rates of the United States Railroad Administration:

For many years the eastern trunk lines operating to North Atlantic ports from the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, and that territory reached by their rails situated north of the Ohio River, have steadfastly refused as a whole to establish rates of freight on export traffic from the territory in question to South Atlantic and Gulf ports. This policy of the eastern trunk lines was obviously a selfish one designed to force the great movement of export traffic over their long haul to the North Atlantic ports and in this way avoid sharing the earnings accruing therefrom with the carriers operating south of the Ohio River to Gulf and South Atlantic ports. In these designs the eastern trunk lines have been very successful, as is substantiated by the records of the various ports which show the bulk of the exports from the Central West have moved through North Atlantic ports and have thus deflected from their natural channels which in a very large measure lie through Gulf and South Atlantic ports, particularly when the traffic is destined to South American, Central American, West Indies, Mexico, and the Orient.

The concentration of freight shipments for export at North Atlantic ports, and which as above explained are primarily due to the selfish policies of the eastern trunk lines in refusing to join the southern lines in the establishment and operation of freight rates to Gulf and South Atlantic ports in line with those prevailing to North Atlantic ports, has in turn forced the allocation at North Atlantic ports by the United States Shipping Board of hundreds of steamships, a large proportion of which would have been allocated to South Atlantic and Gulf ports were it not for the discrimination in rates in favor of North Atlantic ports, as is referred to. Moreover, this forced movement of export traffic through North Atlantic ports, particularly through the port of New York, subjects the Railroad Administration to a greatly increased cost of operation, due to the much higher terminal costs applying at New York as compared with terminal charges at southern ports.

The allocation of steamships to North Atlantic ports by the United States Shipping Board obviously imposes a greatly increased cost of operation of all said vessels as compared with what would be the cost of operating from southern ports, as consideration of the following statement of distances from various southern ports to certain Latin American ports, as compared with the distances to the same ports from the port of New York, will illustrate:

Distances in nautical miles from and to various ports and the percentage of difference in distances from the various ports as compared with New York.

	Distance.	Distance.	Per cent.[1]	Distance.	Per cent.[1]	Distance.	Per cent.[1]

Colon	1,974	1,564	20.8	1,371	30.5	1,390	29.6
Valparaiso	4,633	4,223	8.8	4,030	13	4,058	12.4

The above distances taken from "Table of Distances Between Ports," published by the Hydrographic Office under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy. (N. O. No. 117.)

It must be conceded, therefore, that the enforced allocation to and operation from North Atlantic ports to Latin American countries of hundreds of Shipping Board vessels, instead of the allocation to and operation of a large percentage of such vessels from southern short-haul ports, not only serves to multiply the cost of operation of our governmentally owned merchant marine but also imposes the maximum transportation cost on American products coming into competition with British and Japanese products, which latter enjoy as a whole the economies accruing from all-water transportation and are not imposed with inland rail transportation costs, as is the case with American products shipped from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and the Mississippi Valley and Southern States generally.

Therefore these discriminations in inland rates have made it impossible to—

First. Establish steamship lines from Gulf and South Atlantic ports to various countries of the world, particularly to Latin America.

Second. Have retarded the upbuilding of the Gulf and South Atlantic ports' facilities as a whole in that the volume of export and import traffic moving through these parts in many instances requires but a part of their present facilities to handle same; that is to say, that the port facilities of the South Atlantic and Gulf ports as a whole are used for the handling of export and import traffic to but a fraction of their present capacity.

Third. Has made it necessary to route a large volume of southern products for export via North Atlantic ports, by reason of the inadequate sailings and service from southern ports, which sailings and service, as above explained, would be automatically established were the inland adjustment of rates to southern ports from Central Western territory on a parity with inland rates from the same territory to North Atlantic ports.

Fourth. Has greatly increased the cost of operating the Government-owned merchant marine and thereby has added to the cost of American products competing with British and Japanese products.

It is obvious from this brief outline that the failure to establish rail rates to Gulf and South Atlantic ports from the Central Western section of the country in line with those rates existing to North Atlantic ports has not only retarded the development of southern ports but has deprived the Southern States of the steamship trade routes which would naturally follow the flow of a heavy volume of export freight from the Central Western section through those ports if the transportation charges thereon were on a parity with those applying to the North Atlantic ports and which in turn would permit of the operation of governmentally owned boats at minimum costs, thus bringing about the lowering of through transportation costs to many American manufacturers, a very desirable and necessary policy if American products are to successfully compete with British and Japanese products.

Not only have the Southern States and Mississippi Valley suffered economically from the discrimination against southern ports in rail rates, they have also suffered economically from the system of rates operated by the United States Shipping Board from North Atlantic ports versus Gulf and South Atlantic ports, the injustice in this respect being illustrated by the following example: The rates from South Atlantic and Gulf ports to Habana, Cuba, are the same as they are from New York and Boston, notwithstanding that the distance from the South Atlantic and Gulf ports are many hundreds of miles less than from New York, as the distances before enumerated show, and it can be proven that the actual cost of operating a vessel in one case is about half what it is in the other.

On the other hand, the rates from South Atlantic ports to European ports, where the distance is a small percentage greater than the distance from the North Atlantic ports, measured by the total distance involved, are very much higher than the rates from the North Atlantic ports to the same destinations. The Shipping Board has partly recognized the injustice of this latter basis by establishing on coal from Charleston, S. C., to European ports the same rates as apply from Hampton Roads and New York, and there should be no reason why they could not in the same manner accord the South Atlantic and Gulf ports a fair difference under the North Atlantic ports when it can be shown that the operating costs fully justify a difference.

Therefore, from the description of the existant situation, it is apparent that the United States Railroad Administration should establish rates from the Central West, including western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, etc., on export traffic identical with the rates applying from the same points to North Atlantic ports, and should require the lines north of the Ohio River to divide these rates on an equitable basis with the lines south of the Ohio River. The United States Railroad Administration has already set a precedent for the equalization of the North Atlantic port rates via the South Atlantic and Gulf ports by their action in requiring the lines serving Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, etc., to publish export rates to Pacific coast ports which, in effect, on oriental traffic, Australian traffic, etc., equalize the through rates to these countries via North Atlantic ports; therefore no question of new policies on the part of the Railroad Administration is involved in this demand. The Railroad Administration are not called upon to reduce their revenues, because the same rates will apply to Gulf and South Atlantic ports as apply to North Atlantic ports, and the earnings to the Railroad Administration on the whole will be precisely the same. The proposition merely calls for the establishment of rates which will permit export traffic to flow through all our ports instead of continuing to foster an artificial means of forcing the traffic through North Atlantic ports, which practice has been so disastrous during the war.

There is another great problem in which the South is vitally interested and which the equalization of export rates as proposed will greatly alleviate, namely, that the South will be supplied with a sufficient number of cars to handle its products, which in quantity are shipping North, East, and West at the rate of about three cars to every one car received in the reverse direction. In the past hundreds of industries have been forced to close down because of the inability of the carriers to furnish them with cars, which would not have been the case if export traffic could have moved through the southern ports, in this way bringing into the South the necessary equipment to handle its heavy domestic shipments to the North, East, and West.

The fight will be on as soon as the bill becomes a law, and the shippers of the Mississippi Valley might just as well tighten their belts and buckle their armor, for if this order is vacated it will again work to their disadvantage. We must have these new and modern barges and steamers, constructed during the war, carry the commerce upon the greatest natural highways of commerce. Then we will again know the outline of the Mississippi and its tributaries by the smoke produced from these agencies of commerce. The rate from Cincinnati to Toledo on coal is $1.50 per ton. Why not permit the barges, loaded at the mines, to continue their journey north without unloading and loading this coal at Cincinnati and Toledo?

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, 35 per cent of our export commerce before the war went via New Orleans. We had three canals in operation connecting the Ohio River with Lake Erie. They cost the Federal Government about $16,000,000. But because of the Civil War and the selfishness of the railroads these canals are now abandoned. But we hear a new voice calling from Ohio. The General Assembly of that State has passed an act creating canal districts, 25 miles wide on each side of the canals, permitting the people in these districts to vote whether they want to improve these canals, agreeing to build modern terminals if the canals are rebuilt, the cost to be borne according to benefit received. The property 25 miles away would pay a small proportion compared with the property where the terminals are located. Thus they realize that it is economy to pay a small amount if they can save a dollar on each ton of coal. Ohio, no doubt, will amend its constitution just as Illinois has, in order to help rebuild these canals, for there is not a taxpayer who would not be benefited by this cheaper transportation. And, gentlemen, the entire Mississippi Valley has had this new vision. The people of Illinois voted $20,000,000 to build a barge canal connecting Lake Michigan with the waters of the Gulf. This is not all. They realized that the valley possesses over 50 per cent of the population. The dry bones have taken on new life, the flesh is being formed, and these people will demand a righteous solution of this transportation problem, with no more discrimination in favor of the Eastern and Western States.

According to best reports the people in the Mississippi Valley do not only possess over 50 per cent of the voting population, but the region lying in the watershed of the valley and between Canada and the Gulf now produces 76 per cent of the wheat, 66 per cent of the bituminous coal, 47 per cent of the lumber, 70 per cent of the cotton, 55 per cent of the wool, 69 per cent of the petroleum, 94 per cent of the iron ore, 85 per cent of the corn, 81 per cent of the hogs, 52 per cent of the sheep, and 74 per cent of the cattle.

Why should not most of this export go down grade through the port of New Orleans instead of over the mountains to the east and west of this great valley? Thus you would not have your port closed during a portion of the winter season because of ice. Let us relieve this congestion by permitting commerce to take its natural course. Thousands of dollars of the products of our valley are being wasted because of the congestion at the port of New York, and thousands of cars are being used for storage and often banked up at Pittsburgh for want of an outlet.

GUARANTEES INCOME TO RAILROADS.

It is easy to see why the railroads received so much and the waterways were entirely forgotten when the framers of the bill came to open the door of the United States Treasury. The railroad operators and their security holders have been busy in the matter of propaganda, while few seemed interested in the waterways, because it meant no personal return to them.

This propaganda on the part of the railroads and security holders was most mischievous. They would have you believe that if we do not pass this legislation before March 1 the railroads would become bankrupt and those of us who would not support this bill were for the so-called Plumb plan. The fact is that the President issued the order for the return of the railroads to their owners on March 1, and I was glad to hear the chairman say that they would go back with or without legislation. Personally I would like to support this measure, for I am interested in the solution of our transportation problems and believe that with proper coordination we can build up a wonderful domestic and foreign commerce; but I am going to vote to recommit this report, with a hope of permitting the committee to make the necessary corrections. That the railroads would become bankrupt is the idle talk of those who do not know. The Interstate Commerce Commission is empowered under existing laws to place in effect the same rate they now enjoy.

But can you and I support this bill and defend the same? Let us further examine and see who wrote some of the other features of the bill. Subdivision 3 of section 422 provides that—

The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon * * * and shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision in whole or in part for improvements. * * *

It seems to me that if we are going to guarantee an income of 6 per cent to the railroads, then we should be ready to make an equal guarantee of income to the farmer, merchant, and manufacturer. Why not guarantee an income to the barber when he opens his shop or to those who raise chickens, assuring them an egg every time the hen cackles?

But the advocates of this report answer us that the courts have already decreed that rates which would yield an income of 6 per cent are "just and reasonable." If that is true, why make it a permanent law? The time may come when cost will be less and a net income of less than 6 per cent would be "just and reasonble." It may not seem high now with money as cheap as it is, but how can we expect a reduction in the cost of living when Congress votes into law a hard-and-fast income of 6 per cent over all expenses for the railroads? Think what a fruitful field we open if only the employer of labor and the employee can get together by raising salaries and wages, for the owners of the stock of these railroads need not be alarmed, for they are assured by law of their income of 5½ per cent and know that one-half of 1 per cent is always going back for the protection of the property.

Take, for instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad system. It had for the year 1917 a president at a salary of $75,460 and 11 vice presidents with salaries ranging from $20,000 to $40,620 and has 12 other officers whose salaries are over $20,000 per year, making a grand total for all these 23 officers of $681,960, almost twice as much as the combined salaries of the President of the United States, 10 Cabinet officers, 9 justices of the Supreme Court, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House. What will hinder these officers from doubling their salaries? The stockholder will not complain, for he is assured his income. The only person who has reason to complain is the shipper, and he is never considered until called upon to pay.

Well, we are told that the railroads are costing the Government $39,000,000 per month, and the sooner we let go the better, and that the rates could not be raised before September 1, 1920. So it is, but your report guarantees 6 per cent income, and if there is a deficiency payment will be made out of the Treasury of the United States. Six months to September 1 would mean that we pay these roads two hundred and thirty-four millions more. But you say that Government ownership is more expensive than private ownership. Do not forget that when the President took over the railroads all employees continued to draw pay, from the president of the road on down to the man who received the least. If public ownership opens the door to inefficiency, dishonesty, and graft, you are not closing it by this bill. And while passing I want it distinctly understood that I am not for the so-called Plumb plan unless we can treat other property on the same basis. For instance, those who advocate the Plumb plan should also be willing to buy and pay for out of the Public Treasury every farm, every business and manufacturing plant, and turn them back to their original owners for operation. This may work under soviet rule in Russia, but never in America. All I desire is to help whip this report into shape so we need not hang our heads in shame because we voted for it.

	Cents.
Ann Arbor	11½
Rock Island	25¼
Denver & Rio Grande	7½
Denver & Rio Grande (preferred)	10¼
Erie	12
Kansas City Southern	15
Minneapolis & St. Louis	11¼
Pennsylvania R. R	41⅛
Northern Pacific	23½

A few days ago the Chicago & Alton was quoted as low as 6 cents. One year's dividend would buy the whole road! Oh, but you say that the 6 per cent guaranty is not based on the capital stock, because about eight billions of the railroad stock is watered. Do not forget that every one of those interested claim that the railroads are valued at more than the outstanding stock issued.

Another provision which smacks of the communists' philosophy and comes dangerously near violating the Constitution of our country is found in subdivision 6 of section 422, in the following language:

If under the provisions of this section any carrier receives for any year a net railway operating income in excess of 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held for and used by it in the service of transportation, one-half of such excess shall be placed in a reserve fund established and maintained by such carrier, and the remaining one-half thereof shall * * * be recoverable by and paid to the commission for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a general railroad contingent fund as hereinafter described.

No such provision could have been conceived by the brain of man since the beginning of time save and except in this period of world unrest. If this is sound legislation, it is equally sound in the mercantile, industrial, and agricultural business. It does not only destroy every initiative but penalizes efficiency. It does not only open the opportunity to indifferences but dishonesty as well. We hear much condemnation of the cost-plus contracts during the war, and yet we repeat in time of peace and make it possible to increase salaries, wages, pay exorbitant prices on contracts to the favored few in order to dissipate the earnings of the company. This is what we, in these modern days, call taking property by "due process of law." Shades of our fathers, what next will come out of Washington!

We have heard arguments for and against the constitutionality of this law. I do not care to argue the constitutional question. The courts may claim that Congress can take all earnings over 6 per cent from one person and make him divide with his neighbor who is not so successful, but I have my very grave doubts. It seems so strange that the very fellows who have been loudest in denouncing socialism now ask permission to crawl under its wings. This fact might make it constitutional. I do not know. I may be a little old-fashioned in my beliefs, but I do love those ancient landmarks upon which this Republic was founded.

The history of this legislation shows the need of reform. The bill as passed in the House was never considered in the Senate, but there they struck out everything after the enacting clause and substituted the so-called Cummins bill, which in turn was rejected by the House, and as a result the conferees present a new bill which can not be amended, but must be either accepted or rejected as a whole. Of course it may not become a new Member to criticize when the chairman of the committee and the ranking Democrat have been Members of this House for 20 years and some other leaders have been here for more than a quarter of a century.

FIXES WAGE BY LEGISLATION.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the most serious objections to this report, but before closing let me call the attention of the House to but one more objectionable feature in this report. Then I shall not burden its membership any longer. Section 312 of the report fixes the wages of every employee until September 1, 1920. This may be innocent, but it is establishing a very bad precedent. The matter of wage should be left to the employer and employee for adjustment. We have provided a machinery to bring the employer and employee together. Then why not trust the very agency you create in this bill? The railroad men are all intelligent and possess a fine American spirit, and I believe that we can trust to them the wage solution. This all seems to surpass the comic opera. We pay, for instance, the heads of one of our railroads twice as much as we pay the heads of our executive, judicial, and legislative branches of our Government, and still refuse them permission to exercise any discretion. For instance, we tell the Commerce Commission that 6 per cent is a "just and reasonable rate"; the railroads can not charge what they choose for their service nor will we permit the railroads to determine what traffic they will handle for transportation. The law tells these high-salaried officers just what equipment they must have to furnish all manner of safety devices for the employees and the public. The Adamson law determines the hour of wage, and now this bill determines the wages officers of the various roads must pay every employee. I wonder why the conferees did not also fix the salary of the officers? Why should the public be compelled to pay these enormous salaries to these seeming supernumeraries? If they have anything to do under the law and this bill but make out the pay rolls and campaign to induce the Commerce Commission to increase the rate to the public after September 1, 1920, I would be pleased to be informed. I failed to see it.

Aside from these features, Mr. Speaker, the conference report shows some wisdom, and I hope that it may be recommitted with a view of permitting these corrections, so that I may join in the support of the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That privilege has been granted already by order of the House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a widely prevalent notion that some act of Congress is absolutely essential in order to turn the railroads back to private control. In various resolutions and petitions—most of them undoubtedly inspired by railroad interests or friends of railroad corporations—I find the notion crystallized in the form of an appeal to "speedily report—or pass—a bill restoring the railroads to their owners."

NO ACT OF CONGRESS NECESSARY.

I therefore desire to emphasize the fact that no action by Congress of any kind whatever is at all essential to enable the railroads to be returned to their original proprietors. They passed under Government control by virtue of the President's proclamation of December 26, 1917, and they will go back as a matter of course March 1, 1920, by virtue of like authority.

The taking possession and control of all transportation systems was done pursuant to section 1 of the act of August 29, 1916, empowering the President in time of war to assume this extraordinary authority. His proclamation was dated December 26, 1917, to go into effect on December 28, 1917, but for the purpose of accounting, the Government control began at midnight on December 31, 1917.

It is worth noting that the Government had exercised control over the railroads for nearly three months when, on March 21, 1918, the so-called Federal-control act went into effect. By section 14 of that act it was provided that the "President may relinquish all railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control at any time he shall deem such action needful or desirable."

Acting in accordance with this authority, the President issued his proclamation, dated December 24, 1919, announcing that on March 1, 1920, the railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control would be returned to private ownership. I confess that I am not one of those who believe that this is the proper time to relinquish control of the railroads. I believe it would be better to retain them under Federal supervision until some carefully matured plan is agreed upon, after careful study and deliberation, for the settlement and adjustment of the problems arising out of Government control. But whatever the opinion of individuals may be, the railroads go back to private ownership on March 1, 1920, and this bill is not at all necessary to effect that purpose.

THE FEDERAL-CONTROL ACT FAIR TO CARRIERS.

I am afraid that the scope and extent of the Federal-control act are not well understood. It provided for compensation to the carriers equivalent to their average annual railway operating income for the three years ending June 30, 1917, and where, due to a receivership or other abnormal conditions, the operating income would not furnish a fair measure of just compensation, the President was authorized "to make with the carrier such agreement for such amount as just compensation as under the circumstances of the particular case he shall find just." Under section 6 of the act a revolving fund of $500,000,000 was created to pay the expenses of Federal control and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment. Later Congress appropriated $750,000,000 more for this purpose. Nearly all of this billion and a quarter has been expended for betterments. The Government has laid out for roadways and structures $780,405,512, and for cars and locomotives $372,000,000. What basis, then, is there for the plaint that the Government proposes to turn back the railroads depreciated and run down without making proper compensation to the owners? The fact is that the Government is turning over the railroads to their owners in better condition than it received them. So you will observe that so far as doing justice to the owners of the railroads is concerned, this original Federal-control act is fully as fair and just to the carriers as the bill before us. Even while this bill is being debated here to-day Members are bombarded with telegrams from banks and trust companies urging its passage and intimating that great uncertainty will prevail and serious damage be done to the stockholders if this bill does not became a law. This I deny. It may be that additional legislation may be necessary, and I will even agree that it will be necessary, in order to meet the problems and conditions resulting from Federal control. And I will go further and say that if this bill were confined wholly to the solution or alleviation of those conditions I would give it most earnest support. However, the bill before us is not confined solely to railroad problems immediately arising out of Federal control, but covers the whole range of transportation, rail and waterway, and drags in by the neck the labor question, which has no place in such a bill. Let us examine the scope of this bill.

SCOPE OF THE BILL.

The bill is 121 pages long. Twenty-one pages are devoted to the matter of compensation of the railroads, a plan for reimbursement of deficits during Federal control, the handling of causes of action arising out of Federal control, and the refunding of carriers' indebtedness to the United States. Thirteen pages are devoted to provisions aimed to guarantee to the railroads an income on their investment and further favoring them by the establishment of another revolving fund amounting to $300,000,000, out of which loans are to be made to railroads in distress. The wisdom of these provisions is very much doubted. They have inspired the bitterest protests on this floor. Men who rail against Government ownership seem to see no inconsistency in this extension of the principle of paternalism to railroad corporations. I am wondering if they would be equally indulgent in the matter of making loans to mechanics to build their own homes. Next come the labor provisions, containing 14 pages. They embody a system of railway boards for the adjustment of disputes between the railroads and their employees and involve principles and methods of settlement which are bound to lead to endless controversy. This is one part of the pending bill that ought to have been given more deliberate consideration. The balance of the bill, embracing 73 pages, is devoted to sundry amendments to the interstate commerce act, some good and some bad, but all of which might very well have been left for later consideration after the main problems incidental to the return of the railroads to private control were out of the way. But I am not so much concerned about the details of this bill as I am with the reflection that it is utterly unnecessary.

While nominally its title is "An act to provide for the termination of the railroads and the systems of transportation," it is confessed in the first section that it is "a transportation act."

ITS EFFECT.

If this bill becomes a law it will most assuredly accentuate and redouble the demand for Government ownership. The people will soon grow tired of seeing special interests specially favored and taxpayers in general will begin to ask why taxes are collected out of their hard-earned income to be set aside in revolving funds to loan to railroad corporations. Already the farmers are up in arms. The Corn Belt Meat Producers' Association, the Farmers' Grain Dealers Association of Minnesota, and the Illinois Farmers' Grain Dealers Association have passed the following ironical but very significant resolutions:

Resolved, That we ask our representatives in Congress to immediately enact legislation dividing the country into farm zones or districts, and guaranteeing to the farmers, in the aggregate, in each zone or district for a period of two years from the effective date of the legislation a net return of 5½ per cent profit, plus ½ per cent for new fences and barns; and that the said total of 6 per cent shall be above all taxes and above all cost of labor and supplies; and it shall be computed on the present cost of reproduction of the farms in said zones or districts in their present condition. Further, be it

Resolved, That as an incident to the foregoing guaranty, that Congress shall also be requested to guarantee (1) that we won't have a drought this summer, (2) that our sows will bring forth of their kind bountifully and plentifully, and (3) that our eggs will hatch, our hens will cackle, and our roosters will crow.

FEDERAL CONTROL INVOLVED NO MATERIAL CHANGE OF MANAGEMENT.

The popular view is that when the Government assumed the control of the railroads the proceeding involved a complete change of personnel and an entire change in system and methods of operation. As a matter of fact, there was no material change of personnel. The roads were run by the same managers, superintendents, yardmasters, telegraph operators, signalmen, locomotive engineers, foremen, and trackwalkers. There was no material change in the office force. It was like turning over the pages of a book and writing a new page with the legend "Subject hereafter to orders of the United States Government."

From thence onward the Government control was confined chiefly to consolidation of lines, arrangement of time schedules, and the distribution of cars for the handling of the Nation's business.

Many people during the war and since doubtless noticed things to find fault with. Cars were unclean and frequently there were delays in traffic. At times these abuses became so persistent as to lead many to express the opinion that the old managers who were kept in control under Government management were not overanxious to help the thought that Government control might be efficient. In any event there has been a zealous propaganda conducted in order to encourage discontent with Government management. However that may be, the railroads will go back to private ownership on March 1, whether this act passes or not.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP NOT NOW THE ISSUE.

The question of the attitude of the Members here on Government ownership is of no moment. Personally I do not mind saying that sooner or later we must come to Government ownership if we are to avoid the evils of class ownership.

If the Government would operate the great public utilities the clamor of the workers for class ownership would subside.

The workers justify their demand by the contention that at the present time the railroads are owned and operated by and for the benefit of special classes, and they set up a claim to a joint share in the plunder.

The unfortunate thing about these conflicts is that the great middle class of consumers is forgotten. As a matter of fact, the railroads should be owned or controlled by neither capital or worker but by the entire people.

I think if we had to meet the problem of railroad transportation against the most we would attempt to do would be to lease the land and grant a concession to operate the railroads.

The origin of the great railroads and their early history make one of the most scandalous pages in our annals. The reputation of the railroads for fair play and honest dealing has always stood at a low ebb. In 1917 40 per cent of the operating railroads in the United States paid no dividends whatever to their stockholders. It was long a maxim current in Wall Street that every railroad had to fail and go into the hands of a receiver three times before it became a success. Figuratively the country is strewn with the bones of investors who ventured into the treacherous sands of railway speculation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Indiana wish to use more time now?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the conference report on the Cummins and Esch bills and shall vote to recommit it. I honestly believe it is a poor attempt to solve a great national problem, and favor the suggestions made by the Director General of Railroads, as well as Interstate Commerce Commissioner Woolley and others, that the Government retain control of the railroads for a period of two years, thereby giving them a fair peace-time test and affording Congress and the American people ample time to consider and enact legislation that will permanently settle this most difficult task.

The passage of this bill drives labor and capital further apart, for it contains a labor section which is tantamount to compulsory servitude.

It perpetrates a grave injustice upon the people of the United States, for by its provisions rates will be increased and an unprecedented subsidy established, which means a departure from the real principles of American competition.

A continuance of Government control can not in any way injure the prosperity of the Nation. On the other hand, the passage of this measure at this particular time will further increase the cost of living, for when you raise freight rates from 25 to 40 per cent you add at least one billion to the charges paid by shippers and several billions in added costs to the public at large. At this period of our country's history our paramount duty is to reduce the cost of living, not to increase it; to allay the existing unrest, not to stimulate it; to zealously guard against extravagance, not to throw open the doors of the people's Treasury, guaranteeing the earnings of a select class. If this bill becomes a law, it will be listed, in my estimation, as one of the greatest blunders in the history of the American Congress.

Of course, the President has ordered the roads back to their private owners, but that should not be used as a means of passing a bill granting special privileges to the railroad stockholders and inflicting industrial slavery on 2,000,000 of railroad workers.

Even though this bill be recommitted, it can be reported again and passed by Congress in time to provide for the operation of the roads as per the President's order, and while I think the best solution at this time is the continuation of Government control, yet if Congress wants to treat labor and the consumers generally as American citizens should be treated this bill can be amended without serious delay.

The proponents of this legislation would have us believe that the farmers are in favor of it, but this letter will refute that statement:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: On behalf of the 750,000 members of the farmers' organizations united in the Farmers' National Council to carry out their reconstruction program, I most earnestly request you to defeat the pending conference railroad bill.

Nearly every national farm organization of any size, regardless of its position on the return of the railroads, has opposed the Government guarantee of dividends or Government subsidy, which is specifically provided in section 15a (3) of this railroad bill, wherein the Interstate Commerce Commission is instructed to fix rates which will yield 5½ per cent on the aggregate value of the railroads and permitted to add not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value.

May I repeat that the overwhelming majority of the organized farmers of America, and, in my judgment, of the unorganized farmers, are opposed to the return of the roads under the pending bill, and I express the hope that you will oppose such legislation and work for the two-year extension of Government operation, so that a plan fair to all the interests involved may be worked out for the final disposal of the railroads.

Yours, sincerely,

THE FARMERS' NATIONAL COUNCIL,
GEORGE P. HAMPTON,
Managing Director.

FEBRUARY 20, 1920.

The following extract from a statement by Judge George A. Anderson, formerly member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, explains very clearly why the railroad employees have but little faith in getting a square deal from the private owners, who operate the roads for profit only, especially when they are forced to relinquish the right to settle their disputes in a voluntary manner and forced arbitration is substituted:

[By Judge Anderson.]

Not only were railroad wages unconscionably low before the Government took over the railroads, but the ghastly burden of industrial accidents was until a few years ago left to rest almost entirely upon labor. The compensation acts, enacted against violent opposition by most of the railroads, have now to some degree ameliorated the fate of the victims of our numerous railroad-employee accidents. But the fellow-servant doctrine, the assumption of risk doctrine, the contributory negligence doctrine, all had their origin or greatest operation in the field of railroad-employee accidents. Broadly speaking, the old railroad management treated labor as a commodity to be bought in the lowest market and junked when shattered in service.

Labor has, and has reason to have, no confidence in getting a square deal if the railroads are returned to corporations operating them for private profit and dominated by the financial cliques that have of recent years controlled our great railroad systems. For that matter, neither have the security holders. Labor is embittered by generations of ill treatment and exploitation. The representatives of labor say, and with substantial truth, that the forces which, until December 26, 1917, dominated our transportation industry are representative neither of the rights of the millions of human beings who have done the essential transportation work nor of the rights of the other millions who have furnished the money to pay for the transportation facilities.

The great mass of American railroad workers are patriotic, loyal, and devoted citizens of this great and free Republic.

In defense of American rights as freemen they fought, bled, and died in the great World War; and as freemen they will never willingly allow those rights to be taken from them.

They neither seek nor do they want to be treated as a special class, but they do expect just and fair treatment, as well as the right to a voice and a vote in any board or court which we might create by law which by its decisions decides the compensation they are to receive, as well as the conditions under which they serve. Under the provisions of this act the workers are granted little or no voice in adjusting wage or service matters. And as one who believes in justice to all concerned, it is our duty in turning the roads back to see to it that labor is free—at least as free as it was when the Government took over control. If legislation setting up wage boards is to be written into this bill, a workable means should be adopted insuring to every worker a fair and square adjustment of the conditions and wages under which he must work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I promised to yield time to several gentlemen who happen to be out of the Hall at the present moment, so I will take the floor temporarily. I do not mean that this shall be the closing speech on my part, although I intended to close on our side and may do it yet, but is in the nature of a reply more than anything else to some of the statements and arguments presented by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], for whom no man in the House entertains a higher regard than I do. [Applause.]

Let us review the labor legislation in this bill. A subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, without any suggestion from anybody, so far as I know, got up what it thought was the best labor provision that could be offered to prevent strikes. What was the fundamental principle of the provision that we reported to the House? It was to have adjustment boards of equal membership chosen by the parties to the dispute, by the labor organizations and by the carriers or carrier representatives, and in case of failure to reach an agreement there was an appeal board established consisting of nine members, three to be appointed by the President upon the nomination of the railroads, three to be appointed by the President upon the nomination of the employees, and three to be appointed by the President from the public. It was provided that the three appointed on behalf of the public were to have no voting power at all, so that the determinations of the board had to be practically unanimous-consent agreements by the representatives of employers and employees. Five of the six appointed on behalf of the employers and employees had to agree in order that the agreement be binding. The public representatives had no vote and no other power except to reflect public opinion. Their function was purely advisory.

That was the provision of the bill that the House committee brought in, on the preparation of which our distinguished friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. ESCH], put in many hours and many days of hard work. Upon the subcommittee was also Mr. WINSLOW, who has been a large employer of labor himself; Mr. HAMILTON, of Michigan, who has been a Member of the House as long as I have, which has been so long that I try to forget it when I am a candidate for reelection, for fear some one will say "long enough"; the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; and myself. The fundamental idea of that provision was that a labor adjustment is an agreement freely entered into by both sides, or if not that it will not work. The way to prevent strikes is to prevent that which brings them about, either actual or alleged, and everybody knows that with that kind of a board the responsibility would be upon both sides to come to an agreement, to reach an adjustment that would be satisfactory to both sides.

When that bill came to this House and was considered in the Committee of the Whole an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], which was adopted in the Committee of the Whole. I stood by the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in Committee of the Whole, but after the amendment carried in the Committee of the Whole somebody demanded a separate vote in the House, which, of course, was granted. There were only 40 or 50 majority in the Committee of the Whole for the Anderson amendment, but upon a yea-and-nay vote in the House the Members to the extent of 252 against 112 gave their judgment in favor of the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON in preference to the provision brought in by the subcommittee and the full Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Now, this was a yea-and-nay vote, which I regarded as a most solemn instruction to the conferees not to depart from the principles involved in both propositions without first bringing the bill back to the House. But the Senate bill carried an antistrike provision, enforceable by criminal penalties.

Finally the Senate conferees yielded on the criminal-penalty provision. The conferees tentatively agreed that there should be five adjustment boards, composed of equal representatives of the parties to the dispute, and an appeal board, composed of five members, three representing the public and one each representing the employers and the employees. Three of the appeal board constituted a quorum and decided all questions coming before the appeal board. But this tentative agreement was replaced by the provisions now in this conference report, which give to the three public representatives the absolute power to prevent any agreement made by the parties to the dispute becoming effective without at least one of them agreeing with the parties to the controversy.

That brought in a new principle, contrary to the bill reported to the House by the House committee and contrary to the Anderson amendment that the House had adopted by more than a two-thirds vote. I said, "I can not agree to this provision," although I felt it was better than the tentative agreement or the antistrike provisions of the Senate bill.

What have we now? It is so arranged that even one member of the three representing the public can veto an absolutely unanimous agreement of all the parties to the controversy. An adjustment is the coming to a working agreement by which those who employ and those who are employed may work together in harmonious cooperation and not bring on a test trial of force, one the force of the invested dollar and the other the force of the human machine. The bill provides that at least one of the public group must agree to any decision before it is binding. Now, if we had carried that principle further and had said that no decision should be binding unless one of each group agreed to it, it would have looked like we intended to be fair. But all the representatives of the public have to do to prevent a harmonious, unanimous agreement becoming effective is to do nothing, and thereby put a pocket veto upon everything agreed to by the representatives of the two groups who must work harmoniously together if strikes are to be avoided.

The present bill provides for voluntary boards for the adjustment of grievances and working conditions, but not wages. It further provides that the labor board, upon its own initiative, may suspend anything that the voluntary boards agree to. It may vacate it, amend it, or ignore it, and in case it is of the opinion that the agreement would substantially increase rates it may vacate it on its own initiative.

How is a working agreement ever to be effective between employer and employee if those members of the board who necessarily have the least practical knowledge by way of experience of the subject matter and constituting only one-third of its membership have this arbitrary and autocratic power over the action of two-thirds of the board? What kind of a treaty would any nation ever ratify if it did not have any voice in the making of it? A treaty so made would be a treaty by violence, a treaty by force, and that is practically what is provided in this bill as to the power of the minority of the board. It can prevent any agreement being made simply by refusing to approve it. This bill gives to the public representatives power exceeding that of two-thirds of the board, and is in theory and in fact minority rule. The two-thirds of the board may decide that they can work together and carry on transportation by unanimous agreement, but unless at least one of the three public representatives, be he some lawyer, doctor, or college professor, joins in the agreement there can be no decision.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. In a moment. There is no punishment provided for striking in this bill, and by giving an absolute veto power even by silence to the minority of the board you are absolutely inviting, encouraging, and promoting strikes under this bill. I think that the conference committee ought to further consider this bill, and if it can not make any other change it ought to change it so as to provide that at least one member of the employer group and one member of the employee group and one member of the public group shall all agree to any decision before it is valid and binding. Under this bill the three members representing the railroads and two representing the public can make a decision. Or three of the representatives of the public and two of the representatives of the railroads can come to a decision.

Or three of the labor representatives and two of the public can make a decision, but all six of the members representing employers and employees can make no valid decision, although constituting one more than a quorum of the board. Now, let us do the fair and the right thing both to the employers and the employees and give them the same power that the public representatives have in this bill.

One thing further I want to refer to. My friend Mr. ESCH is an able lawyer, and he believes that the power of the President in issuing his proclamation was absolutely exhausted under the law and that he can not do anything further regarding the return of the railroads; that he can not vacate or rescind his order. Remember, it is an order to take effect in the future. He has parted with none of his power, and retains it fully until March 1. Nobody else has been clothed with any power. I have no doubt that the President remains clothed with full and complete power until 12.01 o'clock a. m. on the 1st day of March, and until that time he can revoke or modify his order and can extend the effective date to a later day.

You will remember that the same talk was had, the same hurry was put up to the Committee on Interstate Commerce to get a report in early and have speedy action in the House and Senate before the 31st day of December, 1919, upon the idea that the President had stated in May that he was going to return the roads on that day to their owners. I did not believe that he would do so without legislation and I do not believe that he will not revoke his order and postpone the effective date thereof if legislation is not had by March 1. His order is executory in character, and I am surprised that any good lawyer should claim it to be otherwise. I have heard some lawyers say that it was like the power conferred in an instrument—that when exercised it is ended. The President under existing law has full power until 21 months after the issuance of the proclamation of peace, but if he sees fit to do so he has power to return the railroads at any time, but until the roads are actually returned the President has full power to revoke any order he may make or to modify it in any way.

It will not be necessary for the President to revoke his order, as I have no doubt that the Senate conferees will yield on almost anything in order to secure the passage of the bill by March 1. I believe they will yield on section 6 in the Cummins bill and that they will yield on the labor provisions, so as not to enable a minority on the labor board to have more power than a majority.

A very learned and adroit argument was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] to prove, in effect, that some railroads may earn lawfully that which may become unlawful to retain. Now, this bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission can declare the whole United States a rate district, and it has the power to fix a rate based upon the value of all the railroads in the United States, that must provide a minimum net return upon the value of the whole property of not less than 5½ per cent for the first two years, but after that time the commission will have power to make the minimum net return either less or greater than 5½ per cent on the value of the whole property in rate-making groups that may be established by the commission, which may be the whole United States or any part of it.

Now, what is the object of fixing an absolute minimum net return on value of the railroads? It is in effect fixing a minimum wage for the dollar. We establish the principle by this bill that a dollar invested in railroad property shall have for its minimum wage not less than 5½ per cent per annum upon the value of the railroad property within the rate-making district in which the dollar is invested. What is the result? The commission is given no power to fix the price of supplies that the railroad buys from the manufacturer that possibly holds stock in the railroad. It is given no power to fix the price or the wages paid, no power to fix the salaries of railway executives. I regret to tell it and would not if it was not already public. When I offered an amendment to the bill in the House that no amount in excess of $20,000 per annum of the compensation of any railway executive should be charged to operating expenses, I showed that 204 of them were getting not less than $20,000 and some of them more than $100,000, and the House refused to accept it but voted it down. So gentlemen of the House by their votes, in effect, said that those salaries are not excessive and should be treated as operating expenses.

What do you think of the rights of a poor laborer working under compulsion of necessity who gets not more than $4 or $5 a day, while railroad presidents who sit in Wall Street and do not see the roads more than once or twice a year get $100,000, all of which must come from the earnings of the road before it pays any dividends, and your 5½ per cent net comes on the property value after all these things are taken care of? Is that what gentlemen are in favor of in this bill? Do you want to go back home and present that situation to your constituents as the sum of all you could do in your efforts to take care of this situation? Why, if you can fix the minimum net profits upon a dollar invested in railways, why can not you fix it on a dollar invested in the manufacture of engines; why can not you fix it on the dollar invested in the manufacture of cars; why not fix it on the manufacture of steel rails for railroads, as well also as on the producers of coal for the railroads, all of which is a part of the expense of railroad operation and maintenance? Why not say to the Steel Trust that 6 per cent net is all you are entitled to on the value of your property, because practically everything you make is used by public utilities for the benefit of the public? Why not say to the coal barons, we allow the railroads only 6 per cent profit on their investment and we can not allow you any more on your investment? Of all over 6 per cent you can keep half, but in excess of 6 per cent the other half you must turn over to the Government.

Much of the railroad property is not used directly but indirectly in transportation. I mean in the actual movement of traffic. Take a station, for example. A terminal is just as necessary as the tracks. Look here under your eyes at the Terminal Station in Washington. It is owned by two railroad companies. I do not know how the commission is going to get at its value for the first two years. It has got to take the book value or some other kind of value, and it will be a guess, I do not care what it takes. Take the passenger terminal station, with not a cent collected for the use of it from any passenger, and yet it is property owned by the railroad company and used in transportation. Therefore, the freight, the traffic that does pay the 5½ per cent, must be sufficient to cover the value of this non-revenue-producing property.

Take the mammoth passenger stations in New York City. They cost about $150,000,000 each when constructed—their property and connections. Not a cent do they charge anybody for going into those mammoth stations, but they are railroad property, and they are used in transportation. Their value will be added to the total value on which 5½ per cent must be paid, and who will pay it? The freight traffic, and nothing else.

It is claimed by the railroads, or the railroad people, everywhere that, in addition to the 40 per cent increase in rates, 15 per cent just before the railroads were taken over by the Government and 25 per cent afterwards, that these rates will have to be materially increased, and you are voting for this increase if you vote for this bill, not only the increase in rates heretofore made to continue but by this new-fangled, socialistic, communistic legislation these war-made rates are to be further increased. This section is a beauty; this bill is a beauty. It has some good legislation in it, but we can take out all of the bad and leave all the good. This legislation is socialistic; it is communistic; it is capitalistic.

The commission after two years can make the net return 6 or 7 or 8 per cent. It has the power to do it on all of the value of all the property used on which the rate is based. That is capitalism. The minimum wage for Wall Street money or yours or mine that goes into it, and no minimum wage for the dollar of the farmer, none for the dollar of the raiser of wheat or corn, none for anybody but these preferred investors who have asked the privilege to exercise Government sovereignty through charter privileges to take private property for their use. That is capitalism by condemnation pure and simple. To take from the prosperous roads, those that have been efficiently managed and economically operated, a part of their earnings is communism. A railroad can not refuse traffic. If it has not sufficient facilities, it must invest more money to get same, and then, if by the growth of the country, by the good judgment and industrious, efficient, and economical management, it makes more than 6 per cent, communism steps in and takes one-half of it on the theory that it was unlawful to make over 6 per cent.

Let me say something to you horny-handed sons of toil who, when you are at home, are telling the farmers that you put in your whole blessed time here working for them. Let me show those farmers how you are serving them in this House at this hour. Take the Baltimore & Ohio Chicago Terminal Railroad. The last year before Government control it operated 79 miles of railroad. It has a stock issue of $8,000,000. It has a bond issue of $33,044,000, or $418,072 per mile. The total bonds and stock amount to $41,044,000, or $519,544 per mile. Let us see what the owners of that stock are getting out of that terminal company in the way of net returns. In 1912–13 they had a deficit. In 1913–14 there was another deficit. In 1914–15 it made 4.06 per cent. In 1915–16 it made 4.01 per cent. The deficit for the whole time is 100 per cent. The railway operating revenue for 1917 per mile of that road was $24,577; railway operating expenses per mile for the same year were $25,372. The $40,000,000 investment does not pay expenses of operation, yet it comes under the provisions of this bill, and in the rate district in which Chicago may fall the value of that property will be added to the value of all of the other property on which the minimum 5½ per cent must be made. The value of the passenger terminal here in Washington will be added to all of the other railroad property of the owning roads. This terminal may not bring in a cent of net return, and the Chicago terminal may not bring a cent above expenses of operation, but you are providing in this bill that the value of nonrevenue-producing property shall become the basis for rates upon all of the property on which net earnings are made.

There is yet plenty of time before the primaries and much more time before the general election for the people to find out what we have voted to put on them by way of additional burdens by this bill. During this time the commission will be figuring out the 5½ per cent net minimum return on railroad property. If a railroad costs $500,000 per mile and another one costs $50,000 a mile, and they both perform the same transportation service, is it worth more money to the shipper to have a bale of cotton carried on one than on the other? This is capitalizing the unearned community value of the property and requiring by inflexible provisions of law that not less than 5½ per cent net must be paid on it.

Nobody knows what it will be. But not satisfied with this burden upon the people, we give a subsidy for the first six months. That is, we will continue the payment of the war rental for that period. We made a loss during the war, and it was expected we would, as we gave the roads a rental equal to the three years preceding the war and two of those years were the best they ever had. It was all right during the war. We provided to continue the war control for 21 months after the war, largely with the view and intention of letting the Government after its war-losing period have a little time to recoup these war losses and save loss to the taxpayers. Now, you are permitting the owners to take the roads back and agree to loan them through funding or otherwise over a billion dollars. How will you feel when you go home while rates are being increased on everything that the farmer grows, while increasing the earnings of the railroads by a pure subsidy, but decreasing the net earnings of the property which the farmer has, who has no Government franchise privileges, who has no Government subsidy guaranty, who has no Government protection against his labor costs by providing by law for a net profit in the value of his farm of 5½ per cent minimum?

What do you think about that, my good friends, both Democrats and Republicans? If you do not mind your constituents will come pretty near thinking you are plutocratic and capitalistic rather than democratic. Now, my friends, this labor provision legislation will come nearer producing strikes than preventing them. You have no penalty, not even a civil one by way of damages, against strikes. I will not say that as to the power to issue injunctions against strikes. But are you really going to help the weak roads? That is why you are taking away from the roads one-half of all net over 6 per cent, which will depreciate the value of the property on which excess earnings are made. I beg to say that a railroad has practically no value except its net earning power. Its property can not be used for anything except transportation. You can not reduce its net earnings without reducing the value of its property, as it has no other value.

Now, take a railroad like the Burlington or any other railroad built economically and operated under good management, and say it makes 10 per cent net on value. That is 4 per cent over the 6 which it is entitled to retain. You let it retain 2 per cent to put into its reserve that it does not need, and 2 per cent goes to the Government, to hold in trust as a contingent fund, which the Interstate Commerce Commission may either loan to railroads or use in the purchase of equipment to be leased to railroads. The funds loaned must be well secured, and 6 per cent interest must be paid on the loan. While the bill does not so provide, it is supposed that the so-called weak roads are to have the benefit of borrowing from this contingent fund over the so-called strong roads. The credit of any railroad must be poor indeed that would or could afford to borrow large amounts of money at 6 per cent and be compelled to give good security for such loans. In other words, such roads are necessarily already heavily indebted, or else they could borrow from private sources with good security at less than 6 per cent interest. Such a railroad must be bordering on insolvency and a receivership to justify it to borrow at such a high rate of interest. If such was the case, the Government would not and could not loan to such a railroad without being made a preferred creditor. It is inconceivable how a weak road can have its credit strengthened by going still deeper in debt at a high rate of interest. If its earnings have not been such as to give it credit prior to the Government loan, the mere fact of the additional burden of debt will not increase its net earnings but must necessarily increase its fixed charges.

It is but natural that such borrowing will add to the weakness of the road and that ultimately the road will have to be sold, and the Government will, in order to protect itself, have to buy it in, and thus become the owner of the road and must either operate it or sell it at the market price and take the loss. If a large fund is ever built up through excess earnings in this way the Government will eventually either become the owner of many railroads that can not any more compete with the strong roads, by reason of these Government loans, than they can without them, or else become the burden bearer of all these numerous weak roads, and take the losses on its loans that will naturally come to it in the inevitable receiverships that will result from this socialistic financing of the weak roads in time of peace and under normal conditions. But if the contingent fund should not be sufficient to loan all the weak roads all the money they will need and which it is assumed they can not otherwise procure, then the weak-road problem will not be solved and some other solution will have to be found.

But suppose some of the weak roads had rather lease equipment from the Government than borrow money, the Government must either purchase equipment or else manufacture it in its own shops, as it would have a right to do, and lease this equipment to the weak roads for a sum that will provide 6 per cent return on the cost of the equipment, and in addition thereto an amount as a depreciation fund that will enable the Government to purchase or manufacture the same amount of equipment to replace the equipment worn out and scrapped.

The Government will thus become the car builder, the engine builder, and the builder of all other equipment ultimately for all railroads. This will be inevitable, as no private corporation can compete with the Government in the purchase of equipment. Nor can any private manufacturer compete with the Government in the manufacture of equipment. The Government can acquire its materials for manufacture in vast quantities and at better prices than can any private corporation, and it can and will sell its manufactured equipment at the bare costs of manufacture, with no profits or dividends to be provided for in its operations. Or it can lease its equipment at a lower rental than can any private owner of such equipment. By the definite specific provisions of this bill we have actual, real, practical Government ownership of transportation facilities. There is no distinction or difference in principle in the Government ownership of engines, cars, and other railroad equipment than in the Government ownership of the tracks and terminals of the roads.

This bill, therefore, both in principle and policy, commits this country to the doctrine of Government ownership and operation of railroads. The necessary equipment property of railroads is fully equal to 25 per cent of the total value of railroad property.

The camel's head is in the tent and the process of full and complete nationalization of railroads will commence with the enactment of this bill, both as to Government ownership of the physical properties and as to Government financing of the railroads. Such is the logical and inevitable effect of the practical application of the mandatory provisions of this bill. It is true that in this way the Government funds with which to begin the process of Government ownership will not come directly through general taxation. It will begin by taking one-half of all the net earnings of railroads as a whole in excess of 6 per cent and devote that sum to financing insolvent and discredited roads, which will result finally in the Government ownership of the weak roads, and also in the immediate Government ownership of railroad equipment and operation of same through lease contracts. This must inevitably follow eventually the enactment of this bill unless the excess-earnings provision is declared unconstitutional. If it is unconstitutional, then this bill is a complete failure in so far as its being any aid to the so-called weak roads, and if such proves to be the case, the death knell of any further experimenting with private ownership and Government regulation of railroads will have been sounded.

How is it conceivable that the weak roads can be strengthened by depriving the strong roads of a part of their net earnings for the benefit of weak roads without having the direct effect of weakening the strong roads to the extent of their net earnings so taken?

It is not thinkable that the weak roads can be strengthened by the aid that they receive from the net earnings of the strong roads without weakening the strong roads in a like ratio by the loss of net earnings. The result will be that the combined strength of all the roads will be no greater by reason of the operations of the contingent fund than the combined strength of all the roads was prior to establishing such sinking fund. As the value of railroad property depends entirely upon net earnings, the reduction of net earnings must necessarily reduce the value of the property of the railroad whose net earnings have been taken and to the extent the value is so reduced the railroad's property has been taken by the Government without just compensation, which is unconstitutional. I do not see how the President can fail to veto this bill on account of this unconstitutional excess-earnings contingent-fund provision. But regardless of any constitutional difficulty, I am unalterably opposed to providing for any definite, specific, statutory net return on the value of railroads, whether valued as single railroads or in systems or by groups, and I am firmly opposed to the recapture of any portion of the net earnings of any railroad in excess of such fixed statutory return. Such proposed recapture provisions in this bill will certainly tend to reduce and stifle individual incentive and enterprise and will result in discouraging the building up and improving of existing railroad properties and will put a stop to the construction of additional new lines, so badly needed in some sections of the country.

This bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission on its own initiative may establish both minimum and maximum rates, fares, and charges. This is a new departure in our interstate-commerce law. Heretofore the commission has only had power to determine a reasonable maximum rate. Just what effect the exercise of this new power will have upon rail rates as a whole remains to be seen. But it certainly empowers the commission to eliminate all competition as to rates. But, strange to say, this bill also authorizes the commission to divide the whole continental United States into competing systems. How are we to have competing systems of railroads if common minimum rates are to be established for all these systems? No road can reduce its rates to meet the demands of its shippers below the established irreducible minimum.

By the mandatory provisions of this bill the commission must establish a level of rates that will produce a net income of not less than 5½ per cent on the value of all the railroad property in the United States taken as a whole or in groups less than the United States as a whole. Therefore, the minimum level of rates can not and must not be less than will be necessary to produce the 5½ per cent net return on all the railroad property in the rate-making area. The imperial State of Texas can not put into effect an intrastate rate that would be valid if the rate, in the opinion of the commission, would result in giving rates within Texas that would be less than the established minimum level, or that might, in the judgment of the commission, tend to reduce the minimum net return below 5½ per cent on the railroad property as a whole in the rate-making district in which Texas is a part.

Will anyone attempt to say in practice what will be the margin of competition between the minimum and maximum rates in any class or commodity rate? What will be the margin between the minimum and the maximum rates on coal in the section of the United States east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers? What will be the margin between maximum and minimum rates? What will be the width of the zone of competition on coal in that competitive field? In that field it might, and probably would, be that the minimum level of rates on coal would be all that the strong roads would care to charge, and that such roads would make the established minimum also the maximum rates on coal in that field. Under this bill the commission could not prevent the strong roads taking such action which would result in the minimum becoming also the maximum rates on coal in that entire section of the country. While the strong roads may be able to make a good profit on minimum rates, the weaker roads could not possibly make more than operating expenses.

The result would be that the weaker roads would importune the commission to increase the minimum rates on coal. Or it might be that the strong roads could make a net return of 6 per cent on the level of minimum rates on all traffic in that district and would adopt the minimum established by the commission on all traffic as the maximum; and especially might this be the case as the strong roads will be required to give up one-half of all net earnings in excess of 6 per cent. But what would become of the weak roads in competition? Would they be in any better condition as to increase in net earnings than they are now? In practice the minimum will become the maximum rates and competition will cease to exist as completely as if all the roads in the rate-making territory were owned by one company.

Mr. Speaker, I have not the time at my command to point out in further detail all the objections I have to this bill. But I do not believe that it is, in fact, a measure that will make the private ownership and operation of railroads a success. I think it will prove to be the real beginning of a movement for Government ownership that will end in the complete nationalization of railroads in this country. I do not think it is possible to give the country the transportation service it needs and must have, coupled with profits on investment and operation. Private capital can not and will not invest in any kind or character of enterprise except for the profits expected to be secured thereby. In my opinion this bill will not create a demand for either the bonds or stocks of existing railroads in sufficient volume to furnish the new capital needed and that we will soon be asked to add further legislation to this measure looking to the further strengthening the credit of railroads. As a country grows older it naturally demands and must have cheaper transportation, and finally it demands and must have transportation at actual cost of furnishing it. I think this country has now reached that period. But associations of railway executives, committees of railroad security holders, groups of investment bankers, high-salaried railroad officials, and railroad lawyers are all engaged at this time in a desperate and determined effort to continue private ownership, private operation, and private financing of railroads.

Mr. Cleveland once said: "Unorganized good intentions and idle patriotic aspirations can not successfully contend for the mastery against the combined efforts of avarice and greed." The unorganized and unawakened public may not prove to be equal to the task of defending itself against the combined assaults now being made against it by the well-organized and well-disciplined forces of avarice and greed; but it is only a question of time as to when it will awaken and when it will organize, and then it will sweep every impediment out of its way.

The furnishing of the means and facilities of transportation to the public is a Government function, duty, and obligation. The Government may make use of private agencies in discharging this duty, but only upon condition that transportation through private agencies must be as efficient and as economical as it can be furnished by the Government through direct ownership and operation. The Government can and will, if it undertakes it, furnish transportation at cost. That is, at just what it costs the Government to furnish it, including no element of profit on investment or in operation.

Unless through private ownership and operation transportation can and will be furnished at rates, including profits on capital invested, not exceeding the rates charged by the Government, which will not include profits on investment, it is the duty of the Government to own and operate the railroads in the public interest.

But it is claimed by the advocates of continued private ownership and operation that by reason of private initiative and competitive service the privately owned and operated railroads can and will give a service equal to or better than can or will be given by the Government and will be so much more economically operated that the difference in costs of private operation as compared with Government costs of operation will enable the payment of a fair and reasonable profit on the capital invested at rates no higher than would be necessary under Government ownership and operation, exclusive of any profit on investment.

If this contention in favor of private ownership can be established to the satisfaction of the general public, the chief argument in favor of Government ownership would be greatly weakened, if not refuted. But only upon the assurance that private ownership and operation can and will furnish all needed transportation facilities at a cost to the public, including a profit on capital sufficient to secure a reliable and dependable market for railroad securities in such volume as the present and future needs of the service may require, and at rates that will not exceed the rates for similar service furnished by the Government without including any profit on the investment, should private ownership and operation be adopted as a permanent policy.

There has never been any sort of compulsion, moral or otherwise, that has forced private capital to invest in railroad enterprises. The Government has never done anything to induce such investments, and no moral estoppel can be pleaded against the Government now acquiring all the railroads at their fair market value and resuming its natural and proper function of furnishing all needed transportation to the public at actual costs.

On account of the exercise of bad business judgment, more than half the railroad mileage of the United States prior to the present war, with Government regulation of rates, had ceased to be profitable. No longer would private capital take the chances of almost certain loss by investments in either the stocks or bonds of the so-called "weak sisters."

The owners of these "weak sisters," as well as other sisters not classed as "weak," began a most active campaign through newspaper and magazine advertising, by circularizing and through public addresses, to so affect public sentiment as to cause pressure to be brought against the Interstate Commerce Commission in favor of rate increases asked by the railroads, but which the railroads, prior to the war, had not been able to convince the commission that they were justly entitled to have. The charge was made that the commission had fixed rates so low that the railroads had been starved and that by reason of the action of the commission a state of arrested development was actually confronting the country; that unless rates were increased to such figures as would make railroad securities a desirable investment, Government ownership was inevitable.

On account of this self-defamatory campaign, more than anything else, it became very difficult to market stocks and bonds bearing rates of interest that did not on the face of the security suggest its own unsoundness. Higher rates were asked for, solely to increase profits on the investment.

At one time, just prior to Government control, there were about 40,000 miles of railroads in the hands of receivers in the United States, a mileage exceeding the total of Great Britain and Ireland, greater than all the mileage in the Republic of France, greater than all the mileage in Italy, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland combined, and almost, if not quite, equal to all the mileage in the German Empire prior to the Great World War. Could there be more irrefutable evidence produced of the economic and financial failure of private operation and management of railroads?

It is alleged almost daily in the "influenced" press of the country that it would cost the Government $20,000,000,000 to purchase the railroads, and that at this time it would be impossible to float a bond issue of that amount without increasing the rate of interest to 5 per cent, or in excess of that amount; that such a rate of interest would bring down the market value of Liberty bonds to 75 or 80 cents on the dollar.

The whole bonded and short-time note indebtedness of all class 1 roads, exclusive of duplications, does not exceed $9,500,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 par value. The whole volume of outstanding stocks of all class 1 roads does not exceed $8,000,000,000 par value.

The market or realizable value of this whole volume of bonds upon the average will not exceed 80 cents on the dollar, as shown by actual sales made on the New York Stock Exchange for the three years of 1917, 1918, and 1919.

If the whole issue of bonds and short-time paper should amount to $10,000,000,000, its actual market value during the three years mentioned does not exceed eight billions. The outstanding railroad stocks of all class 1 roads, exclusive of duplications, will not exceed eight billions par value. The average market value of these stocks, as shown by actual sales for the three years mentioned, will not exceed 60 cents on the dollar par value or $4,800,000,000. Therefore the total market value of all the bonds, notes, and stocks of all class 1 roads, exclusive of duplications, at the average at which they have sold on the New York Stock Exchange, for the three years mentioned, does not exceed $12,800,000,000.

It does not matter how much or how little these railroads actually cost, or how much it would cost to reproduce them now, less depreciation, or how much or how little water there is in the stocks and bonds, they are justly and honestly worth what they can be sold for on an average normal market.

The owners have no right to be paid for them more than their true average market value as shown by actual sales during any period of three normal business years.

Tax-exempt bonds of the Government bearing 3¾ per cent interest can be easily sold at par. The interest on $12,800,000,000 at 3¾ per cent amounts to only $480,000,000 per annum. The Government is to-day paying about $940,000,000 per annum as a rental on the railroads that have been taken over by the Government for war purposes, a sum in excess of the interest on the whole estimated market value of all class 1 roads by $466,000,000 per annum.

If by any method of estimating or ascertaining the value of the railroads the value should be found to be $20,000,000,000, as claimed by some, the interest on that sum at 3¾ per cent would be only $750,000,000, or $190,000,000 less than the standard return now being paid by the Government as a rental for the roads.

But it will only be necessary to acquire the stocks of all the roads, either by agreement of by condemnation, in order for the Government to acquire the actual legal title to the roads, subject to the bonded indebtedness or other lien encumbrances on the roads so acquired. It would require the issuance and sale of not exceeding $5,000,000,000 in bonds by the Government, the annual interest charge on which, at 3¾ per cent, would be only $187,500,000 per annum.

The interest rates on the outstanding bonds of the railroads rarely exceeds 5 per cent; many bear 4½ per cent and 4 per cent, and some as low as 3½ per cent. All railroad bonds are subject to Federal, State, county, and municipal taxation. For this reason it will prove an easy undertaking to exchange 3¾ per cent tax-free Government bonds for railroad bonds at market value. Or the Government, if deemed advisable, can resort to condemnation proceedings and pay the value thus found for the railroad bonds.

Notwithstanding the innumerable receiverships and reorganizations that have taken place, no real amortization of railroad capitalization has resulted. In receiverships and reorganizations the bonds outstanding have usually been reduced in order to cut down fixed charges, but in such cases stock issues have usually been increased.

So that after reorganizations have taken place the form of the capitalization has been changed, but the volume remains as large or larger than prior to reorganization.

But by the Government acquiring the railroads through issuance of tax-free 3¾ per cent bonds the fixed charges can thus be so largely reduced, and with dividends on stocks entirely eliminated, that the entire cost of the railroads to the Government can and will be fully amortized in a period not exceeding 50 years, with lower rates to the public than would be necessary to be charged by the owners of the roads to enable them to pay operating expenses, maintenance, and fixed charges, plus a reasonable dividend on outstanding stocks without any amortization of capitalization.

The people will not submit to the payment of rates so onerous and burdensome as will be necessary in order to revive the weakened and debilitated credit of the railroads to such an extent as will enable them to sell their securities in the open markets of the world in competition with all other securities offered to private investors in such volume as will be absolutely necessary for new capital expenditures, without which the public interest can not be served.

With the railroads without credit and with all expenses of operation and maintenance higher than ever before known, it is little short of an act of folly to return the railroads to their owners. Regardless of our opinions and prejudices as to Government ownership of railroads, such is now or will soon become an absolute necessity.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS]. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this conference report on the railroad bill is the result of many months of labor. It comes back to us to-day with the sanction of a unanimous vote of the conferees from the Senate, both Republicans and Democrats, and with the consent of the conferees on the part of the House with the exception of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. The gentleman from Kentucky is of the opinion that a certain section of this bill is unconstitutional. So it resolves itself into this situation, that of those who believe the bill is unconstitutional the only one who objects to it is the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], who has just closed his argument. I have great respect for the gentleman from Tennessee, and you can readily see, gentlemen of the House, the embarrassment with which the gentleman from Tennessee is confronted. On May 19, 1919, the gentleman from Tennessee introduced a bill in this House to continue the Federal control of railroads until January 1, 1924. On November 5, 1919, he introduced a bill to continue Government control and operation of railroads until December 31, 1921. On December 2, 1918, he introduced an additional bill to continue Government operation of railroads until December 31, 1921, and on August 2, 1919, by request, he introduced another bill to take the railroads and turn them over to the railroad employees for a period of 100 years. Now, with all of those bills, how could the gentleman be otherwise than embarrassed? [Applause on the Republican side.] And, gentlemen, this question, after it is stripped of all its verbiage and camouflage, is a question of whether we are going to have private ownership and management of the transportation systems of this country or whether we are going to have Government control or ownership. There has been a great deal said with reference to the labor provisions. That labor question is very simple.

Labor is opposed to the antistrike provision. They were also in favor of Government control and Government ownership. The House voted against the antistrike provision and voted against Government ownership. The Senate yielded, and in this bill there is no antistrike provision, and the only labor fight you have will be the fight for Government control or Government ownership or the Plumb plan. That is the thing that is before this body to-day.

There is one other thing that ought to be explained, and I have only a few moments, and that is what occurred at the fake double-barrel caucus the other night. It was contended there by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that the labor provisions of this bill were not written by the conferees, but he said they were written by an outside individual and did not have deliberate consideration in conference or even by the individual. On being pressed about the matter he said the person who wrote them was Mr. Hines. Mr. Hines directed a letter to Mr. BARKLEY in which he said:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, February 21, 1920.

Hon. A. W. BARKLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am told that the impression has been created, as the result of a remark made by you in a recent conference of Members of Congress and others, that I originated the labor provisions in the railroad bill.

If this impression has been drawn from what you said, I am sure what you said was misconstrued, because I am satisfied any statement you may have made on the subject was accurate.

In order to prevent the possibility of the situation being confused and of the idea prevailing in any quarter that the labor provisions represent a policy originated by me instead of by Congress, I shall appreciate it if you will be good enough to read this letter to the House.

Through the courtesy of the conference committee I received last Saturday a draft of the labor provisions, showing that the conference committee had definitely adopted two leading principles. The first was that there ought to be a wage board upon which the public, the employees, and the carriers would be represented. The other was that statutory provision ought to be made for boards of adjustment to deal with grievances.

I took the action of the conference committee on these two leading principles as indicating its final conviction that these two principles should be incorporated in the legislation. Taking this as the foundation for my consideration in the matter, I addressed myself exclusively to the question whether the details of the provisions agreed upon by the conference would satisfactorily carry out these fundamental principles. In transmitting my suggestions to Senator CUMMINS I stated that "this redraft is not designed to propose any independent view of my own on this subject but is designed simply to take the general scheme of the draft as already agreed upon and modify it so as to incorporate therein the suggestions made in my letter of the 14th instant."

As to the wage board, I found that while the conference had adopted the three-party principle—that is, representation of the public, labor, and carriers—it had provided for only one representative of labor and one of the carriers as against three of the public. I therefore advised that a more satisfactory and reasonable application of the principle of three-party representation would be to have three representatives of labor and of the carriers, as well as of the public, making a board of nine instead of five.

As to the adjustment boards, I found that the provision agreed upon by the conference undertook to specify the organizations of employees which should be represented upon these boards and would result that the board of adjustment which would pass upon grievances would be dependent upon that particular organization to which the employees belonged, thus producing a great deal of confusion and endless jurisdictional conflicts between different organizations. I therefore advised that the entire matter of boards of adjustment be left to the agreement of the carriers and the employees instead of being made rigid and inelastic by statutory specifications.

In the original draft which came to me I found that the boards of adjustment created thereunder were to handle not only grievances but wage matters also. My experiences with the railway boards of adjustment and with wage matters in the Railroad Administration convince me that it will be impracticable for such boards to handle both grievances and wage matters because of the enormous amount of work involved, and I therefore suggested that the adjustment boards devote themselves solely to grievance matters.

There were various minor features which I suggested. One was that a man ought not to be disqualified, as he was by the provision agreed on in conference, from being a public representative of the wage board because he might theretofore have been an officer or member of a labor organization or an officer of a carrier. I also advised that representatives of the employees on the wage board should not be required, as they were in effect by the provision agreed on in conference, to give up honorary membership in their labor organizations. I also advised that there be added to the standards provided in the provision which the conference had agreed to for testing the reasonableness of wages the further standard of correcting inequalities due to former wage orders and adjustments.

I requested our division of law to take the provision as agreed on by the conference and to make such changes therein as would be necessary to express the changes in detail which I above suggested, and I submitted this revised draft of the provision as agreed on in conference to the conference committee.

I think I should add that the draft of these labor provisions as it came to me provided that a dispute could be taken up by the adjustment board under several alternative conditions, which included, among others, a written petition signed by 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute.

I think it important thus to make it clear that the fundamental principles of the labor provisions are the principles agreed on by the conference committee, and that my action was simply to suggest changes in detail which, in my opinion, would make the principles already adopted by the conference committee more workable than they would otherwise be. Copies of my letters on this subject to the representatives of the conference committee are attached.

Sincerely, yours,
WALKER D. HINES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That letter was sent to the gentleman, and he was asked to read it to the House but did not do so. [In fairness to the gentleman from Kentucky in revising these remarks I desire to insert at this point that he has since informed me he had not then received the letter.] I am not going into the other questions raised there at that caucus. I think it was not called properly. It was the last-ditch effort of all the forces who opposed this bill to join together to defeat this railroad legislation and bring about a chaotic condition that would foist Government ownership or Government control upon the people of this country against their will.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report embraces the legislation by which it is proposed to return the railroads to private operation under such terms as to make transportation a success.

It is constructive legislation. Whatever criticism may be directed against it, whatever faults may be attributed to it by those who may oppose it, everyone must concede that it recognizes that we have a real railroad problem and offers a solution. The bill as agreed upon by the conferees proceeds upon the assumption that transportation is a necessity, that it is a public function, that it is the duty of the Government to see that it does properly function, that this duty not only requires restrictive provisions by which the public is protected from any imposition on the part of the carriers but also requires provisions which shall foster and encourage the business of transportation by the quasi-public corporations.

The restrictive features fix the rates that may be charged; control the practices and regulations that may be made effective; prescribe in great detail and with minute exaction how the roads must be financed, the manner in which securities may be issued, and the way in which the capital shall be expanded. Consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission must be obtained to construct new lines of railroad, to extend the old lines, or to acquire or operate any line. No line or part of line can be abandoned without the consent of the commission. The railroad may be required to furnish facilities for transportation, and if it does not possess them to provide itself with adequate facilities to properly serve the public. It must distribute cars in the manner prescribed by the commission. It must permit other roads to use its terminals when directed by the commission to do so. These instances are merely illustrative of the restrictive regulations by which complete control is given to the Government over the instruments of transportation, and, indeed, over the owners of the instruments themselves.

Having given to the Interstate Commerce Commission the fullest authority to supervise the charges that shall be made and to determine the manner in which capital may be secured, and having granted to the commission the power to fix rates we have determined as a legislative policy that the roads in any given rate group considered as a whole, which are honestly, efficiently, and economically managed, shall have such rates as will yield a fair return on the property value. For a period of two years this is fixed as nearly as may be at 5½ per cent. This function of the commission does not differ materially from the function already exercised by the commission, except that the bill adopts the 5½ per cent for two years as a matter of legislative policy rather than leaving it to the commission.

The clearest illustration of attempting to meet the railroad problem in a constructive way is found in the provision for a recapture by the Government, to be used for transportation purposes, of one-half the amount earned by any road above 6 per cent. Where you have two competing roads between two shipping points these roads of necessity must charge the same rate, otherwise the road charging the lesser rate would get all the traffic. Yet a rate fixed for the carriage of freight between those points might yield an unconscionably large return to one road, which by reason of a better route, roadbed, or other similar causes was able to operate at less cost, and yet the yield for the other road might not be large enough to even approach a fair return. This is the problem of the strong and the weak road, and that has been called by many students of the subject the real railroad problem.

I have reluctantly yielded to this doctrine of recaptured earnings. I do not believe in it at all upon principle, but its use in this case affords an apparent solution of the most perplexing question connected with the regulation of transportation.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is too important, its effect upon the happiness and prosperity of our Nation too great, for any petty political consideration. It is no time for the play of partisanship. We on the Republican side of the House joined you on the Democratic side of the House in turning over these properties of the value of eighteen or twenty billion dollars to the President that they might be devoted to the one and single purpose of winning the war. We were united then in that crisis. We are now in the aftermath of that war and the reconstruction crisis is at hand. Our country's happiness is as much at stake as it was on April 6, 1917.

The settlement of the great areas of our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Dominion to the Gulf has been determined year after year and decade after decade by the location of the lines of transportation, until to-day they form a network of arteries through which courses the lifeblood of the Republic. Our transportation system unites the areas underlain with great beds of coal with the ore deposits of other sections. Its magic touch brings the tropical fruits of the Pacific coast and the sunny South into every village and hamlet in the land. It translates the great forests into the houses that dot the treeless prairies and make solid the long line of residences in the densely populated cities and towns. It winds through the coal fields and before many hours have passed lighted fires bring the welcome glow to many hearthstones in far distant parts of the land. It makes possible the varied and manifold activities of our industrial, business, and social world.

We have one-third of the railroads in the world; we have the cheapest transportation on earth; we have the best service and most efficiently managed railroads anywhere. It has been built up under governmental regulation, by private initiative, skill, and industry. We shall to-day give sway to American genius that will bring up our transportation to its highest point of efficiency and sustain it in all its vigor. [Applause.]

Those who are opposed to Government ownership and want private ownership to be inaugurated and do not want to bring about chaos should vote for this conference report. And it does not matter that there are some people who claim that they are labor leaders in this country, who still claim that we ought to have Government ownership and would direct us otherwise. The time has come when the rights of all of the 110,000,000 people of this country must be put above the rights of any class, and, so far as I am concerned and so far as my influence is concerned, I shall be for the course that will finally bring happiness and prosperity to all of our people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this conference report, but in doing so I shall state very frankly that there are some of its provisions which I do not approve, and if the bill were before us for amendment I would do my best to seek to amend it in some particulars. In the limited time which I have at my disposal I shall not attempt to point out these provisions to which I object.

This railroad legislation is a very comprehensive measure and deals with many different phases of the transportation problem, and it would hardly be expected that a Member would find himself in accord and agreement with every provision of a bill which is so wide in its scope. To my way of thinking, it does, however, contain legislation which will be of such constructive and lasting benefit to the country, and is so badly needed, that I feel fully justified in supporting the conference report, notwithstanding there are some parts of it which I do not approve. We have been importuned with great vigor from certain sources to extend the period of Government control for a period of two years, but that would involve a responsibility which I think any Member might well consider before committing himself to such a program. I have no doubt that some Members have hastily replied to solicitations requesting them to favor a two-year extension, agreeing to do so without fully considering what such a course would involve.

I think it is generally admitted by every well-posted man that the minimum needs of the railroads for the next two years in the way of new capital investment will be $2,000,000,000. They must have that if they anywhere near meet the needs of the commerce of the country, and it must be provided by borrowed money. If they remain in the hands of the Government, then the Government must furnish this $2,000,000,000 to the railroads in the way of loans, and to do it it will have to issue its own bonds. Are you gentlemen who are in favor of a two-year extension of the period of Government control willing to vote to issue these bonds to get money to loan the railroads? If you are not, then you should meet the responsibility which is upon you by voting to turn them back to their owners, so that they may finance themselves by private borrowing.

If a Member favors Government ownership of railroads, then I concede that it is perfectly logical for him to favor a further extension of the period of Government control, with the various financial complications which it will involve; but if he does not, then it seems to me to be the logical thing to do to vote to turn them back, so that the Government may be relieved from the continual necessity of digging down into the Public Treasury to get funds to advance to the railroads. I am not one who believes that this bill will solve all the railroad problems. No man in the world is wise enough to write a bill that will do that; but Congress meets every year, and there will be nothing to hinder us from dealing adequately with any subject matter which may arise in the future. It is only by the practical experience with a law that we are able to appraise its real value and learn its defects. So it will be with this bill.

INTERESTS TO BE CONSIDERED IN ENACTING LEGISLATION OF THIS KIND.

The railroads are one of our basic industries and involve the rights of widely separated interests, and all of which are entitled to fair and honest treatment. First of all, there are the employees, which number about 2,000,000, and which have every right to honest treatment. Second, there is the management, whose executive ability, if properly exercised, will be responsible for the honest, efficient, and economical conduct of the transportation systems, and which management is sometimes composed of men who are part owners of the property and sometimes it is not. Third, there are the stockholders and bondholders of the roads, whose capital has been responsible for the roads' construction, and which has given us the best railroad system in the world. These investors range all the way from the man who has accumulated a few dollars and invested them in this manner up to the large banks and trust companies and insurance companies, which have very large amounts involved. Fourth, and then last of all but not least of all, is the public, which pays the bills, and without whose patronage the roads would son become a streak of rust and the employees find themselves without a job.

Have all these interests received fair consideration in this bill? I think that question can be safely answered in the affirmative. I have seen statements coming from sources like Labor, published by the Plumb Plan League, and from some of the labor leaders, stating that this conference report was written at the dictation of Wall Street interests, and such other rash and intemperate statements of that kind. Now, I do not always find myself in agreement on public questions with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who is the chairman of this committee and in charge of the conference report, but no one could make me believe that he agreed to a conference report at the dictation of Wall Street or any other special interest, or that he was neglectful or indifferent to the lawful rights of labor or the public. I can say the same about the other members of the conference committee. There is a difference of opinion among them, just as there is a difference of opinion in the House, but I would hate to believe that these differences of opinion were inspired by unworthy and corrupt motives on either side instead of a lively consideration for the public good. I do not believe it.

Now, first, I will discuss this bill as to its labor provisions. I believe that the first legitimate charge on any industry is a fair and just wage to its employees. I would not vote for any bill which I thought would impair the rights of labor in securing this fair and just wage. I am quite well aware that some labor leaders will be loath to credit me with these motives, because I do not dance every time they play the fiddle, but I have long since ceased to be disturbed by criticism, and if I satisfy my own conscience as to what is right in a given matter of legislation I am very willing to let the political consequences take care of themselves. I have but one constituency to whom I account, and that is the constituency of the first congressional district of Texas, whom I have the honor to represent in this great legislative body.

In my judgment, the establishment of the labor board which is created by this bill will go a long way toward solving labor difficulties in a constructive manner. I shall not undertake to analyze the details set out in the bill which creates this labor board. Suffice it to say that it provides for equal representation to labor, to railroad owners, and to the public. I am one who earnestly believes in the value of organization among laboring men, just as I believe in its value in the business world; but at the same time, just as I believe that some limitations and restrictions must be thrown around organizations of capital in the public interest, so do I believe that organizations of labor must be under some measure of public control.

This labor provision gives recognition to that principle, and unless I very erroneously appraise its value, it will serve just as useful purpose in securing and protecting the just rights of labor as it will the rights of capital and the public. I especially indorse that provision of the labor section which says:

In determining the justness and reasonableness of such wages and salaries or working conditions the board shall, so far as applicable, take into consideration, among other relevant circumstances:
1. The scale of wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries.
2. The relation between wages and the cost of living.
3. The hazards of the employment.
4. The training and skill required.
5. The degree of responsibility.
6. The character and regularity of the employment, and
7. Inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment, the result of previous orders or adjustments.

These provisions will insure a square deal to labor. Labor has a right to demand that. It has no right to demand more.

RULE OF RATE MAKING.

Mr. Speaker, I next want to discuss briefly that provision of the bill which introduces a definite and plain rule of rate making, and which has been frequently, erroneously, and unfairly referred to as a guaranty of earnings to the railroads. In my opinion, this is one of the best and most constructive provisions of the bill, and one which will do more to solve the difficulties of the railroad situation than any other.

In the first place, it is not in any sense a guaranty of earnings to any railroad. A Government guaranty of 5½ per cent would mean an attempt to assure a given income independently of rates, instead of assuring adequate rates subject to a limit of income. This bill does not assure or guarantee any railroad any specified earnings. It simply directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant a rate on the aggregate value of the roads which will, as nearly as may be, yield 5½ per cent to railroads which are honestly, efficiently, and economically managed. Is there anything unfair or unjust about that? I do not think so, and, in my judgment, anything less than that would not only be unfair and unjust, but would be a shortsighted policy in the caring for the public interest. Capital can not be conscripted to invest in any given industry, and unless it is given a reasonable assurance of protection it simply will not invest, and the particular industry involved must of necessity deteriorate and drift to bankruptcy.

Now, what is the situation as to the railroads? Of the 162 railroads or systems, 109 operate under conditions coming under the head of "less favorably situated." These 109 roads have a total mileage of 120,755, and serve double the area of territory served by the 53 remaining roads. You can not make a railroad rate for each railroad. You can not adjust rates to where they would barely meet the requirements of the 53 large roads without starving the less favorably located roads, but which are just as useful and essential to the territory which they serve as the stronger and more wealthy roads.

Anybody who has given any study to the railroad problem and knows anything at all about it knows that this is one of the big problems which are involved. It can only be met in three ways:

First. By the method provided in this bill, of directing uniform rates over a given territory which will yield in the aggregate as nearly as may be 5½ per cent on the value of all the roads in such territory, and provide that a part of the earnings of any road in excess of such stipulated return shall be recaptured for public use and be placed into a revolving contingent fund to be administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the benefit of the public in extending and improving transportation facilities.

Second. By requiring Federal incorporation of all the railroads and compelling their consolidation into a few great systems.

Third. By Government ownership, with all the complications which it would involve.

I am strictly opposed to the last two methods of dealing with the problem, and therefore I favor the first, which is the one which this bill provides, and which, I think, will be fair to capital, labor, and the public. It does not in any sense commit the Government to any sort of guarantee.

CONCLUSION.

I am also earnestly in favor of those provisions of the bill which will give the Interstate Commerce Commission full power to regulate bonds and securities issued by carriers in the future. This is a measure of protection which the public long has needed and which should have been enacted years ago. If it had been, we would have been saved scandals of watered stocks, which have done so much to discredit the railroads in the eyes of the public.

I shall not go into details as to this provision, but will simply say that it is one of the longest steps that has ever been taken by Congress in the protection of the public from exploitation of dishonest and fraudulent promoters.

It will work no injustice to any honest and well-managed railroad. No other kind is entitled to any consideration at the hands of the public. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman from Wisconsin left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 45 minutes remaining.

Mr. SIMS. How much have I left?

The SPEAKER. Fifty-five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts use some of his time now?

Mr. WINSLOW. We are willing to. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I realize in the brief time allotted me I can not make any extended argument on this great question that we are now about to pass on, but I am opposed to Government ownership of railroads. [Applause.]

The question to-day as I see it is whether we will adopt this report and return the railroads to their private owners, or defeat it and continue Government operation and ownership of them. Mr. Gompers, Mr. Morrison, and the American Federation of Labor have publicly announced in the press that they will defeat for reelection any Member of Congress who does not vote as they direct, so I am fully aware that my vote on this measure may be my political undoing, but after mature and sincere consideration I have reached the conclusion that the welfare of my district, my State, and my country will be best subserved by these common carriers being returned to their private owners, and I am going to vote for the bill, and if it retires me to private life you will hear no complaint from me. I will have the satisfaction and consciousness of having fearlessly performed my duty as I see it, and this to me is worth more than any office in all the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this bill in many respects does not meet my approval, but it represents the best efforts of some of the ablest men in Congress, who, after months of labor, have agreed to this report. I especially dislike some of the provisions which interfere with the various State railway commissions in the management of intrastate rates, but all police powers are reserved to the States, and when this report is adopted and the roads returned to their private owners, Congress, which is continuously in session, can amend the statute in this respect and correct this and all other inequities and injustices which appear in the bill. I will gladly support a bill repealing any provisions of this report which prove to be unfair to the public. The valuation of the railroads of the United States has been variously estimated at from $19,000,000,000 to $24,000,000,000. This great sum is owned by life insurance companies, savings banks, guardians and trustees of orphans, and by hundreds of thousands of men and women of the land, who have invested their savings in them. If the roads are returned without legislation, many of them will go into bankruptcy, causing life insurance companies, having out millions of policies purchased to protect loved ones, to become insolvent, rendering the policies worthless; a number of banks and thousands of individuals to become bankrupt, thus creating a panic the like of which will be without a parallel. In great financial panics every citizen is affected, whether rich or poor, and with the world in its present unsettled condition it is folly for Congress to pass any law that would cause financial distress to millions of our people.

I would not vote for any bill that, in my judgment, was unjust or unfair to the employees of railroads, for some of the finest men I know, some of the best friends I have, and some of my stanchest supporters in the past have been employees of railroads, and I dislike to disagree with those friends; but, in my judgment, in this conference report there is nothing in the world that is unfair to them. [Applause.] They object to the labor provisions of the bill because the public has representation on the labor board. Now, what are the labor provisions of this bill? It authorizes the respective railroads and their employees to create adjustment boards and other machinery whereby they themselves can seek to settle and adjust their differences. If they succeed, well and good. The bill also creates a labor board, consisting of nine members, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, each member of the board to be paid a salary of $10,000 per year, three of the nine members of the board to be selected by the President out of a list of six furnished him by the labor organizations, said three members being representatives of labor; three to be appointed from a list of six furnished by the railroad operators, said three to be representatives of the railroad owners; and three members to be selected by the President, representing the public.

Should controversies arise and the employees and railroad operators be unable to adjust their differences as to wages, working conditions, and so forth, this board is empowered to act as an appeal board, to summon witnesses, require the production of books, papers, and so forth, and to give both sides a fair and impartial hearing, and to make their finding, just as courts do in litigated cases. Under the terms of the law no finding of the board shall be binding unless one member of the board representing the public agrees to the report. When this board makes its finding there is no penalty or power to enforce compliance with its decision except public opinion. The extreme penalty is for the board to give publicity to the facts in the controversy and acquaint the public with the evidence in the case. Surely the employees of the railroads can have no reasonable objection to the public knowing the facts in any unadjustable controversy, for the public is vitally interested. Some railroad employees have told me their only objection to the conference report was the public having representation on the labor board; but, in my opinion, the public is entitled to first consideration, for they are the ones who suffer the inconveniences, sustain financial losses, and bear the ills of industrial unrest caused by strikes and the failure of the common carriers to function.

I am opposed to any autocracy that seeks to dictate class legislation for selfish purposes, whether that autocracy be capitalists or the American Federation of Labor. I believe the paramount duty of legislators is to legislate in the interests of all the people and not for any particular class. Capitalists are not required to invest their money in railroads, but if they do so the Governments, Federal and State, say the public's interest in transportation is supreme; therefore governments regulate how the railroads shall be operated, the charges the owners can collect for carrying passengers and freight, the number of trains they shall operate, how they shall be operated, the number of sidetracks they shall build, the number of depots they shall erect, and generally controls the business of the carrier in the interest of the public. I am happy to say there can be no involuntary servitude in America, except for punishment of crime, and no free citizen is compelled to work for common carriers; but if he voluntarily elects to so work, he does so with knowledge that the public is interested in the carriers' functioning, and he, as well as capital, should realize that the public has the paramount interest in the railroad transportation of the land.

The labor provisions of this bill work no hardship either upon the owners or employees of the railroads, but I hope its machinery may result in some good, in adjusting differences between the operators and employees, and thereby prove of great benefit to the public at large. There is no injustice to labor in this provision, and a careful study of it will so demonstrate, and a majority of the fair-minded men who are employed by railroads, when the roads have been returned to their owners, will agree in that opinion, but until the roads are returned the railroad employees will find fault with and oppose any legislation that provides for their return, for they are determined to force Government ownership, or the Plumb plan, and I am equally determined to do what I can to return the roads to their private owners. In corroboration of my statement that the American Federation of Labor will fight any legislation proposing to return the railroads to their owners, I quote from a letter addressed to me, dated Washington, D. C., February 17, 1920, and signed by B. M. Jewell, acting president of the railway employees department of the American Federation of Labor, as follows:

> Allow me, in behalf of the more than 2,000,000 railway employees in the United States, to present for your consideration their reasons why railroads should not be returned to private ownership.
> We therefore ask you to oppose any legislation that is intended to return the railroads at this time.

[Applause.]

The war with Germany ended at the signing of the armistice November 11, 1918, but we are still technically at war. I long for our country to be literally and technically at peace with all the world, and I have made up my mind to vote for any fair measures repealing all the extraordinary, drastic war measures enacted while we were at war. This bill repeals one of them and it has my support. [Applause.]

There is one other feature of the report that I shall discuss. Those opposing the bill have had much to say about the guaranty of returns to the owners of railroads for two years. There is no such guaranty in the bill.

The only guaranty by the Government is that the wages of the employees shall not be reduced before the 1st of next September, and the present guaranty of standard returns, which the Government is now guaranteeing and paying to the railroads, is continued for six months. Under Government operation the roads are losing a million dollars per day, and as long as the Government holds them this deficit is guaranteed to the roads to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. I think it is clearly in the interest of the taxpayers to limit this guaranty to six months and then close the door of the Treasury to the railroads rather than to continue to hold the roads and continue the guaranty indefinitely, for the longer the Government holds them the greater the burdens the taxpayers will have to bear. Government operation has proved expensive, inefficient, and highly unsatisfactory to the traveling public, to shippers of freight, and the owners of the roads. The railroads are in worse physical condition than when the Government took them over. From good authority I am informed that under normal conditions the railroads of the country require 2,000,000 tons of steel rails per year to keep the roads in first-class condition, while during the two years of Government control only 200,000 tons have been used; under private ownership a hundred million crossties were used annually, but under Federal control only 50,000,000 have been purchased; during the four years prior to Federal control the railroads built annually 100,000 freight cars, while during Federal control only 50,000 have been purchased; under private ownership 3,000 locomotives were built per year, and under Federal control 1,000 per year have been constructed. During Government operation the physical property, rolling stock, and engines of the roads have not kept up with the needs of the public, notwithstanding the fact that since Government operation there has been appropriated out of the Federal Treasury $1,250,000,000 to be used in betterment of railroads.

Director General Hines, of the Railroad Administration, says that the Government now owes the various railroads, under existing guaranties of standard returns, $636,000,000, which will have to be paid this year out of the Federal Treasury. Thus for the two years that the Government has operated the railroads the people of the United States have been taxed $1,886,000,000 for the use of the Railroad Administration, and I do not believe the people have received service commensurate with this colossal expenditure.

It is estimated that in the next few years the roads will require $1,000,000,000 yearly for betterment and repairs; and if the Government retains them, this sum will be paid or advanced out of the Treasury, to be collected from the taxpayers, who are already overburdened with taxation. Under these conditions, I think it is of supreme importance that this conference report be adopted and the roads returned to private owners. I am sure it will be best for the taxpayers of the land, for when they are returned the Government will not be called upon to make additional appropriations, and taxes should be lowered. But it is said this conference report guarantees a fixed return of 6 per cent on the money invested in railroads for the period of two years. I again assert there is no such guaranty. The contention is made that the rate section of the bill gives such a guaranty. I quote the provision:

> SEC. 422. * * * (2) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall initiate, modify, establish, or adjust such rates so that carriers as a whole (or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) will, under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation: Provided, That the commission shall have reasonable latitude to modify or adjust any particular rate which it may find to be unjust or unreasonable and to prescribe different rates for different sections of the country.
> (3) The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon, and such percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission. In making such determination it shall give due consideration, among other things, to the transportation needs of the country and the necessity (under honest, efficient, and economical management of existing transportation facilities) of enlarging such facilities in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation: Provided, That during the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision, in whole or in part, for improvements, betterments, or equipment which, according to the accounting system prescribed by the commission, are chargeable to capital account.

Under this provision the Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to group the various railroads of the United States into different zones. The commission is then to ascertain the actual value of the railroad properties in each zone, after eliminating all watered stock, and when the actual value of the property is ascertained the commission is to fix passenger and freight rates for each respective zone that will, with honest, economical, and efficient management, yield in revenue to the roads of the zone 5½ per cent. The Treasury of the United States guarantees nothing under this provision, nor is there any guaranty to any particular road that it will receive any fixed income. Under this proviso if a road makes 5½ per cent it keeps it; if it makes only 2 per cent, that is all it gets.

Some roads, notably in the South and West, under this provision will barely make enough to keep them out of the hands of receivers, while other roads in industrial centers and in the thickly populated sections of the country will make a much larger income than 5½ per cent. Therefore any rate that will let the railroads operate in the undeveloped sections of the country is too great a rate for those sections where there is great commerce. Hence the conferees in this bill propose to take from all roads half of their profits in excess of 6 per cent and give such excess to the United States to be used as a revolving fund by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be employed to stimulate the transportation system elsewhere throughout the United States. [Applause.]

Under the decision of the courts of our land no property can be confiscated, and the courts have held that while the Government has a right to fix rates of transportation in the interest of the public, they must fix such rates as will yield a fair return on the money invested to the owners of the common carriers. Any rate which does not do this is declared void by the courts of the land. The leading case which enunciates this doctrine is the case of Smyth against Ames, One hundred and sixty-ninth United States, and again, in the case of Budd against New York, One hundred and forty-third United States, the court held:

> While in the interest of the public the Government can fix rates for common carriers, this power does not give the Government the right to destroy nor compel service from the carriers without giving them reasonable compensation.

In my judgment, the public is vitally interested in having an efficient system of transportation. The Seaboard Air Line; the Central of Georgia; the Georgia Southern & Florida; the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic; the Georgia, Alabama & Florida; the Hawkinsville & Florida Southern; the Albany & Northern; and the Ocilla Southern are the carriers operating in my district. Some of them are barely earning enough to keep out of the hands of receivers. If they are thrown back to their owners without legislation, a number of them will probably be junked and my people left high and dry without railroad facilities. My constituents are entitled to a system of railway transportation commensurate with their needs just as much as the great cities of New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia are entitled to it. It is essential to the public welfare that we have an efficient system of transportation functioning throughout the whole of the United States. Without transportation the farmers' crops in the fields would rot and go to waste, men, women, and children in the cities would die of starvation and freeze for want of clothing and fuel, industrial plants for want of coal would cease to operate and millions of people would be thrown out of employment, and our happy and prosperous land would be turned to one of distress and poverty. In my judgment, this conference report will insure such a system of transportation, continue the happiness and prosperity of our people, and I am going to vote for it. [Applause.]

In conclusion, I wish to say that I am paired with my good friend the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. FORDNEY, who is called home on account of the critical illness of his daughter. When we paired he stated to me that he favored this bill, and that I would be at liberty to vote for it, because if he were here he would vote for it. Therefore I shall disregard my pair and vote. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I regret exceedingly that I can not follow the chairman of the committee [Mr. ESCH] and the other conferees in their views upon this conference report. I think the country is indebted to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and to the other conferees on the part of the House for the conscientious and able services they have rendered in doing the very best they could to save the provisions of the House bill and report back an agreement that would meet the approval of the House. They had a most difficult task.

Of course, I take it that I am not in the position that the members of the conference committee are. I do not feel the same obligation to change my views, when I have positive convictions, as perhaps they do.

Before I proceed to discuss my objections to the conference report I want to make this statement in order that I may not be misunderstood. I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] in his broad statement as to what it means to oppose this conference report. I want to say that I never have been, and am not now, and so far as I can tell I will not be in favor of the Plumb plan or any part of it. I do not think it is American. I think it is really a soviet plan labeled with an American name, and therefore I do not approve of it at all.

Not only that, but I want to say that there is not a man in this House who is more bitterly opposed to the Government ownership or operation of the railroads than I am. Why, gentlemen, when the railroad-control bill was before the House I could see in it such a tendency toward Government ownership and was so bitterly opposed to that policy that I was one of two Republicans and two Democrats only in this whole House who stood up and voted against it. I am opposed to the Government ownership of railroads or any other business institutions. Let me tell you briefly just what this operation of the railroads by the Government has meant to the country. We have lost in operating expenses alone $854,423,434. In the last two months, since January 1, we have lost $207,646,434 in operating the roads, over $100,000,000 a month actual losses in operation. I think the railroads should have been returned to their owners long before now.

We have loaned and advanced to the railroads, or, rather, the railroads owe the Government, $938,615,551, which will have to be funded, and there are other investments made by the Railroad Administration in Liberty bonds, and so forth, on account of the operation of the railroads, of $93,283,900. So that adding these advancements and loans to the actual loss in operation it makes a grand total of $1,886,322,885 which the people now have invested in the railroads. Counting the $200,000,000 carried in this bill with what we have already appropriated makes the total appropriations for the railroads amount to $1,450,000,000. Deducting this from the amount already expended, $1,886,322,885, leaves a deficit of $436,322,885 which this Congress is going to be called upon soon to appropriate to finish up the debts of Government operation.

Not only that, but this bill authorizes the appropriation of $300,000,000 to loan to the railroads in the next two years, and a great deal more than that amount will be required before the time is up to supply their demands.

Not only that, but we are guaranteeing the standard return for another six months. My judgment is that if the losses in operation continue as they have in the last two months we will have actually lost in the operation of the railroads more than $1,250,000,000 before the guaranty period has expired.

I have not the slightest doubt that before the loan period of 26 months is over the railroads will owe the Government for loans and advancements as much as $1,750,000,000. So I figure that Uncle Sam will have $3,000,000,000 invested in the railroads, and not over $1,250,000,000 of it will ever come back, if that much.

So any man who is opposed to the immediate return of the railroads to their owners, in my judgment is not only using bad judgment but he is not thinking of the best interests of the Government or the people.

My respect for the good opinion of the Members of the House and of others who have made a study of this question prompts me to point out two or three unfortunate provisions in this bill and to state briefly my objections to them.

As a member of the committee that has had charge of the railroad bill, I have given the subject the best study I could since the hearings began in July and have reached certain conclusions in which I am positive and conscientious.

When the Esch bill was reported from our committee it contained a rule of rate making. In substance it directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to so adjust rates in the different rate-making districts of the country as to allow the railroads in the respective districts as a whole a fair return on their aggregate properties devoted to the public service, after making due provision for all proper costs of maintenance, operation, taxes, and depreciation.

To that the owners of the railroads are, I think, justly entitled. That far it is not only proper but under present conditions necessary to go in in order to secure the necessary capital to rehabilitate and improve the transportation systems of the country.

But the House struck that provision out of the bill entirely and left it without any legislative rule or mandate to the commission for making rates. It was done over my protest. In addressing the House on that question I stated that if the House struck out the rule of rate making it would be striking the heart out of the bill as a constructive measure.

Now, the conferees have reported this bill with a rule of rate making that goes far beyond the provision of the original Esch bill, and consists of section 6 of the Cummins bill with slight modifications.

I am opposed to any guaranty by the Government of any particular return or income on private capital invested in any industry. I do not think it is necessary or wise. There are so many intricate questions of railroad valuation, railroad management, and railroad financing involved that Congress is not in a position to fairly and intelligently determine and fix by legislation the fair return of income on investment of private capital in the railroads of the country.

There is no valid reason why a fair return of capital invested in the railroads in the different rate-making districts of the country should be exactly the same or that it should be exactly the same from year to year. Investments of private capital in other industries or other securities do not yield the same returns in different parts of the country or in different years. People invest their capital in railroad securities just as they do in other industries with full knowledge of the conditions of the business, with the chance of loss and the hope of large returns before them. It is a mistake for the Government to single out investments of private capital in railroads from all other industries of the country and by legislation guarantee a fixed return on such investments without regard to any of the conditions which under natural economic laws determine the returns on all other investments. It is not only unwise but it is dangerous legislation. If we guarantee a fixed return on railroad investments for two years we will thereby blaze the trail and set the precedent for similar legislation by those that follow us. We will later be asked to do so for the years to come, and who knows but that we may be asked to do the same for investments of private capital in telephone and telegraph companies and other public utilities, in coal mines and other industries that are essential to public welfare.

The excuse for a legislative guaranty of income on such other investments may not now be as apparent as for investments in the railroads, but the principle involved is the same. It is paternalism pure and simple. A Congress might be elected that would think 7 per cent a fair return, or public sentiment might change and a Congress be elected that would think 2 per cent a fair return on railroad investments and legislation might be enacted guaranteeing that return. Congress should never attempt by legislation to even up and equalize the incomes arising from investments of private capital. Some investments in railroads have been wise and some unwise. Some railroads have been managed wisely and some unwisely. Some have been fortunate and others unfortunate because of natural conditions. Some have been honestly managed and some dishonestly managed. It is, I think, an unwise and dangerous policy for the Government to undertake by legislation to level up such investments by guaranteeing a fixed return. It is the first step toward socialism, and I am opposed to taking the first step in that direction. [Applause.]

Then, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely opposed to section 312 of the bill. This section provides that the wages of all railroad employees and subordinate officers existing and in force on March 1 shall not be reduced before September, 1920. This in itself is innocent enough. Of course we all know, in fact, that the wages of railroad employees will not be reduced before September 1 next. I do not think they should be reduced before then nor after that time unless conditions of living should materially change. There may, in fact, be good reasons why they should be increased. But I am opposed to any law that purports to fix the wages of any class of employees in any industry. It is unwise and un-American and is another long step in the direction of socialism. The amount of wages that men should receive for their services ought to be determined in all cases by agreement between the employers and the employees. Wages should be determined by economical and industrial and social conditions. This can only be done by agreement between employers and employees. When wages are determined by the legislatures or by the Congress they will be determined by political conditions and considerations. It is a dangerous policy both for the Government and for the employees. [Applause.]

If we pass this bill fixing the wages of railroad employees for the next six months, more than likely we will be asked to fix them for a longer period, and this will be but the beginning of a policy that will again come back to mock us. We will receive demands from all sources for the fixing of wages, and the country should understand that if this law, which fixes the wages of the railroad men for six months, is approved, they may expect legislation in the future that will fix wages for a longer time or increase the wages of the railroad employees if a majority of the Congress should happen to be inclined that way.

On the other hand, the railroad men should understand that if they approve and accept this provision of the bill they may just as likely expect a reduction in wages by law, if public sentiment and a majority of the Congress should happen to be inclined that way. Such legislation is not in the interest of the public or of the railroad employees. As a friend of American workingmen I can not approve it. It is a dangerous precedent. It serves no good purpose in this bill and should not be enacted into law. [Applause.]

Right here I want to pause to say that, in my judgment, this plan here proposed for the adjustment of wage disputes is not workable. I do not think this so-called labor board will have very much to do. When a great wage question is to be adjusted, I think that the men will themselves try to adjust it by agreement with their employers, and if they can not do so they will not submit it to this board. Then what will be the result? The result will be possibly a great nation-wide strike will be threatened. And then the question will come right back to the President and to Congress and we will be asked to again fix the wages by law, in order to avert a strike; and you are setting a precedent for it now by fixing wages for six months in this bill. There is the danger. I am a friend of the railroad men, and I say this is a dangerous law for them and it is a dangerous law for the public.

I am opposed to all of the remainder of section 422 of the bill which contains the various provisions for the recapture or appropriation by the Government of the earnings of railroads over and above 6 per cent and the creation therewith of a general railroad contingent fund, to be used by the commission for transportation purposes, and particularly for aiding the so-called weak railroads. I think this is the most indefensible provision in the entire bill. It can not be justified by any sound principle of railroad economics or by any rule of morals, and in my judgment it clearly violates the fifth amendment to the Constitution by taking private property for public use without just compensation or due process of law.

Now, upon that question I want to say this: I think it is a dangerous precedent to start legislation here recapturing or taking over arbitrarily the excess profits of private capital invested in railroads.

Judge Hughes rendered an opinion to our committee suggesting that that provision of the bill would be absolutely unconstitutional and void. Now, let me put this question to you, which each must answer for himself: When a proposed law is presented to us and we form a conscientious conviction that that law would be contrary to the Constitution of our country, what is our duty? Oh, well, a Member told me a while ago that we have no right to consider our own conscientious objections when we come to a great question of this kind. I do not agree to that. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, states the rule that should guide us very clearly. He says that where a legislator has even a doubt as to the constitutionality of a proposed law, under his oath it is his duty to vote against it.

Then what is our duty when we have a positive conviction that a proposed law is unconstitutional? Must we just lay our convictions aside when we have taken an oath with our hand uplifted to Heaven that we will support and defend the Constitution? I can not do so. I believe this bill authorizes the taking of private property without due process or just compensation. I think Justice Hughes's opinion is sound. While I may not think he is a good politician, I have the highest respect for him as a judge and a lawyer.

Now, if I am anything at all I am a lawyer, at least a country lawyer. I have devoted my life to the study of law, and I believe, as firmly as I believe any legal proposition, that this provision of the bill is contrary to the Constitution of the country and therefore I can not vote for it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is there any difference in effect between this proposed law and the income-tax law?

Mr. DENISON. There is a great deal of difference. The Government has a right to take excess profits by a tax for Government use, but that is only justified, in my judgment, as an extreme measure in time of war, and then the tax must be general and apply to all persons alike. This bill does not provide an excess-profits tax; it is nothing more nor less than the Government arbitrarily putting its strong arm into the earnings of the railroads that happen to have used foresight, that happen to have used good judgment, that happen to have used economy, that happen to have used brains, and happen to have been honest in their management. This bill would penalize a company of that kind, penalize the men and women who have money invested in a company of that kind, take away their earnings that they have made by rates just and reasonable, and put them into a fund—sort of a railroad jackpot—in order that the Government may take it and loan it to the poor roads that have been perhaps dishonestly or improperly or unfortunately managed to help them out. I do not believe that is constitutional, wise, or moral, and I can not vote for it. [Applause.]

Under the law the Interstate Commerce Commission has no power to prescribe any rate for transportation upon any railroad that is not in itself just and reasonable. If any railroad should charge any rate for transportation that is not just and reasonable, it could be made to refund it to the injured shipper. So that it must be assumed that all rates that are filed by the railroads and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission are in themselves just and reasonable. And every railroad company is justly entitled to retain all it can earn for transporting passengers and freight at rates that are in themselves just and reasonable.

Now, railroads can not charge what they may choose for their services. They can only charge such rates as are approved by the Government, acting through the Interstate Commerce Commission, and such rates as are found by the commission to be just and reasonable.

Nor can the railroads determine what traffic they will handle. They are compelled by law to transport all traffic that is presented to them for transportation.

Nor can the railroads determine for themselves what equipment they will furnish for transportation purposes. Under the acts of Congress and the regulations of the State commissions and the laws of the various States the railroads are required to furnish adequate facilities of the latest and best approved type.

Nor can the railroads manage their properties as they would choose. They are compelled by the laws of Congress and of the various States, enacted in pursuance to the police powers thereof, to furnish all manner of safety devices, not only for the safety of the public but of the employees and passengers and the property they are transporting.

So that railroad companies have few rights in connection with the management of their own properties and no opportunity for the profitable employment of the capital they have invested unless, by the use of economy and good judgment in the management and operation of their properties, they can do a large business under the conditions which the Government has prescribed for them. It is unfair to those who have invested their money in the railroads to arbitrarily deprive them of the fruits of their economy and good management. It is wrong in principle for the Government to arbitrarily take from a railroad company any part of its earnings that it has made from rates which are just and reasonable.

This bill does not guarantee to each individual railroad an income of 5½ or 6 per cent, or any income at all. It only guarantees an income of that amount on the aggregate property of all of the railroads in the different districts that is held and used in the service of transportation. So that those who invest in railroads do not know whether they will get any income from their investment or not. At least there is no assurance of that fact from any of the provisions in this bill. On the other hand, the bill does take the excess earnings over and above 6 per cent from each particular railroad. So that if this bill becomes a law, those who will hereafter wish to invest in railroad stocks will know that under no circumstances will the companies be allowed to retain over 6 per cent. In my judgment such a law will destroy the inducement for private capital to invest in railroad securities. It will destroy the inducement for economical management of railroads. It will encourage waste and extravagance in the equipment and management of railroads, and will tend to injure and retard rather than to improve and develop the transportation service of the country.

The earnings of a railroad company from rates that are just and reasonable are the property of the company. The Government has no more right to arbitrarily take its earnings from rates that are just and reasonable than it has to take its physical properties. It can not do so under the fifth amendment of the Constitution without just compensation or due process of law. This bill provides for neither.

These so-called excess earnings are not taken by the levy of an excess-profits tax. That, of course, could be legally done. If that were done, the money would have to be paid into the Treasury of the Government and could be paid out only by an appropriation by Congress, as I have already stated.

They are not taken under the guise of an occupation or a license tax. The railroads are incorporated and operated under the laws of the different States. They are not creatures of the Federal Government. The bill simply authorizes the Government to arbitrarily take over or recapture the excess earnings of the railroads without giving any consideration therefor, and it seems to me that nothing could be plainer than that such a law will be unconstitutional and void.

There are many railroads in this country that have been improvidently built. Others have been extravagantly and wastefully constructed and managed. Others have been exploited, while still others have been built in fortunate parts of the country where population and industries have increased and they have been constructed and managed economically. The result of these divergent conditions has been that there are poor roads and prosperous roads and in the very nature of things this must naturally be so. But the people who invested their capital in the railroads all did so for the same purpose. It was not out of a spirit of patriotism or of charity that capital has been invested in railroads. People make such investments because of the chance and the promise of profits. Some must lose and others must win. But it seems to me wrong in principle for the Government to undertake to make all such investments equally profitable and especially to arbitrarily take the earnings from the prosperous and well-managed roads and use it for the benefit of the exploited, the unfortunate, or the poorly managed roads.

Moreover, I think it is a dangerous precedent. If the Government can arbitrarily take over the profits of the railroads over and above 6 per cent and use them for special purposes, it can take the profits over and above 2 per cent. Upon the same principle the excess earnings of telegraphs and telephones and other public utilities could be taken over. And if this kind of legislation is begun, it will be followed by other legislation of the same kind and, in my judgment, the results of it will come back to mock us. It is another step toward socialism and we should hesitate before we take it.

If the Government begins taking over the excess earnings of the railroads and using them for special purposes, as provided in this bill, it will lead, just as sure as time passes, to Government ownership of the railroads, and in my judgment some of those who have advocated this policy and have forced it into the bill are at heart believers in Government ownership of railroads.

I regret that the conferees on the part of the House found themselves compelled to incorporate such a provision in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I desire to insert here at the close of my remarks a part of the opinion of Judge Hughes on the constitutionality of section 6 of the Cummins bill, which is the same in substance as the provision of this bill that I have just discussed.

JUDGE HUGHES'S OPINION.

It should be observed that this requirement is not made as a condition for the exercise of any franchise granted to the carrier by the Federal Government. It is to be considered in its application to carriers chartered by the States and entitled to engage in interstate commerce on compliance with such regulations as Congress may constitutionally prescribe. Under the doctrine of the recent decision in Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S., 251), the right to engage in the business of transporting passengers, or of ordinary and wholesome commodities, between the States, while subject to appropriate regulation, may not be deemed to be subject to the absolute prohibition of Congress and hence is not to be regarded as a privilege to be granted on any terms Congress may see fit to impose.

Nor is the requirement with respect to "excess" earnings imposed as a condition of the enjoyment of any guaranty as to earnings which has been given by the Federal Government and accepted by the carrier, thus constituting a contract governing the carrier's operations. The carrier still must take its risk of losses. If it be said in a general sense that the provisions as to rates constitute a guaranty of proper and adequate rates, this is no more than the promise of the reasonable exercise of the power of regulation. There is no benefit conferred upon the carriers under the bill which can be regarded as justifying an exaction which otherwise could not be enforced.

Further, the requirement as to the payment of "excess" earnings does not purport to be imposed under the taxing power and in my judgment could not, in its present form, be sustained as a valid tax independently of the power of regulation. It would seem to be clear that the constitutional authority which would be invoked in the enactment of this legislation would be solely the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

The general principles governing the constitutional authority of Congress to regulate interstate commerce are not open to dispute. It is a power to foster, to protect, to conserve; to prescribe the rules by which interstate commerce shall be governed. It unquestionably embraces a broad authority to deal with all phases of transportation in interstate commerce and to govern the instrumentalities of that commerce, including the relation of carriers and their employees, as illustrated by the hours-of-service act, the employers' liability act, and the Adamson Act as to hours and wages. (Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce, 221 U. S., 612; Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S., 1; Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 332.) It is also well settled that the exercise of the power may be in the nature of police regulations. (Lottery Case, 188 U. S., 321; Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S., 46; Caminetti v. United States, 242 U. S., 470.) But in the most extreme applications and under the broadest definitions of this Federal power it has been recognized that it is not an unqualified or arbitrary power. It must be exercised subject to the limitations of the fifth amendment of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the deprivation of any person of liberty or property without due process of law. (Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S., 312, 336; Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Railway Co., 242 U. S., 331, 332; United States v. Cress, 243 U. S., 316, 326.)

The broad legislative discretion of Congress with respect to rates of transportation is thus subject to the limitation that the rates shall not be made so low as to be confiscatory. (Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 332, 349, and cases there cited.) And aside from the imposition of confiscatory rates, the power to regulate does not justify the assertion of arbitrary control, however excellent the motive; that is, an exercise of power not appropriate to the subject. (Adair v. United States, 208 U. S., 161, 178, 180; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. Railway Co., 209 U. S., 108, 118; Southern Pacific Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 433, 444; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., 227 U. S., 88, 91; Hammer v. Dagenhart, 243 U. S., 251, 270, 276; Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 332, 346.) As was said in Wilson v. New (243 U. S., 332, 346, 353), "It is equally certain that where a particular subject is within such authority the extent of regulation depends on the nature and character of the subject and what is appropriate to its regulation."

Having these general considerations in mind, the validity of the provision of the pending bill as to the disposition of so-called "excess" earnings may be considered in the following aspects:

First. On the assumption that the rates as fixed by the commission, under which the "excess" earnings have been realized, are just and reasonable rates.

It is to be borne in mind that rates fixed by competent legislative authority, which are not found to be confiscatory, are presumed to be just and reasonable and that the courts do not interfere with the exercise of the legislative discretion, whether it be exercised directly by Congress or through its subordinate agency in accordance with the standards which Congress fixes (Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S., 352, 433; Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 332, 349).

Section 6 of the bill provides that "rates of transportation shall at all times be just and reasonable." It is provided in section 1 of the bill that rates, fares, and charges in force at the time of the repeal of the Federal-control act of March 21, 1918, shall remain in force until changed by competent authority. It is further provided in section 5 of the bill that schedule of rates, fares, and charges filed with the commission in accordance with the "act to regulate commerce" within 30 days after Federal control ceases shall become effective at the end of four months after they are so filed, with such modifications as may be ordered by the commission, and the commission is required within that time to determine whether they shall be modified "in order to make them fair, just, and reasonable rates for the service to be performed." It is further provided in section 44 of the pending bill, amending section 15 of the "act to regulate commerce," that whenever the commission, after a hearing either on complaint or on its own initiative, shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge whatsoever charged or collected by any carrier is or will be unjust or unreasonable the commission is authorized to determine what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate, fare, or charge to be thereafter observed, and the carrier is prohibited from making any charge which is in conflict with this determination. Thus all the rates fixed and maintained are at all times open to inquiry and the commission has full authority to insist that the rates shall never be more than just and reasonable compensation for the services which the carrier renders. Nor does the bill interfere with the reparation proceedings which may be entertained on the application of persons aggrieved by extortionate charges.

Taking all the provisions of the bill into consideration, it would seem that the rates as fixed and permitted to be charged and collected by the carrier, assuming that the rates are not confiscatory, should be regarded as just and reasonable rates fixed and maintained by competent authority. It is also to be observed that section 6 of the bill, providing for the payment to the Railway Transportation Board of the so-called "excess" earnings, does not provide for a determination that the rates under which the described "excess" has been collected by the carrier were not just and reasonable rates for the services rendered.

If, however, the rates thus fixed, charged, and received by a carrier are to be deemed just and reasonable for the services rendered the carrier is entitled to these receipts as its property, and the taking by the Government of any portion of these receipts (except under a valid tax) for general governmental purposes or for the benefit of other carriers would appear to be a taking of property contrary to the fifth amendment of the Federal Constitution.

Of course, a carrier may be required to render the service involved in its undertaking as a carrier. It may be required to spend whatever money is necessary to make such service prompt and adequate. Its conduct in the performance of that service may be regulated with respect to facilities for transportation, the hours of service of employees, standards of wages, liabilities for injuries, the health and comfort and safety of all persons concerned in the transportation, and the receipt, handling, and delivering of commodities transported, but the requirement of the use of money for the manifold purposes which may be embraced in proper regulation and the protection and conservation of interstate commerce with respect to the carrier are in connection with the performance of the carrier's service. In the present case it must be assumed that the carrier has met all its responsibilities under the law, has given all the required facilities, has observed all regulations as to transportation, employees, passengers, and goods, and has charged the just and reasonable rates established by law, and that the earnings that it has left are the proceeds of its reasonable contracts made in conformity with law.

I do not think that the provision of section 6 as to "excess" earnings can be sustained under the principle of the case of Charlotte, Columbia & Augusta Railroad Co. v. Gibbes (142 U. S., 386), and other similar cases, as to the placing of the expenses of governmental supervision upon the corporations supervised, or under the doctrine of the case of Noble State Bank v. Haskell (219 U. S., 104), relating to an assessment under State law upon State banks for a depositors' guaranty fund, or of the case of Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington (243 U. S., 219), with respect to required contribution for a workman's compensation fund in order to provide compensation for injuries resulting from the hazards of the business. The provision in the pending bill does not relate to the expenses of supervision. It is not an imposition in the nature of an occupation tax or a license tax. The assessment in the Noble State Bank case has been described by the Supreme Court of the United States as being in the nature of an occupation tax upon all banks existing under the laws of the State. (See 243 U. S., 245.) In the Mountain Timber case the contributions for the workmen's compensation fund were required under the general police power of the State and these contributions were levied upon all employers in the described hazardous occupations according to percentages fixed in proportion to the hazards of each group.

The provision of the pending bill is not a tax laid upon all carriers with respect either to gross receipts or net receipts or any other basis for the assessment of a tax, but is simply a requirement of the payment to the Government board of the "excess" earnings of a carrier which the Interstate Commerce Commission determines to be more than a "fair return" upon the value of its property. Such an exaction goes beyond the limits of any decision known to me, and if the rates under which the so-called "excess" earnings are collected by the carrier are to be deemed to be just and reasonable rates, fixed and maintained as such under the authority of law, I am unable to escape the conclusion that the requirement as to the payment of the so-called "excess" earnings of a carrier exceeds the constitutional authority of Congress as applied to carriers not transacting their business under a Federal franchise or contract imposing such a condition.

Second. It will doubtless be insisted, however, that the provision in question should be viewed in another aspect. It may be said that the rates under which the so-called "excess" earnings have been obtained are not to be deemed just and reasonable rates, and while they were charged and collected as such under authority of law, that the fixing of the rates as just and reasonable is only tentative.

The argument will undoubtedly be that the bill requires the division of the country into districts and the carriers into "rate-making groups," and that section 6 requires the commission to take a comprehensive view of the rate-making group and that the level of rates is to be determined with reasonable reference to average conditions. In viewing rates from the standpoint of their effect in producing revenue in any rate-making group as a whole, the commission is directed to take into consideration the interest of the public, the shippers, the wages of labor, the cost of maintenance and operation (including taxes), a fair return upon the value of the property in the group, and the requirements for additional capital in order to enable the carriers adequately to perform their duties to the public. Hence it will be said that the rates fixed or maintained as just and reasonable for the services in question are fixed with reference to a group of carriers, and that so far as any particular carrier is concerned the finding as to the reasonableness of the rates charged by that carrier must be deemed to be merely a tentative finding. It will thus be contended that what is meant by the provision as to the payment to the Government board of "excess" earnings is that no carrier shall be allowed to receive for its services more than what is subsequently determined by the commission to be a "fair return" upon the value of its property held or used for the service: that all rates allowed are subject in the case of each carrier to this ultimate determination, and that to the extent that the rates produce the "excess" earnings they are to be deemed to be unreasonable. In this view it will be urged that no carrier is to be regarded as deprived of earnings from reasonable rates, but only of the "excess" earnings under the rule of limitation: and that, further, as the amount which the particular carrier is permitted to retain is determined to be a fair return upon the value of its property, it can not be said that there is an abuse of the regulatory power of Congress.

This argument encounters serious objections:

(1) It apparently takes no account of the fact that the individual rates charged by the carrier or the joint rates charged by the carrier in connection with other carriers may have been separately determined, either upon complaint or upon the commission's initiative, to be just and reasonable rates for the services which the particular carrier renders. The provision as to the payment of "excess" earnings appears to apply in every case where "any carrier shall receive from operation in any year more than a fair return, to be determined by the commission, upon the value of its property," even though the particular rates charged have been sustained, upon hearing, as just and reasonable.

It is difficult to understand upon what theory of proper regulation such rates are to be deemed to be unreasonable without any further inquiry as to the conditions of the service or as to matters directly relating to the rates themselves, but solely upon an inquiry with respect to the value of the carrier's property and the amount of the total net earnings derived by the carrier from its operations. The latter may be a legitimate inquiry for a court in determining whether a legislative body or its subordinate agency has transcended its authority in fixing a body of rates so low as to be confiscatory. But it is a different thing thus to conclude that rates which are not confiscatory, and which as individual or joint rates have been expressly found in the case of the particular carrier to be just and reasonable for the services rendered, were in fact not reasonable rates.

(2) Moreover, whether the rates which have produced the so-called "excess" earnings of the carrier have or have not been sustained in proceedings under section 15 of the "act to regulate commerce," as amended, with respect to the individual and joint rates of the particular carrier, the fact remains that the rates charged and collected have been fixed and maintained as just and reasonable rates, and that the bill does not require as a necessary preliminary to the required payment of the "excess" that there should be a finding that the rates were in fact unreasonable rates. The only finding required is that a particular carrier has earned more than the amount which the commission determines to be a "fair return" upon the value of its property held or used for the service.

The argument in support of the provision seems to assume that Congress, under the guise of regulating rates, either directly or through the commission, can abandon the fixing of what are reasonable rates for the services rendered by the carrier, and without any determination that the particular rates or the tariff schedule of a carrier are unreasonable, take the earnings of a carrier simply upon a determination that the carrier has received an "excess" over a "fair return" upon the value of its property.

This would appear to be not a regulation of rates, or of service, but of earnings. I do not understand that it is within the authority conferred upon Congress to regulate interstate commerce to determine how much a carrier not exercising a Federal franchise, or operating under a Federal contract, shall earn in interstate commerce, assuming that the carrier discharges all the public obligations incident to its service and charges reasonable rates. In my view, the regulation of such a carrier must have direct relation to the services it renders, and if the question is of the amount of money it should receive for its service, to the reasonableness of its charges.

(3) Again, if the assumption could be indulged that the finding that a carrier has received more than a "fair return" is to be regarded as tantamount to a finding that the rates which produce the "excess" earnings are unreasonable rates, and that such a finding without an inquiry with respect to the rates themselves, but only as to earnings, could be sustained, there would be a further difficulty.

I lay on one side the question of the propriety of treating rates as being reasonable as to one carrier and as being unreasonable as to another carrier with respect to substantially the same services under similar conditions.

Assuming that it is the intent of the provision that the rates producing the "excess" earnings in the case of a particular carrier are to be deemed to be unreasonable as to that carrier, there is manifestly a question beyond that of the right of that carrier to complain. As I have said, the provision applies to "excess" earnings received under rates, although these may have been sustained as just and reasonable after full hearing in proceedings instituted on the complaint of shippers or on the initiative of the commission itself. The rates as originally fixed may have been sustained and shippers denied reparation. Or the rates as originally fixed may have been modified and the rights of shippers to reparation determined accordingly. Still, notwithstanding the rates are finally fixed and enforced as against shippers, the provision assumes the right to take the "excess" earnings obtained under such established rates on the theory that such rates are to be deemed unreasonable. Manifestly, in such case, the question of the validity of such a provision in the exercise of the regulating power is not exhausted by the mere consideration of what amounts to confiscation of the carrier's property.

Unreasonable rates constitute an unjust exaction from shippers or passengers. The rates maintained by Congress, or under its authority, in the exercise of its power of regulation of interstate commerce, are lawful because deemed to be reasonable, a presumption which the courts entertain, so long as the rates lie within the range of legislative discretion. But if we proceed on the assumption that the rates which are actually charged are extortionate, it would appear to be an abuse of the regulating power of Congress to enforce them. Congress, it may be said, could not, under the guise of regulating interstate commerce, compel shippers or passengers to pay confessedly extortionate charges for the services rendered. On the hypothesis that the charges are unreasonable, the power to authorize them, no less than the power to collect them, falls. The exaction and maintenance of such charges would deprive shippers and passengers of their property without due process of law.

But it may be said that the rates which produce the "excess" earnings are to be regarded as unreasonable only with respect to the carrier under the rule limiting its aggregate earnings, but that at the same time the rates maintained with respect to the persons paying the rates are to be regarded as reasonable as to such persons, and that the reasonableness of the rates with respect to shippers or passengers, although the rates are deemed to be unreasonable with respect to the carrier, may be sustained because they are based on average conditions and because of the use of the "excess" earnings for the benefit of shippers or passengers generally in aiding weak systems of transportation which are public utilities.

I regard this as a fallacy. I do not understand that rates charged by a carrier for the services it renders can properly be regarded as unreasonable with respect to the carrier and at the same time as reasonable with respect to those who pay the rates. The question of the reasonableness of the rates is essentially a question whether the charge made by the carrier and paid by the shipper or passenger for the service rendered is a charge which the shipper or passenger should pay to the carrier and the carrier should receive for that service. If it is established that the rate is a reasonable one for a shipper or passenger to pay, it is the carrier that renders the service for which the rate is to be paid, and it is proper that the carrier lawfully performing the service and furnishing all the required facilities therefor should receive and enjoy the proceeds of the rate thus charged. An attempt to divest the carrier of any portion of its earnings thus obtained, on the theory that the charges which it was reasonable for shippers and passengers to pay for its services it was unreasonable for the carrier to receive and retain would, in my judgment, be outside the scope of appropriate and valid regulation. The mere fact that it is proposed to devote the moneys or property of a carrier or of any other person to good uses can not be regarded as justifying the deprivation of the carrier or such person of the right to enjoy and retain his own property, except as it may be taken for proper governmental purposes through valid taxation or for public use on the payment of just compensation.

For the reasons stated I am constrained to the conclusion that the provision in section 6 of the pending bill as to the payment of "excess" earnings in its application to carriers not operating under a Federal franchise or contract permitting the imposition of such a condition violates the Federal Constitution.

I remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

(Signed) CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY].

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of pleasure and admiration to the manly, courageous statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. [Applause.] It was not surprising to me, however, for I know him to be a man of moral and political courage. There was never a time in the history of this country when we needed more than we need to-day men of that type. I think the time has come when we should vote for these measures on their merit, irrespective of the pressure that may be brought to bear upon us. When principles are involved, men should stick to those principles regardless of political criticism and regardless of the political effect it may have on their future. As for myself, I had rather be thrown into the political scrap heap than to vote against the splendid constructive piece of legislation before the House at this particular time. [Applause.]

I want to say, however, that no undue pressure has been brought to bear upon me from any quarter. Whatever letters and communications I have received in opposition to this bill have been couched in proper language. No effort has been made to intimidate me in any way at all.

The President of the United States has by his proclamation designated March 1, 1920, as the day upon which Federal control of the railroads shall terminate, and these vast properties shall then be returned to their owners for their private operation and control.

Since the assumption of control by the Government the railroads have been, and are now, running at a great loss. Their owners could not now take them back without legislation such as is set forth in this conference report without suffering bankruptcy. Therefore if Congress fails by the end of next week to pass this constructive legislation, and the President does not further extend the time of Federal control and operation, financial ruin and disaster will overtake the roads, and the responsibility will be yours and mine. Are we willing to assume it?

The conference report now before us for our action presents, I believe, a satisfactory solution of the many difficult and grave problems growing out of Federal control. No plan will prove successful unless it makes a provision for adequately financing the roads in order to enable them to get sufficient equipment and to make needed betterments and extensions.

This bill contains such a plan. It tends to safeguard the credits of the roads, to improve their service to the public, to prevent destructive competition, and to correct abuses of the past, and is designed to be fair to the employees, as it should be. The just claims of labor will be taken care of.

We need the facilities of transportation, and the roads must have money to give them; but this money will not be forthcoming unless the public, which is expected to furnish it, is given some assurance of a fair and reasonable return on its investment.

I could not present the case for a return of 5½ or 6 per cent better than to quote from an interview given by Mr. Commissioner Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and printed in the Baltimore Sun of January 28 last. Mr. Clark is the oldest member of the commission in point of service and an authority of the highest standing.

He said, among other things:

It is a matter of common knowledge that the operating expenses of the railroads of the country have increased in much larger proportion than their revenues. The first heavy increase in the wages of the railroad employees was made retroactive for six months or for one-half of the first year of Federal control; whereas the increase in rates was applicable only to the last six months of that year. Putting aside the question of the relationship between the wages and revenues for that year, and considering merely the calendar year just closed, the figures show that the operating ratio has been over 85 per cent. That means that out of every dollar received in revenues 85 cents has been paid out in operating costs, leaving 15 cents to cover taxes, interest on funded debt, and return on other investments. No railroad could operate successfully under such a ratio.

CAN NOT HAVE TWO RATES.

Now that the question comes as to whether we shall have by legislative direction a standard or recognized, reasonable level of rates. That proposition is contained in section 6 of the Senate bill. Our experiences of the past show that for an accumulation of many reasons, including advantageous location, wise administration, and popular management, some of the roads are very prosperous, and others are not, under the same level of rates. The unprosperous roads are important to the communities they serve and could not be abandoned without irreparable injury to many industries in these communities. They can not charge higher rates than the prosperous roads under competition, as that would be the surest way for them not to get business. The great mass of tonnage moves along the line of least resistance in the way of freight rates. Therefore, if increased rates are to be given to the unprosperous roads that need them, they must also be given to the prosperous roads which do not need them.

The only way that the unprosperous roads can be afforded real relief is by fixing a limit on the amount which the more prosperous roads may retain out of their earnings under the established rates. Some say that this is unconstitutional. But I do not see any great difference in principle between that proposal and the policy we have been pursuing in other directions. For example, we have been collecting excess profit taxes on the one hand and lending money in farm loans on the other; or, we have been collecting income taxes graded in percentages according to the size of the individual income.

Moreover, the plan proposed is just what would result if a single corporation or the Government owned all the railroads. The aggregate revenues in that case would be spread over all the properties, although some of them would earn more than the average and some less.

5½ PER CENT NOT EXTRAVAGANT.

A return of 5½ or 6 per cent is certainly not an extravagant one. Figures which we have compiled and presented show that the return from rates in past years of class 1 railroads, which are the railroads having gross revenues in excess of $1,000,000 annually, have reached a trifle over 5 per cent on the book cost of the roads and equipment.

In the meantime the railroads of the country must continue to run under Government regulation. The fact that a plan presents some difficulties is no sound reason to condemn it, if the principles underlying it are right.

My information is that even this rate will be totally insufficient to enable the roads to pay dividends to their stockholders, and the best that can be done with it will be the payment of the interest on their bonded indebtedness. But it will insure the operation of the roads under private ownership and control, and I believe this will prove to be the best thing for the shippers, the employees, and the public generally. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 55 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Tennessee 30 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the Government took the railroads over during the war without any consent on the part of the owners or the men who worked for them and on them. There is no reason, to my mind, now that the war is over, why we should not give them back in the same manner. For 25 years the employers and employees were able to settle their own grievances without interference. It is true the conditions of the roads are such that the railroad owners must be helped in order to get them back into real operation and condition, and on that account I am for the bill so far as that is concerned. I would be for the bill if it went further in recruiting the railroads, but when it undertakes to interfere between the men who work on the railroads and their employers, that is a different thing. You have in this bill a provision that the public shall sit in all cases, and the public must be one of the board making the decisions, yet not one man in this Congress would want the public to come in and settle differences between himself and his personal employees. Some one says, "Oh, well, it is not compulsory." No; it is not compulsory, but everyone knows that a finding made by a board of the character provided for, in which the railroad operators and the public agree, the majority of the board, would be practically compulsory upon the men who work on the roads. There is no question about that. Everyone will agree to that.

When the Esch bill passed the House we had up a lot of amendments. Finally, it was agreed that the Anderson amendment was one that we could all vote for. It passed this House with a great majority. The conferees were appointed after the Senate passed on the bill and they came together. The bill now comes back to us with practically everything the Senate wanted in it and nothing in it as it passed the House. Are we to forego everything and let them decide all those things for us? I am for the Anderson amendment as it was in the Esch bill.

I would be for this entire bill if you would strike out in section 304 paragraph 3, and any other paragraphs where the same provision occurs, which means the public shall interfere in settling the affairs of the employees. I belong to an organization, and, as I said once before on this floor, for 40 years we have been able to settle our own differences between the employers and the employees without the assistance of anyone. If you bring in a third party, or intimate a third party may be brought in, not interested, there will not be any settlement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks part of a letter from Mr. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

GRAND LODGE BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
Cleveland, Ohio, January 12, 1920.

Hon. M. M. GARLAND,
House of Representatives,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am exceedingly glad to receive your communication of the 8th, which is in reply to my letter of the 22d ultimo, in reference to the Anderson amendment of the Esch bill.

I hope, if the opportunity offers, you will make it clear on the floor that many of the locals of the different labor organizations may have written Congressmen or Senators, protesting against the Esch bill, as a result of information given out by the chief executives of their organizations in opposition to the original Esch bill as presented. I do not believe there is a local of either of the four transportation brotherhoods that would protest against the Anderson amendment to the Esch bill, but the Esch bill, as originally drafted, was referred to in special circulars by the undersigned, and our membership told plainly of the unfair principle contained therein. I am of the opinion the protests that you refer to from certain locals come as a result of such information given out prior to the adoption of the Anderson amendment.

Sincerely, yours,

W. G. LEE, President.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the condition of the transportation system of the Nation for some years has been steadily going from bad to worse. At this time, under Government operation, passenger service is very unsatisfactory, while freight transportation is nothing short of lamentable. It is contended this is unavoidable. Nevertheless, such condition exists. It can not be denied that some of the railroads at least, if not all, are largely responsible for the situation which now exists, and yet it can serve no good purpose now to attempt to fix the blame. The intolerable condition is here, and the American people demand it shall, if possible, be remedied.

The conference report provides for a fair, reasonable, just return to the invested capital. No fair-minded man ought to complain at a return of 5½ or 6 per cent. The American people who support the railroads will not complain, but the railroads may as well understand that promptness and efficiency in freight and passenger service must follow. No fair-minded merchant is going to complain if the railroads are permitted to earn 5½ or 6 per cent from the freight rate he is required to pay if he gets prompt delivery. The price of all commodities has advanced. No one expects freight and passenger rates to remain stationary, but those who travel and those who ship and receive freight have a right to expect more efficient service.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind the alternative is presented—take this report of the conferees or make ready for Government ownership. For my part I say, good Lord, deliver this Nation from Government ownership. Almost anything is preferable to Government ownership and Government operation of the railroads. Of course, it is the duty of every Member of this House to vote as if the result depended on that vote. Politics has no place in the consideration of such legislation. I am convinced if the railroads are returned to private ownership on the 1st of March without any legislation, as has been suggested, the most appalling financial disaster of recent years will follow. Almost all agree that some legislation is necessary to prevent a breakdown of the transportation system of the Nation.

To my mind the alternative is presented—take this report or take something infinitely worse. For these and other reasons I shall vote to adopt the report.

Something has been said about Wall Street dictating this report. I have served for 19 years with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH]. When the new moon turns to green cheese, and not until then, will it be within the power of any man to dictate a report that JOHN ESCH writes as a conferee of this body. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, railroad legislation which empowers discriminating rates against inland points, giving advantage to points where land and water meet, can no longer be sustained by the statement that this is necessary to maintain the whole rate-making fabric.

The time has come to build upon the substantial structure of one national, mutual interest. We are proud of California, a great empire within itself. What kind of an empire would it be within itself if cut off by itself from mutual intercourse with all other States? It is the Union which makes that State great, and Nevada contributes her fair share. It is the duty of all the States to see that Nevada, still 90 per cent Government owned, has an even break in freight rates with coast points. We have great deposits of iron, running as high as 64 per cent, lying on the mountain sides, which will not move to market because of this discrimination; immense tonnages of copper which must lie dormant, while adjoining sections move their metals to reduction plants; hides, farm produce, and wool, which could be manufactured there into commercial products only for a discrimination which prevents factories locating within our State. Only a shortsighted policy of temporary sectional advantage stops progress. When will you learn that a rate which encourages development of Nevada will be your greatest source of profit? Nevada paid its portion for the Panama Canal. We oversubscribed our quota of the five Liberty loans by 130 per cent. Eight per cent of our population enlisted and went to war. You gentlemen all realize that freight rates can destroy competition. The great Comstock produced $600,000,000 of silver in Civil War times. Most of that enormous sum went to San Francisco. We of Nevada are proud of that city, which should be willing to vote for a rate enabling us to grow until they will be proud of Nevada. We ship great quantities of wool to Boston. The Pacific coast rate is $20. Our rate, 300 to 500 miles less over the same road in the same train, is just double, or $40. Give Nevada equal opportunity, confidence, and recognition of her honesty and ability to manage her own pursuits. There is wisdom in a course which will build up those inactive resources, turning our State into equal production with Wyoming, Idaho, and Oklahoma. Appealing to eastern men, this legislation can not become law without your sanction. Nevada belongs to New York, Ohio, New England, the Southern States, and the great farming section of the Middle West. You surely intend that it shall have an equal rate with points 500 miles farther away instead of a 100 per cent penalty. Will you, by inattention, vote to continue specific rates against your own lands? Nevada demands equality; only this, and feel that we ask nothing much.

Even California should promote Nevada's welfare. Unless this plan is adopted it means that discrimination will continue holding Nevada to benefit coast States. Rail rates make it impossible for competition upon raw materials and finished goods, the difference being charged against our struggling industries to reimburse "out of pocket cost." Sugar is penalized in the same way. Astute rail managers are only waiting return of those grand properties to further fasten this inequality upon Nevada, which will prevent substantial investments for manufacturing, production, and developing 110,000 miles of almost entirely public domain.

Will not river and harbor points be content with colossal appropriations, stimulating development to an unheard of degree? While Iowa land has gone to $600 per acre, you should make it possible to develop Nevada land now lying neglected and overgrown with sagebrush.

While we are paying our proportion of the appropriations to rivers and harbors, in return we are discriminated against with rates prohibitive to production.

For more than 30 years rails have been permitted to destroy transportation on the great Mississippi, supported by residents there who were willing to wink at this injustice until now they find water transportation is needed. The natural waterways should be developed by rates protecting private investment in boats and terminals.

You gentlemen of the East must look ahead, taking the firm stand of mutual interest which will develop Nevada and inland water transportation.

Regardless of all representations you know there is injustice to charge double for a shorter than for a longer haul of the same commodity upon the same train, appealing to your sense of right and the future of all your country.

Calling your attention to shipping $50 per ton copper ore from a California point on the Western Pacific to the Utah smelters, 680 miles, is $7.80 per ton, while same ore from same point 182 miles to the Wabuska (Nev.) smelter is $10.50—680 miles to Utah is $7.80, 182 miles to Nevada is $10.50.

There is the case, four times farther miles hauled at one-fourth less cost. Thus Nevada enterprise is throttled under the fine phrasing of rate fabrics. These rate situations caused the recent action of States, as North Dakota.

The people of Nevada will not sanction renewal of an injustice so apparent.

Upholding the right of States to determine equality of freight rates as affecting themselves, we do not submit to differential treatment which promotes and builds other sections at our expense.

Your measure promotes not sound business but litigation. Guaranties encourage inefficiency. You have no right to guarantee returns upon any basis of value, and assuming aggregate value of rails, instead of fair present value, makes the error more apparent. Kansas City & Southern, covering 823 miles, scheduled at $104,000,000, Interstate Commerce Commission found reproduction value $48,000,000; considering depreciation, present value fixed at $40,000,000, or 38½ per cent of reported value. The Tonopah & Goldfield Railroad, 113 miles in Nevada, built some 15 years ago and unofficially estimated to have returned its cost net from the first year net operation, reported value $3,700,000; appraised by the Federal commission, reproduction value $2,180,000, present condition value fixed at $1,700,000, or 46 per cent of its reported value.

This measure means double prevailing rates, in and out, upon these lines, and illustrates what will befall the public everywhere. This measure is designed for the railroads and means look out for the cars. Any man or enterprise beware or be run over. Nowhere is transportation by water made possible or even recognized. It is a bill of, for, and by the railroads, wherein Congress authorizes Interstate Commerce Commission to disregard, annul, and set aside State rates and judgments of State courts, legislating an increase of $200,000,000 per annum above the Federal guaranty of $900,000,000 per year, based upon an average July 1, 1914, to June 30, 1917, three largest earning years the railroads ever had. No inducement there for efficient operation. A keen investing public by quotations places a total stock and bond value on all railroads not exceeding $10,000,000,000. Strike out the 5½ per cent provision and strike out the term "aggregate value" and insert "fair present value."

Your $20,000,000,000 estimates are based upon grand totals including duplications and without deductions for depreciation and destructions. Such calculations have no real value for reliable rate making.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. WELLING].

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in every way the most important piece of legislation which has been brought before the Congress since the close of the war. No other measure will be considered by the present Congress which compares with it in its far-reaching consequences upon the business and industry of our country. It has been more talked about in labor circles than any other measure which Congress has considered in a generation.

In order to determine our course in connection with this bill it is important that we should understand the history of railroad development in this country during the past 25 years. On the one hand the roads were exploited by a group of conscienceless speculators who cared little for the ordinary stockholder and nothing at all for a long-suffering public. These men were interested only in their own profits, and they left behind them a trail of watered stock and rusty rails.

In an effort to correct these abuses both the Federal Government and the States enacted laws curtailing the abuses of the speculators and placing many restrictions upon the growth and development of the roads. When the war came the railroads of America had been exploited by speculators on the one hand, and strangled by unwise Federal and State regulation on the other. Our railroads were like a great giant weakened by the avarice and selfishness of a group of remorseless leeches and bloodsuckers intent upon their own profit, and securely shackled by red tape and hampered by Federal and State restrictions. It became increasingly apparent as the war unfolded that the roads could not meet the needs of the Nation in these circumstances. The operators of the roads confessed their inability to meet the war emergency. They accepted the action of the President in taking over the roads during the war as an absolute war necessity. I have heard it said repeatedly that Government operation of the roads has been a dismal failure. I am not so sure that that is in any sense a just conclusion. Government operation has been expensive. No man can deny that. But private operation of the roads had failed—failed when the Nation most needed success. No man of intelligence will contend that the railroads could have succeeded under private management during the war period, without at once being released from the unwise restrictions of a generation of exploitation and mismanagement in the past. To correct those evils cost money. To correct them during the turmoil and strife of war cost vastly more money than it might otherwise have cost. But high as that cost has been, I believe it will be a profitable investment to the American people if it has taught us how to confront and solve this great problem in the public interest at this time.

The pending bill is an effort to meet that requirement. It has occupied the attention of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for a full year. The President had notified the Congress more than a year ago that he intended to turn the roads back to their owners on January 1 last. As that date approached it became perfectly apparent that the legislation making the transfer could not be framed by that time. Yielding to the legislative demand for additional time the President has designated March 1 as the final date of such transfer. The matter must be decided then. This legislation, already too long delayed, must be made operative by that time. Otherwise there will be demoralization and confusion in every conceivable branch of the service.

That demoralization would reflect itself most unhappily upon the public who use the roads, but it would also react with stunning force upon every laborer and every stockholder upon the entire system.

I have been told repeatedly that it was the wise thing politically to vote against this bill. I am not greatly concerned about that, but I have been profoundly anxious to solve the matter in so far as my vote is concerned in the interest of my country and the welfare of the people I represent. Any man who feels that he is at liberty to traffic with this great and vital problem for personal and political gain places himself in an indefensible and a contemptible light before his fellow countrymen. [Applause.] "For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Personally I shall vote upon this bill without regard to the importunity of any man or group of men who may have their own interest to serve. My duty as a representative of my State is to express the enlightened judgment and the public sentiment of my constituents, regardless of how it may affect my personal fortune. I feel doubly fortunate at this time in the profound conviction that their conclusion accords with my own well-settled views.

I have never studied a question before the Congress with more disinterested and fixed concern, and I have come deliberately to the conclusion that this bill offers the only sane and practical solution of the problem thus far presented. What do gentlemen who oppose this legislation propose? Have they a policy to recommend or a plan to be carried out? Do they favor Government ownership of railroads, or do they desire the present indefinite and expensive continuation of Government operation?

Labor has been perfectly frank and honest in its position. It presented the so-called Plumb plan, and has advocated that solution from the beginning. The Plumb plan was considered by the committee and rejected. It would have been rejected by the Congress. Failing in this, the great labor movement now seeks to continue the present system of Government operation for an additional two years. I believe, on the other hand, that the people of my State demand that the roads be returned to private management and control without delay, and I shall vote to bring that about by assisting to pass this legislation. In taking this position I am in no sense antagonistic to the interests of labor. The rights of labor were never so carefully safeguarded before as in this legislation.

We provide here for railroad boards of labor adjustment to be appointed mutually by the carriers and the employees. There can be as many such boards as the necessities of different groups or systems may demand. That gives the carrier and the employee their opportunity to meet and solve their differences without resort to outside interference or control. If these railroad boards of labor adjustment fail, then we have set up in the bill a labor board appointed by the President and paid from the Public Treasury, whose duty it is to pass upon questions of wages and working conditions. This is in effect a great labor court. It has both original and appellate jurisdiction. Composed of a fair proportion of men chosen by labor itself, I am ready to believe it will be just to labor. What more can labor reasonably demand—to be given an opportunity to agree with the carriers by mutual consent or, failing in this, to be heard in a court of its own choosing? It seems to me that in the labor provisions of the bill the committee has been just to labor and treated their problem with notable fairness.

The railroads of to-day are public utilities. They serve all the people, and they serve them in the most vital way. The employees of this great system must be contented and well paid, but they must not be permitted on slight provocation or in time of stress to tie up this vital artery of the commercial life of the people. I believe the committee has performed a notable service to the Congress and to the country in bringing out this measure, and I support it as the most satisfactory and feasible solution of the problem thus far presented for the consideration of Congress upon this subject. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is one thing that I desire to call to the attention of the membership in regard to this measure. The report that comes from the conferees consists of 121 printed pages. The only thing that is left of the Esch bill as it passed the House is the enacting clause. The only thing that is left of the Cummins bill as it passed the Senate is the enacting clause. The conferees wrote an entirely new bill, and that bill, as I say, consists of 121 printed pages. This report was received by the membership of this House last Wednesday evening. You and I have had Thursday and Friday to look into its provisions, and I state that there is not one Member of this House, with possibly the exception of the five conferees, who knows what the report means or what the provisions are. You may know one section, I may know another, but it is a physical and mental impossibility for any Member to say that he understands this report and knows what it means to the American people.

There is no brain so alert, there is no intelligence so quick, there is no diligence so earnest that will enable any man to take this report, technical in its terms, consisting of the volume that it does, and say that he understands and appreciates it in 48 hours; and I say that a grave and manifest injustice is being done to every Member of this House when we are asked to vote for or against it when we can not know what is in it.

I am on the committee that reported the Esch bill. I knew something of its provisions. I have studied this bill as well as I might in the two days that it has been in my possession. I claim to have ordinary intelligence. I know some of the provisions of the bill. You may know some of them. I do not know them all, and you do not know them all, and I doubt whether there is a man in the Senate or the House who can say that he understands to-day what this bill means in its entirety to the American people. It looks as though the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has passed the bill to the House, that the House passed the bill to the Senate, and that the Senate has passed the bill, in order that it might go to conference, and that the conferees have confected a bill, and that you and I must take it, not understanding how it affects 110,000,000 people, not knowing what effect it might have in years to come. The study that I have been able to give to the report convinces me that it is bad, and therefore I am going to vote against it, because the sections that I have studied, the sections that I do understand, convince me that it has not been written in the interest of the 110,000,000 people of America. [Applause.]

In the limited time that I have it is impossible for me to do more than state the main objections that I have to this conference report.

The most sinister feature of it all to me is the obvious purpose of centralizing all power here in Washington, and the total destruction of the powers of the State, heretofore exercised through the State railroad or public utility commissions. The entire trend of legislation in the past few years has been to build up here in Washington great governmental machinery for the control of all the affairs of the people. This, to my mind, is fundamentally vicious. I believe that the closer the governmental authority is to the people the better it is, both for the people and for efficiency in government.

This conference report, in so far as transportation is concerned, absolutely wipes out every State line, nullifies State constitutions, repeals statutes of sovereign States, and robs the State commissions of all of the power that they have heretofore enjoyed under the constitutions, alike of the United States and of their respective States.

Another serious objection to the bill is that it does not provide funds for the operation of the present water transportation equipment owned and controlled by the Government. The conference report seems to hold out the promise of water transportation, and yet effectively strangles it.

The provision of section 422, constituting, as it does, a governmental guaranty of dividends upon private investment, is economically unwise, politically unheard of heretofore, and un-American in that it violates the principle of special privileges to none.

The conference report, by the operation of section 422, makes it obligatory upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to advance rates on freight and passenger traffic, and will further tax the American people from one to two billion dollars per annum, thus adding to the high cost of living and further burdening producer and consumer alike.

The passage of this conference report has been protested by the farmer, the shipper, the producer, and the laborer. Its passage has been urged by a well-organized and powerful lobby here in Washington. Its effect will be beneficial to the few and harmful to the many.

Transportation is vital to the people. I have always believed that rail and water and public road transportation should be coordinated in the working out of the transportation problem; that the needs and the necessities of the great body of the people should be the first consideration; and, believing as I do, that the welfare of the people is not properly safeguarded in this measure, I can not vote for it.

I recognize as fully as any man that most legislation is at best a compromise of conflicting opinions, and I realize that in the support of or opposition to measures one should be governed by what the effect will be upon the body of the people and not by his personal preferences.

Acting upon this principle and being governed by these convictions, I am forced to oppose this conference report, because it contains, in my judgment, more that is radically bad than of what is substantially good.

There are some provisions in the conference report that I would gladly vote for. Yet these good provisions are so far overbalanced by the bad that I can not give the measure my support. I will vote to recommit the conference report in the hope that the bad features may be eliminated by the conferees, and if the motion to recommit is not agreed to, I will then vote against the adoption of the report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SUMNERS of Texas (at the request of Mr. LANHAM), for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. CLARK of Missouri, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. STEAGALL (at the request of Mr. ALMON), indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

RETURN OF THE RAILROADS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago during the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], he referred to the fact that I had declined to read in my time a letter which I had from the Director General of Railroads, Mr. Hines. I desire to say in explanation that at the time I made my remarks I had not received the letter from the Director General and only received it a few moments ago and concluded the reading of it. I desire to say that a few nights ago I was invited to a conference for the purpose of explaining some of the features of this bill. During the discussion I made the remark that the labor section of this bill did not represent the mature judgment of those who had framed it, and I referred to a fact which was true as carried in the newspapers of this city the day following the day on which the conference report was agreed to, that the substance of the labor section was redrafted by the Director General and adopted by the conferees. Mr. Hines this morning called me up and said that he was sending me a letter explaining his connection with it, because somebody had told him I said he was the original writer of the section, which I did not say, and I did not seek to create any such impression. He asked me to read the letter to the House, and I told him I would read it, but it did not reach me until after I concluded my remarks. I now ask unanimous consent to be allowed to insert in the RECORD the letter from the Director General to me in order that it may be understood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the letter of the Director General be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he did not make the direct statement the other night at that public meeting that this section was prepared by an outsider and accepted by the conferees?

Mr. BARKLEY. I did say that, and I still say that. The labor provision, as it is contained in the bill now, was drawn by Mr. Hines, as explained in his letter.

Mr. CROWTHER. That is what I wanted to know. And when asked who it was the gentleman stated it was Director General Hines.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I would not have made that statement except for the fact the newspapers had stated the same thing.

Mr. CROWTHER. But the gentleman also stated it was not the consensus of the judgment of the conferees or the mature judgment of the gentleman who wrote it, but still it was put in?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I think I said that, because I had not had time to deliberate maturely, but sought to eliminate objections to what was submitted to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, February 21, 1920.

Hon. A. W. BARKLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am told that the impression has been created, as the result of a remark made by you in a recent conference of Members of Congress and others, that I originated the labor provisions in the railroad bill.

If this impression has been drawn from what you said, I am sure what you said was misconstrued, because I am satisfied any statement you may have made on the subject was accurate.

In order to prevent the possibility of the situation being confused and of the idea prevailing in any quarter that the labor provisions represent a policy originated by me instead of by Congress, I shall appreciate it if you will be good enough to read this letter to the House.

Through the courtesy of the conference committee, I received last Saturday a draft of the labor provisions, showing that the conference committee had definitely adopted two leading principles. The first was that there ought to be a wage board upon which the public, the employees, and the carriers would be represented. The other was that statutory provision ought to be made for boards of adjustment to deal with grievances.

I took the action of the conference committee on these two leading principles as indicating its final conviction that these two principles should be incorporated in the legislation. Taking this as the foundation for my consideration in the matter, I addressed myself exclusively to the question whether the details of the provisions agreed upon by the conference would satisfactorily carry out these fundamental principles.

In transmitting my suggestions to Senator CUMMINS I stated that "this redraft is not designed to propose any independent view of my own on this subject but is designed simply to take the general scheme of the draft as already agreed upon and modify it so as to incorporate therein the suggestions made in my letter of the 14th instant."

As to the wage board, I found that, while the conference had adopted the three-party principle—that is, representation of the public, labor, and carriers—it had provided for only one representative of labor and one of the carriers, as against three of the public. I therefore advised that a more satisfactory and reasonable application of the principle of three-party representation would be to have three representatives of labor and of the carriers, as well as of the public, making a board of nine instead of five.

As to the adjustment boards, I found that the provision agreed upon by the conference undertook to specify the organizations of employees which should be represented upon these boards, and would result that the board of adjustment which would pass upon grievances would be dependent upon that particular organization to which the employees belonged, thus producing a great deal of confusion and endless jurisdictional conflicts between different organizations. I therefore advised that the entire matter of boards of adjustment be left to the agreement of the carriers and the employees instead of being made rigid and inelastic by statutory specifications.

In the original draft which came to me I found that the boards of adjustment created thereunder were to handle not only grievances but wage matters also. My experiences with the railway boards of adjustment and with wage matters in the Railroad Administration convince me that it will be impracticable for such boards to handle both grievances and wage matters because of the enormous amount of work involved, and I therefore suggested that the adjustment boards devote themselves solely to grievance matters.

There were various minor features which I suggested. One was that a man ought not to be disqualified, as he was by the provision agreed on in conference, from being a public representative of the wage board because he might theretofore have been an officer or member of a labor organization or an officer of a carrier. I also advised that representatives of the employees on the wage board should not be required, as they were in effect by the provision agreed on in conference, to give up honorary membership in their labor organizations. I also advised that there be added to the standards provided in the provision which the conference had agreed to for testing the reasonableness of wages the further standard of correcting inequalities due to former wage orders and adjustments.

I requested our Division of Law to take the provision as agreed on by the conference and to make such changes therein as would be necessary to express the changes in detail which I above suggested, and I submitted this revised draft of the provision as agreed on in conference to the conference committee.

I think I should add that the draft of these labor provisions as it came to me provided that a dispute could be taken up by the adjustment board under several alternative conditions, which included among others a written petition signed by 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute.

I think it important thus to make it clear that the fundamental principles of the labor provisions are the principles agreed on by the conference committee, and that my action was simply to suggest changes in detail which in my opinion would make the principles already adopted by the conference committee more workable than they would otherwise be. Copies of my letters on this subject to the representatives of the conference committee are attached.

Sincerely, yours,

WALKER D. HINES.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUHRING].

Mr. LUHRING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in the beginning that after a careful study of this bill, and especially the provisions of Title III, I am convinced that it is the greatest piece of constructive legislation ever attempted by this or any other Congress, and I shall vote for it with supreme satisfaction. [Applause.]

It is my purpose in the brief time I have to discuss Title III of the bill—that part of the bill which deals directly with and provides the machinery for the settlement of labor disputes and difficulties. I was one of a number invited to the now famous caucus held the other night, and I responded to the invitation because I was advised that it was a Republican caucus called to consider the pending bill. However, I found that it was a caucus not as we understand the meaning of the word, but that it was a meeting called for the purpose of listening to the representatives of labor and hearing their objections to Title III. It was afterwards explained that those Members of Congress, both Democrats and Republicans, who had voted in favor of the Anderson amendment to the Esch bill were the only ones invited, and this invitation was extended to them on the theory that, having voted for this so-called Anderson amendment, they had shown a friendliness toward labor, and that therefore it was assumed by the leaders of the movement that these Members would at least give the representatives of the railroad employees a sympathetic hearing. This assumption was entirely proper and in my case absolutely correct.

Without going into the details of my past record with reference to labor matters, I can assure the laboring men of this country that whenever and wherever I have had the opportunity I always raised my voice in their behalf and always insisted that justice be done to them. To my surprise, Mr. Shea, who was spokesman for labor at this so-called caucus, absolutely failed to point out wherein Title III was unjust and unfair to the men he represented, and, while criticizing certain minor provisions of the bill and indulging in misleading generalities, he wholly failed to make any helpful suggestions or point out the way to a satisfactory solution. He concluded his statement with an appeal that the bill be defeated in its entirety. Practically the same position was assumed by Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Gompers, however, denied that he was in favor of Government ownership or that he had ever been impressed with that proposition. He, however, did urge that Federal control be continued a little longer so that the Government ownership proposition could be given a fair trial in time of peace. He of course lost sight of the fact that the railroads have been operating under Federal control during peace times for over a year and that the results have been the same as when the country was at war. The main object or purpose of the meeting, as I gathered from the remarks of the representatives of labor, was to defeat this entire bill for the sole and only purpose of foisting upon the country Government ownership or some such fantastic plan as is embodied in the so-called Plumb plan.

I am opposed at this time to antistrike legislation. Not because I believe that the right to strike is a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution, but because it is the only court of last resort that has been provided for the settlement of labor disputes. The right to strike, as we understand it, is entirely different from the right to quit work. I freely concede the right of any man or set of men, becoming dissatisfied with their employment, to quit their employment. I do not concede the right of any man or set of men, for the purpose of compelling their employer to yield to their demands, to quit work. A strike in its simplest form is brought about by an agreement between certain employees to quit work in a body until such time as their employer will yield to their demands. It is force and duress and can very properly be characterized as blackmail. The same is true also of the lockout, where the employer, in order to compel his employees to yield to his demand, closes the doors and refuses to permit them to work, hoping to starve them out, so to speak, and thus compel them to grant his request. This, too, is blackmail.

But under the conditions now existing we have no right to deprive labor of its right to quit work in a body in order to secure justice and a recognition of its fair demands; not until we give to labor something in the place of a strike and provide a tribunal wherein sure and swift justice may be had. The pending bill goes a long way toward providing that tribunal. It, however, does not provide the means or the machinery to enforce its decisions. The right to strike remains unimpaired; in fact, the word "strike" is not used in any section of Title III. Some one suggested that it provides for compulsory arbitration, yet the word "arbitration" can not be found in the title, and while the provision gives jurisdiction to the labor board to settle disputes of all kinds, it does not by any means constitute that board a board of arbitration. Compulsory arbitration requires the disputants to submit the controversy to a board and compels them to abide by the decision of that board. There is nothing in Title III which even hints at the proposition that the disputants must abide by the decision of the labor board. The only means to be relied upon to enforce the decisions are that these decisions shall be given the widest publicity, so that the public may be informed as to the merits of the controversy.

I desire to review briefly the various sections of Title III so as to demonstrate the absolute fairness of the title in so far as labor is concerned. Section 300 defines the various terms used in the bill, and in subdivision 5 requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to define the words "subordinate officials" and plainly state the class and rank of the employees coming within the meaning of that designation. It must be remembered that a great number, over 100,000 employees, are not members of the four great brotherhoods and are not recognized by them. These employees include train dispatchers, railroad supervisors, storekeepers, claim men, auditors, trainmasters, and yardmasters. It is the purpose of subdivision 5 of section 300 to make provision for these men, it being the object of the title to provide for the settlement of disputes with each employee, no matter how humble or obscure his position or whether he is a member of a trade-union or not. No distinction is made between organized and unorganized labor.

Section 301 requires that the carrier and the employee meet in conference and in good faith attempt to settle their controversies. Section 302 provides for the voluntary establishment of railroad boards of labor adjustment. These adjustment boards may be established between the carrier and any employees, subordinate officials, or organization of employees. Under this section there may be an adjustment board of firemen, enginemen, conductors, and any other class or organization of employees and subordinate officials. This particular board has jurisdiction to decide any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions.

Section 304 establishes a railroad labor board of nine members, three of whom shall be selected from the labor group, three from the carriers, and three to represent the public. This board not only settles disputes involving grievances, rules, and working conditions, but also decides disputes pertaining to wages and salaries. It is also given the right to suspend and review any decision or agreement reached in conference between the carrier and its employees respecting wages and salaries. This right to suspend and review is in the interest of the public, and for the first time the rights of the public, the rights of over 100,000,000 souls who pay the freight and rates, are given some consideration. Surely that great class should be represented, and it is eminently fitting that any decision by the labor board with respect to wages must be concurred in by at least one from the public group—one member of the board from the public group.

Their anxiety to protect the rights of labor and assure them that justice was being done prompted the author of Title III to write into the bill, and I believe very properly, that in determining the justice and reasonableness of wages and salaries and working conditions the board shall take into consideration, among other relevant circumstances: First, the scales or wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries; second, the relations between wages and the cost of living; third, the hazards of the employment; fourth, the training and skill required; fifth, the degree of responsibility; sixth, the character and regularity of the employment; and, seventh, inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment, the result of previous wage orders or adjustments.

The other sections of the bill, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 314, and 315, provide for the organization of the labor board and confer the right to be heard in person and by counsel; grant power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and the right to examine books. Section 312 guarantees the same wages now being paid up until September 1, 1920.

A memorial has been presented to Members of Congress by the representatives of labor in which certain objections are pointed out to the provisions of the bill, and I now desire to examine briefly the objections and the reasons therefor. In the first place, it is complained that under paragraph 1 of section 304 the labor group must nominate not less than six nominees, but under the provisions of paragraph 5, section 300, nominations can not be made until after the commission has promulgated the rules and procedure for making such nominations. They point out that under the provisions of section 305 nominees must be selected within 30 days after the passage of the act and complain that no provision is made requiring the commission to promulgate regulations in sufficient time to permit the employees to comply with the provisions of section 305. It must be apparent that the various sections referred to must be construed together. The duty is clearly placed upon the commission to determine and define those who shall come within the meaning of the term "subordinate official," and this must be done within 30 days so as to enable the nominations to be made. The committee undoubtedly gave careful consideration to this question of time, and with their knowledge and the means of information at hand, no doubt very properly concluded that 30 days would be ample time in which to promulgate these various rules and regulations.

The President is given the power of appointment only when "the employees or carriers fail to make nominations and offer nominees in accordance with the regulations of the commission." Therefore it must be apparent to anyone that can read and understand the English language that the rights of labor can not be prejudiced by the failure of the commission to function within the 30 days. If they have not promulgated the rules and regulations, then labor can not be penalized for failure to comply with something that does not exist.

It is also complained in the memorial that special consideration has been given to "subordinate officials," and that by reason of this consideration a situation may arise that will result in the appointment of a labor board without a representative of the organized railroad workers on it. There is absolutely no substance to this objection, and it is entirely too chimerical to warrant serious consideration. The President is given the power to nominate the members of this labor board. These nominees go to the Senate for confirmation or rejection. Surely somewhere down the line justice will be done and the rights of all concerned will be protected.

Objection is also made to section 306, paragraphs A and B. This section prohibits the membership of any individual on the labor board who is an active member or in the employ or in the office of any organization of employees or any carrier or owns any stock or bond thereof or is pecuniarily interested therein. The labor board created by the bill is a judicial tribunal—certainly it is quasi judicial. A court or tribunal of that sort must not have among its membership any individual personally interested in the decision or the results of a decision that he is called upon to render. In a manner this labor board is constituted much as juries were constituted under the ancient common law. In olden times jurors were selected because they had knowledge of the facts in dispute and knew personally about the matters in controversy, yet in those days no one was permitted to sit on a jury who was an interested party, a litigant, or a complainant.

I have discussed Title III of this bill for the reason that all the correspondence I have received has been directed to the labor provisions. Every letter that I have received from the laboring man protests against antistrike legislation. On the other hand, every letter I have received from capital urged anti-strike legislation. As I have clearly shown, the title in no manner prohibits strikes. While it does not prohibit strikes, yet it does protect the interests of the public by giving representation on the labor board.

I have studied the other provisions of the bill very carefully, and while, of course, it is impossible to satisfy all interests, yet I am convinced, as I have already said, that this is the greatest piece of constructive legislation ever attempted by this or any other Congress, and that it will go down in history as one of the notable achievements of the Republican Party. I have no patience with the so-called Plumb plan. This plan is made of the stuff that dreams are made of. I have no patience with Government ownership, and if this be my declaration of independence and if by voting for this bill I incur the enmity of labor and be accused of treason to them, then they must make the most of it.

I think I know and understand the laboring men of my district, and when any man or set of men assume to represent the views of over 2,000,000 men and seek to commit that great body of American citizens to the Plumb or any other equally fantastic plan, he has undertaken a task which is absolutely impossible, because it is a reflection upon the intelligence and patriotism of the great American public.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill brought in by the conference committee does not contain all that I should like to see in the law, but it is far better than anyone could expect under all the circumstances. In fact, it is a good bill and the committee is to be congratulated upon its work.

The only real or serious opposition to the acceptance of the conference report now seems to come from those purporting to represent the railroad employees and is ostensibly based upon the so-called antistrike provision. How any railroad employee can object to the mild and conciliatory terms of this section of the bill it is difficult to understand.

In the first place, every facility is provided for the settlement of possible disputes by boards chosen by the parties first directly concerned. Surely there can be no objection to this. If this means fails, an impartial tribunal is provided in the labor board, before which both parties may be heard. There should be no objection to this. When, after a full and fair hearing, the labor board finally decides as to what is fair and just, it can make public its award in the case. No penalty is attached to any refusal to accept the award. The legal right to quit work individually or to strike as a group is in no wise impaired, and no legal right or privilege now enjoyed by the railroad employees is taken away by this bill. The only compelling force to cause compliance with the terms of the award is public opinion. If such terms are not fair and just, public opinion will approve their rejection. If the terms are fair and just, not only to the parties immediately concerned but to the great mass of the people, who in the last analysis must pay all the bills, public opinion will doubtless be felt on the side of the award.

There is nothing in this bill that is unfair and unjust to any employee of the railroads, and in my judgment such opposition as is now being manifested is not on account of anything contained in the bill, but is only a smoke screen for the purpose of concealing the real purpose of finally securing control of the railroads under the Plumb plan or some other Bolshevist scheme. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PELL].

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the railroad bill, although I do not think that it is perfect or that in its present form it will endure forever. I shall vote for it because, on the whole, it promises service and treats the public, the laborer, and the investor with reasonable fairness. To defeat the bill would mean either to continue government control or to return the roads in such a condition as practically to condemn them to bankruptcy. I am very strongly opposed to government ownership, and no one is seriously in favor of the other alternative.

Almost all of the criticism of private ownership in the past has been based on errors of finance, rather than on errors of administration, and the question of financing the roads seems to me to be reasonably taken care of in the present bill, and, even if it were not, I do not regard throat cutting as a good cure for a cold. The regulation of the financial management of a great enterprise, while not simple, is quite possible, but it does not seem to me that we or any other body can prescribe rules for the detailed administration of great affairs, and to attempt to establish government control in this country would lead to almost no good results and to a great many bad ones. For example, there would be about 2,000,000 voters directly or indirectly deriving their support from the railroads, which would be by far the greatest governmental activity. It is almost inconceivable that a political engine of such power would not be employed by men on both sides to affect the result of elections.

In the case of a privately owned road, managed for profit, extensions and improvements are made solely in the hope that the people will use them. If a privately owned road is of little or no use to the public, it will fail. In the case of roads built by the government or of extensions made by the government, there is always the possibility that certain communities will be built up at the public expense, notwithstanding the loss to the service.

It is a perfectly fair rule that if a community is too small or has too little business to pay a reasonable profit on a railroad, or its prospects are not good enough to induce an intelligent man to bet that it will reach that condition in a few years, that community is not in sufficient need of a railroad to justify us in taking public funds to build one, and if it be in such condition private capital can very readily be found to finance the enterprise.

I have myself traveled on government and privately owned railroads in Europe, and my invariable conclusion has been that in each country the privately owned roads were the better administered. In France, before the war, the privately owned roads were paying good dividends and the government roads were all run at a loss, although the charges for transportation were the same.

As a rule, we who are responsible to the people are none too careful of the public funds, and it is hardly likely that a railroad administration which is responsible to us would be much more careful.

I am very much afraid, however, that, whether we like it or not, the socialization of railroads will be a fact inside of 10 years. There are to-day being organized throughout the country nonpartisan societies to extend Government control in every way possible. They are backed by an enthusiastic minority of the people who will not vote party labels but will support loyally any man in Congress or the State legislatures who has supported Government ownership and oppose its enemies.

It is almost impossible to impress the majority of the American people, which I am firmly convinced is opposed to the socialization of industries, with the very serious danger inherent in the activities of these organizations. The ordinary stockholder in the railroads and the policyholder in a life insurance company will absolutely refuse to pay any attention whatsoever to politics and to the protection of his property. As a rule he regards politics as a thing beneath him and unworthy the attention of a person of his dignity.

It would be well for the property owners of this country to realize that no body of elected officials can protect their rights unless they themselves are willing to make some effort to protect them. If they persistently take the attitude that they are too good to mix in politics, or that it is too much trouble to vote anything but a straight ticket, they may be quite sure that the rights which they neglect to guard will be sacrificed by others. In the time of their necessity they will have shown to them the political bones of thousands of men in Congress and in the State legislatures who have endeavored to support them and whom they have subsequently abandoned at the elections to the resentment of various particularistic groups. I see no salvation for property in the United States unless those of us who care about the interests of our country meet organization with organization and stand together to support our principles.

The prohibition law has been passed too recently for any of us to fail to realize the extraordinary power that it is possible for a well-organized small group to obtain in this country as long as the majority of the people flaccidly vote party labels.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I will not be able within the time allotted to me to enter upon an extended discussion of the bill. In the outset I want to confirm or corroborate what the gentleman from Indiana has said. In my opinion this will prove to be one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation that has been considered, at least by this Congress and perhaps by any previous Congress. And I venture the opinion and prediction that as the years roll by the merits of the measure will develop themselves and be understood and appreciated, and that employees as well as employers, and the public of the country, will appreciate what the great men on the committee have accomplished. [Applause.]

The Cummins measure provided that it should be unlawful for two or more persons, employees of a carrier, to hinder the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation, and declared that such action would constitute a conspiracy, and that upon conviction, as punishment, a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for six months, or both, should be imposed, and, further, that whosoever should aid, abet, or counsel the commission of the acts referred to should also be guilty, and upon conviction punished as aforesaid.

The advocates of the Cummins measure contended that employees should be forbidden to strike, and in case they should strike and thereby impede or retard or prevent the transportation of commodities or persons in interstate traffic, such action should be a crime and punished as such. They argued that such legislation was necessary in the case of railroads because these were a facility of public service; that the people were entitled to be protected against the dire results that would come in consequence of the tying up of the railroads. The Cummins bill was passed by the Senate.

Another measure, known as the Esch bill, provided for the settlement of disputes between carriers and employees, set up a system of arbitration, and prohibited strikes pending the consideration of the question by the board; provided that any union which should authorize or direct a member to break his contract of hire, or to violate the award of the board, should be liable "for the full damages to the carrier arising from the breach."

Organized labor, as represented by the 14 railroad brotherhoods, was justly aroused at the antagonistic spirit manifested in the preparation and advocacy of the drastic features of the bills referred to.

From he beginning I have frankly explained to all that under a deep conviction I was absolutely opposed to the continuation of Government operation or control of railroads. The fact that the Government, using the lines as a unit, vested with all power, military and civil, with the employees acting under the impulse of war patriotism, was not able to successfully operate these railroads, having run them at a loss in excess of $700,000,000, and confronted with enormous claims presented by the owners of the properties for failure of the Government to keep the roads and equipment in condition for use, and in failing to supply the necessary additional equipment required, and in throwing out of employment many thousands of men engaged in other industries for a large portion of their time by reason of failure to furnish cars for use in the transportation of coal and other commodities, and in view of the greatly increased cost of transportation of freight and passengers, and the general inefficiency of the service—trains running late and wrecking; also the flagrant disregard and disrespect of the rights of the people by Government officials having to do with the operation of these public agencies of transportation, I felt that I could not, with respect to my own feelings and in justice to the general public, do otherwise than oppose to the utmost of my ability any plan for the continuation of the unhappy condition existing.

But, Mr. Speaker, my mind has been balanced from the start in opposition to the antilabor clauses of both the Esch and the Cummins bills. I felt, however, that some tribunal ought to be established where the parties might resort for a public hearing and decision regarding their rights, provided they wished so to do; and when an amendment known as the Anderson amendment was proposed I expressed my feelings on the subject in no unmistakable way. While it was somewhat unpleasant to oppose a majority of the committee members belonging to my own party, yet duty compelled me to dissent from the view of these gentlemen and to oppose the enactment of the clause into law. I spoke against that antilabor clause and voted against it, with the happy result that the Anderson amendment prevailed. This amendment had the cordial approval of the 14 brotherhoods. Many letters from railroad men have come to me expressing their appreciation of my efforts in connection with the matter.

In support of my position, which was successfully maintained, I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 14, 1919, the following extract from my remarks on that occasion:

I now come to my third proposition—the employees. On the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ANDERSON] to strike out the matter contained under the third title or section of the committee bill, which reads thus, "Disputes between carriers and their employees," and to substitute other provisions in lieu of the committee draft.

The chief objections made by labor to this provision is that it provides for compulsory arbitration and requires that the award be made a part of the contract between the parties, forbids strikes, and gives a right of action to the carriers against the unions for damages sustained for any breach of that contract. I am opposed to this provision of the bill. My reasons therefor, in brief, are these:

Why should the railway men be singled out and made the subject of such legislation, leaving out all other union labor? The railway brotherhoods have been the great conservative element in unionism for the past 30 years. They have been the balance wheel that has kept down radicalism. They have opposed socialism that leads to anarchy and revolution. They have not been in the class of McNamara, of the bridge builders, now serving terms for dynamiting; nor in the class of Lewis, of the mine workers, who would call a nation-wide strike in abrogation of unquestioned pending contracts, such as existed in the Fairmont, Kanawha, and New River fields between the coal operators and that union.

Why provide a remedy for the recovery of damages against the railway brotherhoods when it is a fact that they have never been known to break a contract? The character of these brotherhoods is above reproach. As honorable men they have always fulfilled their contracts. With only one exception, there has not been a strike of railroad men in my district during the past 25 years.

Again, such legislation as this would prove abortive.

The Indianapolis injunction can not be enforced unless the defendants are willing to comply with the spirit of the decree. They may keep to the letter of the mandate and yet the men not go back to work. All this goes to show the futility of enacting statutes designed to coerce large bodies of men in respect to performing labor. You can take a horse to water, but you can not make him drink.

I regard the provisions of the committee bill only as sources of irritation and as provocative of trouble.

Human nature resents all interference with personal liberty and revolts at compulsion. The men, as good citizens, might abide by even a bad law, but they would do so in sullen mood and feel revengeful against those who enacted it as well as those who would seek to enforce it.

I hope the amendment proposed as a substitute will be adopted. It would provide a peaceful system for arbitration and award. The employees' organizations are willing to accept this amendment and to abide by the results of its operation if it be enacted into law. There will be no strikes if this provision becomes a law. No organization of men could afford to violate its terms or the judgments rendered under it. The passage of the measure will constitute one of the most forward steps taken in matters of legislation during the past decade.

Further, in supporting the substitute amendment let me say that I am representing the wishes of thousands of my constituents. In my district are four large terminal yards. Two of them—one at Bluefield and one at Williamson—are on the Norfolk & Western, Hinton on the Chesapeake & Ohio, and Princeton on the Virginian; also subordinate terminals at Gary, Vivian, Mullens, and Logan. This great district includes employees of six railroads, and I am here to represent them. The employees of these roads are not only personally interested but the business men of my district are also interested in their prosperity. This great body of workers are entitled to the very highest consideration at the hands of this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the compulsion of public opinion will enforce the judgments that may be awarded by the courts of arbitrament provided under that amendment. I believe that the force of public opinion will control the execution of those judgments and render the law efficacious. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Esch bill embodying the Anderson amendment was then passed by the House. The Senate and the House being unable to agree, a joint conference committee consisting of 10 members—five members from each branch of Congress—was appointed with authority to settle the dispute. This committee has been in session for over a month and has reported to the Congress a substitute bill, the one in the House being known as H. R. 10453. Opposition to the bill has appeared in certain quarters. This opposition comes from those in favor of either the so-called Plumb plan or an extension of Government operation. They assign various reasons why the bill should not pass. One is that it is too liberal to the railroads, but I do not see how employees could demur to this provision, for if the railroads do not prosper they can not pay liberal wages. Another objection is that some changes have been made in the Anderson amendment by admitting on appeal representatives of the public, and providing that at least one of the three representatives of the public should unite in the decision. The decision must be concurred in by at least five of nine members. All fair-minded and reasonable men, whether they be owners or employees or of the group known as the public, are bound to concede that the public has some interest—I think a very great interest—in transportation, and, if so, they are therefore justly entitled to representation. I have made it my business to critically examine the provisions of the bill relating to the settlement of disputes and am pleased to find that there is no provision therein which forbids employees to strike at any time, either before, pending, or subsequent to arbitration. There is no provision making strikes unlawful or denouncing them as conspiracies or defining them as crimes, much less inflicting punishment. There is no provision holding unions or members thereof liable in damages, for violating contracts or refusing to abide by the award of the officers appointed to hear and decide. The bill therefore leaves the settlement of labor disputes to the honor and patriotism of the men. If the measure be passed, it will be the first time in the history of the country where a tribunal has been erected to which the workingmen may go and present their cause and challenge the carriers in vindication of their just rights.

The public has generally been sympathetic, and in justice should be, toward laboring men. Laboring men are entitled to have established a tribunal of this sort in order to relieve them of the momentous decision of engaging in a strike. I can very well imagine the feelings of a man called upon by an organization to strike. He would long deliberate upon the effect of the strike. If the strike were called in winter and be prolonged and the entire transportation facilities of the country broken up he would certainly reflect upon the pain and suffering that he would thereby impose. The freezing and starving of millions of people is not to be lightly considered. Again, he would be embarrassed as regards his attitude toward his own corporation. He has been a loyal employee of the company for many, many years, and maybe, from time to time, promoted; the officials have shown him and his family every consideration, but now he is called upon to decide whether he will strike or be called a scab. Therefore it seems to me that if this measure shall pass a great step forward will have been taken and that great and lasting good will be accomplished in the interest of all concerned, and to the workingmen and employees more than to all others. Furthermore it will relieve the danger of immense loss of wages. Two strikes—coal and steel—have recently failed, bringing great financial loss and distress upon workingmen. And it will be recalled that the Steel Corporation declined to recognize the union, much less to arbitrate the questions involved. Had there existed a labor statute, such as this bill carries, applying to industrial corporations, the men might have been saved many thousands of dollars and not come away empty handed.

My respect and sympathy go out to the men who labor with their brain and hands, and in voting for this bill I do so in the firm belief that I am acting in these men's interest. In so doing I realize that, with some, I may be misunderstood, but this shall not cause me to deflect from the course of action which my mind indicates is the only honorable one to pursue.

These remarks, Mr. Speaker, accurately record my convictions on the subject.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me the best speech that I can make will be to say that on yesterday I listened to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], as well as some others upon the Democratic side and upon this side, and that I indorse all that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] said. I believe that he is a member of this committee. In common with others, if I had supreme power I would change this bill in one or two instances, but as I have not, I am going to vote for it as I vote for all important bills, without being able to say that I am pleased with every dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, after months of labor by the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the bill providing for the return of the railroads to their owners, we are to-day considering the conference report on this measure. Representatives of the two branches of Congress have reached an agreement on the final form which they believe this legislation should take. I think it is generally recognized that this is the most important and most comprehensive bill for the control of the transportation system of the country ever considered by Congress. As a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which framed the original House bill, I have had a very special interest in this question, the proper solution of which I believe to be of most vital importance to the people of the country.

I want, if possible, to make my position clear relative to the adoption of the conference report. I can not agree with those who advocate two years' extension of Government operation of our railroads or the adoption of Government ownership or the Plumb plan, for I do not believe any one of these proposals would be for the best interests of the public, employers, or employees. The advocates of the extension of Government operation, Government ownership, and the Plumb plan tell us that under the two years of Government control through which we have just passed our railroads have been giving better service to the public and have been built up to a higher state of efficiency than they were under private management.

I am frank to say that soon after the Government took over the railroads there was a decided improvement in service, but the reason for that was that, owing to the Great War, the railroads were facing abnormal conditions, and the only reason that the Government was able to meet this abnormal condition was the fact that it was permitted under the war power to suspend laws, regulations, and rules which had handicapped the private operation of our railroads. Therefore I am ready to say that at the beginning of the war it was absolutely necessary for our Government to have taken over the operation of the railroads.

Yet I challenge the statement of those who say that at the end of two years of Government operation our transportation system is in a better condition than it was before the Government took it over. On the contrary, I do not hesitate to say that the railroads of our country were never in such a deplorable condition as they are to-day, and I know that my opinion on this matter is supported by the public, the railroad managers, and the employees. It is estimated by reliable authority that to meet the transportation needs of our country and build up the railroads so that they can handle traffic properly will require over $1,000,000,000 annually for the next five years. The war is over and the people are sick and tired of Government control, war supervision, and regulation. There is a general feeling that, inasmuch as we are on a peace-time basis again, we should have less Government interference with legitimate private business and that Congress should encourage and assist private enterprise and individual initiative, which in the past has made us the greatest nation on the earth. [Applause.]

I learn from reliable authority that under normal conditions our railroads require about 2,000,000 tons of steel rails per year, whereas in two years the Railroad Administration has purchased directly only 200,000 tons of steel rails. Annually the railways require about 100,000,000 new ties, but apparently under Federal control there will be a shortage of 50,000,000 ties. During the four years prior to Federal control the railways built an average of 100,000 freight cars per year, whereas the administration has purchased only 100,000 freight cars in two years, of which only 90 per cent have been delivered. It is estimated that about 200,000 new cars must be built in 1920 to make good the deficiency.

It is also stated that the normal railroad requirements are about 3,000 new locomotives per year, yet during Federal control only 2,000 locomotives, or one-third of the normal requirement, have been provided. Only 923 new passenger cars have been purchased in over two years, and only 721 miles of railroad extension have been built.

The President has issued a proclamation stating the railroads will be returned to private ownership on March 1. I believe that it would be a calamity to send back the railroads without proper financial assistance by the Government. It seems to me that this will be necessary if the railroads are to function properly, give the right kind of service, provide needed equipment, and pay an adequate wage to the employees. In this respect I am in hearty accord with the provisions of the conference report. It seems to me that the Government must either provide for financial support of the railroads at this time or else embark on a Government-ownership program, and I believe that Government ownership will in the long run at least be much more expensive to the people of the country than private operation. If the Government needed more funds to operate the railroads, it might not increase rates, but it would then be compelled to make up the deficit by taxation on all the people.

There has been much unfair and misleading criticism of the financial provisions of the conference report. The bill says that there shall be a return of 5½ per cent on the actual property valuation of the railroads, which is to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Watered stocks are not validated, and in fact under the bill it will be possible for the Interstate Commerce Commission to squeeze false values out of railroad securities. Those who are so free to talk about big business interests benefiting by Government financial aid to the railroads should remember that there are 670,000 individual holders of railroad stocks and 300,000 owners of railroad bonds, and that a very large percentage of railroad securities are owned by insurance companies and savings banks. Hundreds of thousands of people who have life-insurance policies or are depositors in savings banks are directly interested in the value of railroad securities, and it has been stated that if the railroads go back to their owners without financial cooperation by the Government very many of them will go into bankruptcy. The interests of insurance policyholders and savings depositors must be protected.

I am of the opinion that the so-called labor sections of the bill are open to criticism. The conference report proposes, first, that the railroad companies and employees shall endeavor to settle all disputes as to wages and conditions of employment between themselves, but it also establishes machinery to deal with these disputes consisting of adjustment boards and a railroad labor board of nine men, with the public, the companies, and the employees equally represented on this board. The plan proposed in the Senate or Cummins bill, including the antistrike clause, is rejected, but the Anderson amendment placed in the Esch bill by the House is also stricken out by the conferees.

I heartily supported the plan for adjusting labor disputes between the railroads and their employees which was proposed in the Anderson amendment to the Esch bill. I had hoped that the conferees would retain the Anderson plan in principle in the final report.

I am frank to say that I am in sympathy with the desire of certain classes of railroad employees for increases in wages, for I contend that they are not receiving the pay to which they are entitled. I am sure that there is a misunderstanding in the minds of the people relative to the wages of railroad employees. Many people believe they are among the highest paid workers in the country. Such is not the case, and the average railroad employee's wages to-day is far below the wage paid to other skilled workmen. For instance, let us take the wages of a switching crew under Government control of the railroads—and this branch of the service is very hard and dangerous work. There are, as a rule, five men on a switching crew—engineer, fireman, conductor, and trainmen. We must bear in mind at all times that the engineer is the highest paid employee in train service, and under the schedule of wages which is in force he receives 70 cents per hour; for an eight-hour day, $5.60. Here is a faithful employee, who may have worked for 30 years, holding a highly responsible position and making $5.60, while the steel industries in my own district pay the commonest kind of unskilled labor $5.06 for an eight-hour day.

Mr. Speaker, more than six months ago the railroad employees made an appeal to the Railroad Administration for an increase in wages in order to meet the high cost of living. At that time the President asked them to withhold their request for an increase in wages until the Government could be given an opportunity to work out its plans for a reduction in the high cost of living. The time agreed upon for delaying action has passed and the cost of living is not any lower. Once more the railroad men have made an appeal, and again the President has asked them to wait until a basis for settlement which he suggests can be worked out. I am sure that the spirit exhibited by the representatives of the railroad employees in accepting the latest proposal and in agreeing that our transportation system shall not be interfered with is appreciated by the American people.

I hope that the method of handling railroad-labor questions provided in the conference report will not interfere with the plans that have already been launched for the adjustment of wages of the railroad employees at the earliest possible date. If it develops that there are serious defects in the machinery for handling labor questions as proposed by the conferees, I shall be among the first to insist that Congress shall make whatever changes are necessary in order that the law shall be fair to all concerned. I have believed from the first that if it had been found necessary to provide by law for the arbitration and conciliation of railroad-labor disputes this should have been in the form of separate legislation, which could be considered on its merits, and not be involved with other matters. In the present bill the labor question is complicated with other vital issues.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the time allotted to me is too short to enter into a technical discussion of this bill or its provisions, and I am inclined to the opinion that a technical discussion of it would be a waste of time, because every Member of this House is, or should be, familiar with the most important legislation that has come before us for action this year. Every Member knows, or should know, how he intends to vote.

None of us are satisfied with the conference report as it stands. The carriers do not like it, the employees are opposed to it, and the public doubtful of it. That fact alone, to my mind, does more to prove the fairness of the conference report than any other one thing. If the carriers approved heartily of it, I should fear it, and if it had the indorsement of the American Federation of Labor and employees I would know that it was written in their interests and not that of the public. Two-thirds of the criticism against the measure made by the labor unions is solely in the interest of the Plumb plan and directed against private ownership. The argument against the guaranty provision is, in my opinion, a subterfuge, because those provisions constitute a limitation of income rather than a guaranty, and if it is a guaranty it is only for the short time that will be necessary for the roads to adjust themselves to private control as opposed to Government ownership. There are no strike provisions in the report, however clever arguments may be made by the attorneys who represent the employees. The issue resolves itself solely into a question of whether or not at this time we deem it advisable to have public or private ownership, and a vote for the report is a vote for private ownership, while a vote against it is nothing more nor less than a vote for the Plumb plan. The fact that practically all the members of this body who fought against political domination by railroads, against a return on watered stock, and against overcapitalization are voting for this report ought to demonstrate that fact to any one who impartially desires that which is best for the public as a whole. This vote, however, ought not to be misconstrued by railway executives or their representatives. It is not a vote in their interest, but a vote in the interest of the public. They and private ownership are on trial. The railroad executives should not mistake public sentiment, the justice of the facts, the feeling many of us have that the abuses of 20 years ago would be continued if the opportunity existed, that the public knows the main facts concerning physical valuation, and that the figures are not being correctly given.

I do not desire to go into detail concerning the railroad lobby. It has been no more vicious but just as insidious as that maintained by the American Federation of Labor and the brotherhoods. They both have wanted everything for themselves and have cared nothing for the public. The public would be justified in considering neither of them, and it has the power and will to enforce its dictum. Both of your lobbies should be punished. You both, when you had the power, have bulldozed, bribed by political promise, and deluded by economic demonstration. You both have retained clever lawyers to misrepresent the facts and used every element of publicity to delude the public. If the conference report fails, the railroad interests will insidiously work for the defeat of every man who opposed it. If it carries, the American Federation of Labor will use every art known to the demagogue to defeat its supporters. You both have bored and do bore from within. Either of you could win were it not for the fact that each year the United States is fortunate enough to receive new young citizens, young men and women who are not afraid of either of you or of any national enemy, alien or domestic. As fast as either of you buy, bulldoze, intimidate by publicity, or defeat a Member of Congress another will arise to take his place. America may feel safe in the support and reserve that will inevitably follow. Neither capital nor labor, because of the accident of fortune, work, or place, has a right to dictate the policy of the United States with reference to its public utilities, and whether you be 1 or 20 per cent of the total population you never will dictate it. Labor is entitled to the fair and decent things in life, and you railroad owners are entitled to a fair return on the money you have invested after the Government takes the capital, income, and inheritance taxes the people of this country will take from you when they awake to the fact that capital, income, and inheritance ought to be taxed to the living limit to pay the expense of this war, Government expenses, and our public debt. Private ownership is having its second and last chance; the pendulum is swinging narrowly; public ownership, which failed because of its lack of economic foundation, its handicap of McAdoo political vote-getting inefficiency, and the grasping of labor when men with sporting blood fought for $30 per month, will get its second chance under laws that prohibit strikes and confiscate capital if private ownership fails. It makes little difference to most of us which plan is adopted so long as it makes good. The public, and neither capital nor labor, will make the decision. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for these few minutes to explain my position on the labor section of this bill. It is the most far-reaching and important legislation brought to the House since the war.

I want to say that my heart and sympathies are strongly interwoven with labor, and I would not purposely impose a condition upon labor that I would not assume individually. I know that the operators, superintendents, and proprietors are not unfriendly to labor and are always pleased whenever one of their workmen is competent and fitted to assume the position of an officer in their management.

For a number of years I was a manufacturer, and now have a substantial part of my worldly possessions largely wrapped up in agriculture and am to-day the owner and operator of a farm. I mention this also as a result of my individual and sole endeavor, and what I have accomplished can be done better by the least of you or any other poor young man in the land.

I have employed labor all my business life, and have yet to have such a misunderstanding with my workmen as to lead to disruption. I want to do everything I can to encourage the most friendly feeling between capital and labor, because I know that the best interests of both lie in contentment, unity of action, and friendliness between them.

In looking over the field I see the best interests of my country subserved where there is harmony between the employer and employee. The employer, whether a railroad corporation, partnership, or individual, is never seeking for misunderstandings with workmen, and surely from the very incipience the workman is vitally interested in the progress, prosperity, and weal of his employer.

I want to say that there never was a misunderstanding or trouble between an employer and employee or employees that could not be adjusted by amicable settlement. This does not imply that either can have his own way on all he desires. We know even important legislation is arrived at and enacted into law on the give-and-take policy. I make the broad assertion that all labor disputes and misunderstandings can be amicably settled, because finally an adjustment has always been made in every case, and whatever has been settled after trouble had can be settled before.

This railroad legislation not only affects upward of $20,000,000,000 in property, but also the most material and vital welfare of our Nation. Manufacturing, agriculture, and commerce are the avenues through which ebb and flow the vital welfare not only of our Nation but also of the nations of the earth. We wish to excel in all of these. We must have harmony and good understanding and friendliness with the workmen. I am in favor of the workmen quitting at their pleasure. I want every individual and all individuals to have that privilege. I think that the principal reason for employees using the strike is because there is no other course now open to them. So that I am not prejudiced against the strike, ipso. I do not believe that a person should be compelled to work unless it is at his own free will. We have heard a good deal about slavery. That has been abolished in every civilized country of the world. Slavery has been set at rest at the most terrible sacrifice of blood and treasure. But after a workman has left my employ, what is the condition then? After a workman has quit my employment my relations with him have changed. He is no longer associated with me in industry and has no legal right of interference. I am opposed to his interference with my business when he has quit my employ, and he should not undertake to destroy me or my business.

I know the courts uphold peaceful picketing. I hear it announced that there is no such thing as peaceful picketing. I see in nearly every strike a disposition to use force and violence. I am opposed to that. Much is said about our courts, but after 30 years of the best part of my life in court work, I think the courts have gone afield in permitting interference with a business by a person or persons who have severed their relations with it and are now strangers to its concern.

The present bill provides for a peaceful settlement of labor disputes. The employer knows when he is doing right by his employees. If he is not doing right by them he ought to, and if he does not see that his relations with his workmen are wrong, or that he is not paying them a sufficient wage, the present bill opens a way for any and all grievances with a view to amicable and peaceful settlement. It is not a perfect measure. No one claims it is. But it is a step forward for the peaceful settlement of labor and capital differences in business, and I am for it. Capital can not have all it wants. Capital can not shut the door to the just demands of labor. Under the bill either or both can be heard, and if either or both only desire justice they will find in the bill a way to obtain it. I want every workman to better his condition in life. I want him to be a master mechanic. I want him to be a foreman, a superintendent, or a president. It is the boast of our free institutions and the foundation of our society that every poor boy has an equal opportunity to-day to become the master of industry to-morrow.

During my connection and interest in banking for more than 20 years I have been greatly concerned at times over our financial conditions. This concern was not confined wholly to the daytime, but received a good deal of attention when I might otherwise have been asleep. The great concern of the banking fraternity was the question of panics, which at times were so acute that money could not be obtained from the money centers on first-class real estate security or unquestioned municipal or industrial bonds. Indeed, I have seen the financial situation so acute that a bank could not get its own money which it had on deposit with its own correspondents. Finally, the Federal reserve act was adopted, and may I say for myself individually as the head of a national banking institution that since the adoption of the Federal reserve act I have neither spent sleepless nights over the threat of a panic nor so far seen a time when currency could not be obtained for all legitimate needs, and I think this talk at the present time about inflated currency and being on the verge of a panic is, even under present conditions, unwarranted.

I have faith in the ability and intelligence of the American statesmen to rise to the occasion and provide a similar or sufficient legislation to reasonably meet the questions between capital and labor, and in this measure we have a fair beginning. And I hope it will result in such legislation as will be participated in and favored by labor, to the everlasting welfare of the American people. It provides for a quasi tribunal agreed to by the parties in interest. A board mutually agreed to by the parties in interest is the ideal board, and believing it to be the basis of a procedure beneficial to the interests of those concerned and the public, it ought to receive the indorsement of the Members of this great lawmaking body. Then if labor says it is injurious and detrimental to the workmen let it be amended, reenacted, and remodeled to meet the needs and do our best to meet a situation that has been one of the most important questions known to the ages.

I close as I began, expressing my favor for the peaceful, orderly, and mutual settlement of labor disputes, and in the interests of the public and all concerned I am for any law that will bring about this much-needed and desirable purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I gave diligent study to the Esch bill. I gave equal study to the Cummins bill. I hoped that out of the wisdom and labors of the conference committee would be evolved a bill, a report, safeguarding alike the rights and interest of the public and the carriers, which we could all support. Reserving my determination to vote for or against the report until I could carefully investigate it, I carried to its study the hope, the wish, that I could vote for it. I ask you to believe me when I say that I exceedingly regret that I find in the report many provisions so dangerous and unjust; so pronounced in favoritism to the railroads and their security holders; so destructive of the rights of the States over intrastate commerce, which they have exclusively exercised since the beginning of the Government; so regardless of the public interest, with so little protection to the shippers, producers, and consumers; with so little concern for the Treasury and the taxpayers that I am unable to give to it my support. Yet I confess gladly that there are some wise and salutary provisions in the report. I could vote for its adoption with perhaps one or two of the objectionable features in it standing alone, but there are so many throughout the bill it is impossible to bring my mind to its approval.

I know Members, who never before voted for any legislative favoritism to special interest in any form, who, on account of their pronounced opposition to Government ownership, propose to vote for the adoption of this report under the honest delusion that its rejection may possibly mean Government ownership. And, too, there are some who pledged their people to vote for the return of the roads to the owners at the first opportunity. With these gentlemen I have no quarrel, and to them I can only say that I think their fears are not well grounded, and a vote against this report is not a violation of their pledges to their people. But the large majority of those who will vote for the report to-day, according to the speeches made to-day by the advocates of the report, will vote for it because the report accomplishes exactly what its authors intended, the enactment of legislation in behalf of the special interest of the railroads and the investors in their securities at the expense and regardless of the people's interest. With these I make contest. If I felt that the defeat of the report meant further Government control and operation of the railroads, or meant Government ownership, I would reluctantly vote for it in the hope that sooner or later the wisdom, patriotism, and courage of Congress would repeal the provisions to which I object.

I am glad that the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], the able chairman of the committee, in his speech this morning refuted absolutely, once and for all, the railroad propaganda that the defeat of this bill means Government ownership or further control and operation of the railroads by the Government. Mr. ESCH declared this morning that the President by his proclamation will relinquish the roads on March 1, with or without this conference report. So Government ownership is not involved, further Government operation and control are not involved in the fate of this report. Whether the report is adopted or is rejected, the railroads go back on March 1 to the owners.

I want to dissipate another species of insidious propaganda on the part of the railroads and advocates of this bill in order to intimidate Members of the House in voting for the report. It is contended in the press to-day and repeated here that a vote against this report means a surrender to Mr. Gompers and the labor leaders, but that a vote for this bill means that the Member so voting refuses to obey the orders of and surrender his convictions to Mr. Gompers and the labor leaders. I have had no less than three Members of the House tell me that on account of the attitude of the labor leaders they can not afford to vote against this bill, because they would be held up by the press in their districts as surrendering to Mr. Gompers and the labor leaders. In my judgment the arbitrary, the dictatorial, and defiant attitude of Mr. Gompers and a few other labor leaders has lost to the opposition of this report at least a dozen or more gentlemen who otherwise would have voted against it.

I did not vote for the Anderson amendment in the Esch bill because it was an arbitrary, one-sided, labor-leader-made, futile amendment. I prefer the labor proposition in the report to that.

I would go much further than the labor-dispute provisions in the report if I had my way about it. I must confess that I can not understand how and why the labor leaders object or can object to the proposition in the report. It is as harmless as it can possibly be. It is not binding on any. It takes away no right, not even any of the assumed rights of labor or of the labor leaders.

I would establish a tribunal of big, strong, fair-minded men, of equal dignity as that of the Supreme Court of the United States. I would give them salaries equal to those of the judges of the Supreme Court, with long terms of office. I would make ineligible to membership on that tribunal any man who had ever been an officer or director or attorney or agent of a railroad company. I would make equally ineligible to membership any man who had ever belonged to a union or brotherhood or had ever represented as attorney or otherwise a union or brotherhood. I would have it absolutely impartial and disinterested. Such a tribunal would command the confidence of the public, the carriers, and the employees. Before this tribunal the carrier and the employee alike could lay their grievances and disputes with confidence that a just and righteous decision would be rendered. In the first instance, in order to give the carrier and employees a chance to get together among themselves, I would establish adjustment boards such as now exist in the Railroad Administration. If no decision could there be reached within a reasonable time, the carriers and employees, either through themselves or their organization or brotherhood, and the public through the President, would each have the right to take the dispute and issues in controversy before such a tribunal. While such a controversy was pending and until 15 or 30 days after its decision I would make unlawful lockouts or strikes, certainly such as would affect the free transportation of food, fuel, and clothing. [Applause.]

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I regret I can not.

So, gentlemen, my opposition to this report is not in compliance with the demands of Mr. Gompers or any other labor leader. But if Mr. Gompers opposes this report, this is no conclusive reason why I should favor it. Mr. Gompers and the labor leaders are opposed to compulsory military service; but because of that I am not going to favor compulsory military service. I am not going to let Mr. Gompers, because he favors or opposes a proposition, run me on the other side because of any prejudice I might have against him or other labor leaders, and I have none. If Mr. Gompers were to oppose hanging a man for petty larceny I would not be so prejudiced as to favor hanging a man for petty larceny.

Why, gentlemen, every railroad official, every railroad lawyer, every railroad lobbyist, every railroad-security holder, every speculator on Wall Steet in railroad securities, is heart and soul for this report. Yet that is no reason why one who honestly believes that this report ought to be adopted as a wise and beneficent measure should oppose it. With such conviction he should still be in favor of it.

I have heard much in this debate about the railroads being bankrupted if we do not adopt this report. It is asserted that the roads, if we fail to adopt this report, will be bankrupted; that after March 1 ruin and disaster will be their fate and chaos will be the fate of the public. That assertion may fool some new Member here. I have been in Congress for nearly 20 years. There have been no less—since I have been in Congress—than a dozen propositions before this House in the interest of the public which the railroads and railroad lobbies protested against, and every time one of those measures was presented to Congress I heard the cry, "If you pass it you will bankrupt the railroads; you will put them into the hands of receivers."

Well do I remember when, under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, passed through this House the Mann railroad bill in 1910. Every railroad throughout the United States then cried "Bankruptcy, bankruptcy!" They lobbied me and they lobbied every other Member of this House, and they vowed before heaven and earth that if the bill was passed it would mean ruin to the railroads and disaster to the public. I heard that same cry when the workmen's compensation act was under consideration, when the safety appliance act was before us, when the act limiting work hours on railroads was considered, and when the Adamson eight-hour law was before us. Every time the same old cry of bankruptcy, receivership, ruin filled our ears. All those bills were passed—became law—and no bankruptcy, no ruin, no disaster followed.

Another thing: In the last 15 years every time a railroad went to the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase of rates it cried, "If you do not give us an increase of rates we will be bankrupted; we will have to go into the hands of a receiver." They have tried dozens of times to increase rates, making the same plea. While crying "bankruptcy" the statistics showed that the railroads were making larger returns on their investments than they had made in any period of 5 or 10 years since the railroads have been in existence. [Applause.]

They will be bankrupt if you do not pass this bill. And this assertion when they—the stockholders and bondholders—hold in their pockets—or will when settlement is made for the balance of the rentals—$2,000,000,000 of the people's money as clear profits. Over a billion dollars more—three times as much as they possibly could have made if the Government had not taken control of the railroads.

They ask in this bill for a $300,000,000 revolving fund to be loaned to them. They ask for advances to operate during the six months' guaranty period, after the relinquishment of the roads to the owners, which will take at least $250,000,000 or $300,000,000, making for these two items $500,000,000 or $600,000,000. I would suggest a way to the railroads to keep from being bankrupted if we reject this report: Just take $500,000,000 out of this $2,000,000,000 of profits you have in your pockets, or have put into other investments, and with that help operate your roads for the next year or six months. They will then have one and a half billion dollars left out of their profits for the last two years—a billion dollars more than they could possibly have made if they had retained control instead of the Government taking control. Bankrupted! with $2,000,000,000 profits in their hands! No advocate of this report has dared to mention in all this debate these huge profits in the hands of the railroad owners. It would dissipate this plea of bankruptcy.

The President did take the railroads over, but he did not take them over without consulting the railroad managers and officers and security holders. They gave their consent. They wanted—they were anxious for—the Government to take over the roads and operate them during the war. It was to their interest. It proved a godsend of profits to them. They knew they could not make operating expenses under the circumstances, because, with the Government putting billions of dollars of its bonds and certificates of indebtedness on the market they could not sell their railroad securities to raise funds necessary to provide equipment and improvement for the new and increasing war demands. The Government, with their consent and request, took over the railroads, and after 26 months of operation it will pay over to them $2,000,000,000 clear profit, together with necessary improvements and good and full equipments necessary to maintain the railroads in the next two years amounting to over $1,000,000,000, every dollar of which was paid for out of the earnings of the taxpayers and consumers. This bill, or report, funds that more than a billion dollars for 10 years—loans it on 10 years' time to the railroads. So, gentlemen, do not try to convince yourselves that you must vote for this report in order to save the roads from bankruptcy.

My friend Mr. ESCH can not deny, and no man on this conference committee can deny, or has denied, that after the roads have been turned back to the owners they will then have in their pockets, paid by the Government for rentals of the roads, over a billion dollars more than they could possibly have had had they been operating the roads. Nor can he or anyone deny that in addition to the two billions of profits the owners will have more than a billion dollars worth of improvements and equipments advanced by the Government.

The policy of railroads and their security holders to rely on the Government, the Treasury, is begun in this bill or report. It will continue. After the guaranty period, the railroads and their security holders will again come to Congress for loans, for guaranties, and for other favors. They will come with the same cry—ruin and disaster and bankruptcy—and with the same threat of chaos throughout the country, if their demands are not granted. Every man who votes for the adoption of this report will have the identical reasons to vote for the new loans, the new guaranties, the new favors, as he has to vote for this report.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to all the speeches made to-day by the advocates of this report. It was strikingly noticeable, first, that no one declared that this report, if adopted, would be helpful to the people or a benefit to the producers and consumers. Not one asked the House to vote for it on the ground that it was in the public interest. All asked for its adoption on the ground that it would help the railroads—that it would benefit the stockholders and bondholders of the railroads. Some asserted it would not hurt labor. None declared it would not hurt the public. They seemed unmindful of the fact that the only way this report would help the railroads was by hurting the people, that in thus favoring helping the railroads they favored putting an increase of the burdens on the Government and the taxpayers, and on the shippers and producers and consumers of the country. The only possible way this bill can help the railroads is at the expense of the Government, the taxpayers, and the people.

Second. That while professing that by its defeat chaos to the public would ensue, ruin and disaster of the railroads would follow, not one in any way mentioned the fact that these same railroads, that these same stockholders and bondholders, whose interest excite their anxious concern, have in their hands, or will have in their hands when the President pays the balance to them as rentals for Government operation, a clear profit of over $2,000,000,000, and in addition an advancement by the Government of more than a billion dollars for additions, betterments, and equipment, conclusively showing that the railroads, their stockholders, and bondholders are not in financial bankrupting distress.

Third. That not one mentioned the fact that if the railroads are returned on March 1 without the adoption of this report, they will be returned and will operate under the existing interstate-commerce act, an act which is the result of more than a quarter of a century's struggle of the people in Congress with the railroads to adjust the proper relations between the roads and the public, and under which the railroads prospered more than ever before in their history. Even the gentleman from Wisconsin, the distinguished chairman of the committee, asked in his speech if this report was defeated, "What shall the people and the railroads do while legislation is waiting?" He seems to have forgotten that this interstate-commerce act and the Interstate Commerce Commission were in existence. Congress for 30 years, from time to time, had made efforts to adjust the proper relations between the railroads and the public, and the consummation of these efforts resulted in the interstate-commerce act and amendments thereto now on the statute books and under which, if this report is rejected, the railroads will go back to the owners on March 1. Under that act the commission can hear and determine the grievances of the roads as well as those of the public. Under that act freight and passenger rates can be modified, adjusted, or increased if the roads make out a case for such adjustment or increase. But the railroads—their stockholders and bondholders—are not satisfied with that. They must have loans, and guaranties of profits, and guaranties of deficits, and guaranties of investments hereafter, and other special privileges never before granted by law to any other industry or class. And if we do not pass this bill or report they threaten chaos throughout the country.

There never was a time in the history of the railroads that every railroad in the United States made money, that every investor in railroad stocks and bonds realized a profit. At all times some railroads did not make money; some investors in stocks and bonds suffered losses. Heretofore investors in railroads and their securities, like investors in every other kind of business, took the chance of gain or loss. There never was a time when some railroads were not in the hands of a receiver. But with the adoption of this report hereafter the Government, for the first time—and I believe the first Government on earth to do it—practically guarantees—that is, compels the Interstate Commerce Commission to insure—the making of money, more or less, by every railroad in the United States, and the realizing of profits by every investor in railroad stocks and bonds.

It is said by the advocates of this bill or report, by the congressional authors of the bill, that there is no such guarantee. True, there is no such guarantee directly out of the Treasury and pockets of the taxpayers, but there is a practical guarantee that it shall come out of the pockets of more than a hundred million people—out of the pockets of the consumers in the United States. This bill, this report, expressly directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to so adjust or increase the rates throughout the United States, or in the groups or regions, if in the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission it shall so divide the United States, so that it will insure at least an average return of profit of 5½ per cent—and the commission can increase it to 6 per cent, and after two years can increase it to over 6 per cent—upon the aggregate value of the railroads in the United States, or in such groups or regions as the Interstate Commerce Commission may fix.

The supposed or nominal authors of this provision and its advocates vigorously deny that there is any such practical guarantee or assurance. The nominal authors of the bill should not be criticized for this denial, because since they did not conceive and prepare this provision of the report, the same being conceived and prepared by a prominent railroad president, it is quite natural that they would not understand its meaning and effect quite as well as if they themselves were the real authors of it.

Let us see what the bill or report actually provides. Section 422—

(2) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall initiate, modify, establish, or adjust such rates so that carriers as a whole (or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) will, under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment, earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation: Provided, That the commission shall have reasonable latitude to modify or adjust any particular rate which it may find to be unjust or unreasonable, and to prescribe different rates for different sections of the country.

(3) The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon, and such percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission.

Provided, That during the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provisions in whole or in part for improvements, betterments, or equipment—

And after the two years the commission may fix the percentage of return—that is, declare what the minimum fair return will be, but under the necessary implications of this report the commission will never put it at less than 5½ or 6 per cent, and it may be much more. No man with sense can read that provision without knowing that it is a practical guaranty that every railroad shall make money and every investor in stocks and bonds shall realize a profit. The only difference between this and an actual guaranty direct by the Government is that by the actual guaranty the profits or money guaranteed would come out of the Treasury and taxpayers, while under this provision the guaranty or assurance comes out of the pockets of the shippers and producers of the country, but finally out of the consumers. These provisions are mandatory on the commission.

I wish now to direct your attention to another plain proposition contained in section 422. You will observe that the rates of the roads throughout the United States, or in the groups or regions which the commission may fix, must be uniform; that is, when the rates on one road are increased, the same increases shall be had on all other roads in the group, whether such roads require such increased rates or not. In other words, it means that in order to increase the rates on a road that is not making sufficient money or sufficient profits for its investors, the rates upon a road which is making sufficient profits under existing rates shall also be increased. It makes the farmers, merchants, and manufacturers, and other producers living along the line of the road that requires no increase in rates, one making sufficient money or profits under existing rates, pay increased freight and passenger rates in order to help some other road that is not making sufficient profits to make more money. Why should the farmers, merchants, and manufacturers living in my district be forced to pay increased rates when the existing rates are sufficiently high to enable the railroads there to make reasonable profits, in order that some road, perhaps 500 or 1,000 miles away, on which they never traveled a mile nor shipped a pound or bushel of freight may increase its rates to its farmers, merchants, and manufacturers to satisfy the avarice of its investors? Such a proposition from every viewpoint is simply monstrous. It violates every fundamental principle of justice and fair dealing.

Let me direct your attention to another unjust, unfair and, in my opinion, unconstitutional provision in this section 422. It provides that when a road, whether its rates are increased or not, makes a net return of over 6 per cent, that one-half of the excess shall go into a Government fund, controlled by the commission, for the purpose of loaning it to other roads or with which to buy equipment to rent to other roads. In other words, it takes the profits from one road that is well circumstanced, honestly, wisely, and efficiently managed, and gives it by way of loans and rentals to another road, perhaps a competing road, not so economically and efficiently managed. It thus puts a penalty upon honesty and efficiency, and a reward upon inefficiency. This strikes me as being against every element of right and justice. It has the fundamental elements of socialism and communism. It deliberately takes by law the property of one who succeeds and bestows it upon another who fails to succeed. As indicated a moment ago, in my judgment this provision is unconstitutional.

Let me briefly recapitulate some of the objectional features of the bill:

First. It proposes to take from the Treasury, from the taxpayers, in addition to the loss of nearly $1,000,000,000 sustained by the Government, in addition to the over $2,000,000,000 net profits which the Government has or shall have paid the carriers for the 26 months' rental, $300,000,000 as a revolving fund for two years to loan to the Government railroads.

Second. In addition to this it proposes to guarantee, make good, to the extent of indefinite millions, the deficits which the roads not taken under control incurred during the period of Federal control.

Third. In further addition, it proposes to guarantee to the extent of indefinite millions for a period of six months after Federal control is relinquished the so-called standard return, which guarantees to the roads taken over and the roads not taken over the highest rate of profits in the history of railroads.

Fourth. In still further addition, it proposes for the Government to advance, to the extent of the guaranteed returns, loans to the owners of the railroads in order to operate the roads during the six months following relinquishment of control.

Fifth. In the way of advances, guaranties, and loans to the railroads, the taxpayer must pay during the next two years more than three quarters of a billion dollars.

Sixth. The Government must pay in cash its indebtedness to the railroads for rentals, depreciation, and damages, with only a limited right of set-off, while the indebtedness of the railroads to the Government to the extent of over $1,000,000,000 is funded for 10 years—is loaned to the roads on 10 years' time—and in the discretion of the President the indebtedness of the railroads to the Government to the extent of nearly one and a half billion dollars may be so funded.

Seventh. In addition to all this it will be required, according to Mr. Sherley's letter of the 19th of February, to Chairman ESCH, an appropriation of $436,000,000 more than is appropriated in this report to wind up the affairs of Government control, making a total appropriation for all the purposes of the report of more than $1,300,000,000.

Eighth. It practically guarantees that after September 1, 1920, rates shall be so increased on all the roads of the United States that the roads shall have an average net return of at least 5½ per cent on the aggregate valuation of the property of the roads within the United States or within certain groups which the commission may fix. This guaranty of 5½ per cent shall last two years. Thereafter the commission is directed from time to time to fix the per cent of the fair return and to increase freight and passenger rates to meet such return. Of the excess net earnings of 6 per cent of any road, one half shall be put into its reserve fund and the other half is to go to the commission in a Government fund to be loaned thereafter to the roads or to furnish equipment for the roads. This is in the interest solely of the roads, not of the shippers or the public. It makes the merchants, farmers, and producers living along the route of a well-circumstanced and efficient road pay increased freight rates in order that a mismanaged or inefficient road may make higher profits and declare larger dividends. The rates which the shippers and consumers must pay must be measured not by the earnings of the efficient and economically administered roads but by the earnings of the inefficient and extravagantly managed roads. It also takes from one road and gives to another.

Permit me to say here that the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] made on the floor November 19, 1919, against the wisdom and justice of such provisions convinced me then that they were unwise and unjust, and I regret to say that his argument this morning in favor of them failed to convert me to his changed position.

Ninth. Competing roads, with the approval of the commission, are permitted to pool freights and earnings, dish out territory, and merge or combine in order to destroy competition. They, by order of the commission, can be made exempt from the penalties of the antitrust laws, Federal and State.

Tenth. It destroys State control over intrastate commerce and vests the whole power of control over intrastate as well as interstate commerce in one central power in Washington, the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Eleventh. In many respects it undoes the results of more than 25 years of struggle by the people and Congress to equitably adjust relations between the public and the carriers, consummated in the existing interstate-commerce act and amendments thereto. If this report is adopted, the people will have to begin anew another quarter of a century's struggle to right the wrongs which Congress has done them.

Permit me to recapitulate the amounts of appropriations which this report necessitates:

For the purposes of section 202, which provides for the "settlement of matters arising out of Federal control," $200,000,000 is therein appropriated.

For the purposes of this section, $436,000,000 additional must be appropriated in a deficiency bill, according to the letter of Mr. Sherley, Director of Finance of the Railroad Administration, to Chairman ESCH, of date February 19, 1920.

In addition, by this section "all unexpended balances in the revolving fund created by the Federal control act or of the moneys appropriated by the act * * *, approved June 30, 1919," are reappropriated. These "unexpended balances" amount to $450,000,000.

The indefinite amount appropriated by the report to cover guaranties to make good to the owners the deficits of roads not taken over, occurring during the period of control, and the indefinite amount appropriated to cover the guaranty of standard return profits of such roads for six months, are estimated to be $25,000,000.

The revolving fund to be loaned to the railroads during the next two years appropriated by the report amounts to $300,000,000.

The indefinite amount appropriated by the report to make good the guaranty of the "standard return" of all the roads for six months after relinquishment of control will amount to at least $350,000,000.

In my judgment, and I make the prediction, it will require practically the entire amount of the standard return for the six months; that is, $475,000,000, to make good the guaranty.

Whatever the amount shall be it is an absolute gift by the Government to the roads—the deliberate taking out of the pockets of the taxpayers and giving it to the railroad owners.

If the roads lose for the next six months at the rate they have lost under Government operation for the last two months—$100,000,000 a month—it will take $1,075,000,000 to make good the guaranty.

From these figures, this bill, or report, involves a total appropriation of $1,311,000,000 for the railroads!

Remember, gentlemen, that every dollar of these appropriations must come out of the taxpayers of the country. If we include the reappropriations, the amount will be $1,761,000,000! While the losses by the Government on account of Federal control are now estimated at $854,000,000, to be charged off as losses, my prediction is that when final settlement of all matters are had the losses will reach far above $1,000,000,000!

Gentlemen, I say, with all due respect to Mr. MONDELL and the Republican leadership, I have sometimes wondered during this session and the last session why it was that for the first time in 40 years of Republican control the Republican leadership of this House should be convinced that there should be economy, that their party should map out an economy program, and that they should follow it; that they should save to the taxpayers and to the people of this country hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars by cutting all the appropriation bills to the bone. They had really convinced me that they were sincere; that they were going to change the record that they had made during the 40 years of their control of the Government. I and many other Democrats have heartily cooperated with them in reducing appropriations wherever we could reduce. I want to say that I never understood it until I read this conference report, until I saw the leaders of the Republican Party marshaling all their forces to vote for this report. Listen, gentlemen! Do you know that this report, if adopted, will necessitate appropriations out of the Treasury and out of the pockets of 100,000,000 Americans more than $1,300,000,000 to turn over, in one way or another, to the railroads? Oh, they can cut the Agricultural appropriation bill to the bone. They can save three or four or five million dollars there. They can cut the diplomatic bill, they can cut the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill millions of dollars, they can cut to the bone all other appropriation bills. They can cut the soldiers' rehabilitation bill by the millions. They can save money by keeping from the crippled, maimed soldiers of this country what we justly owe them—a decent, comfortable, happy support. All these so-called savings, put together, will not amount to within $500,000,000 of what they will dish out in appropriations for the railroads of this country, on top of the $2,000,000,000 profits, in two years, that these railroads shall have already received from the Government out of the earnings of the taxpayers and the consumers of this country. [Applause.]

Enlisted men who went to the front and risked their lives and their limbs and returned have come into my office and said, "What is Congress going to do for the soldiers who went across?" Men have hobbled into my office from Walter Reed Hospital and have asked, "Can't you do more for the crippled and the maimed than you have done?" I have told them that Mr. MONDELL, the majority leader, had said—and I agreed with him—that the Government owes now $23,000,000,000 of bonds, which costs in interest charges alone $1,000,000,000 a year, an amount greater than we ever collected from all sources of taxation in any year before the war, and it further owes certificates of indebtedness of three or four billion dollars, and the Government is doing all at this time it can do for the soldier; it just can not do more at this time; that all we are able to do is to help to some extent to make life comfortable for the poor fellows who came back with legs off and arms off and eyes out. We are not able to do any more for them in the present financial distress of the Government, said Majority Leader MONDELL.

But now, according to him and other Republican leaders, the Government at once becomes so rich, so generous, that by this report it can pour over $1,000,000,000 into the money chest of the railroads and their investors in addition to the $2,000,000,000 net profits paid them, in addition to the more than $1,000,000,000 it has advanced them for improvements and equipment!

I feel it my duty before concluding to congratulate the authors of the report in that it contains no deception, no evasions, no obscurities, no jokers. There is no attempt to mislead, no intention to deceive. Its terms and provisions are unmistakably plain. No one who reads it can possibly be misled or can possibly misunderstand. Its meaning is audaciously clear. The boldness in making clear by its terms and provisions the real purpose of its authors that this is a report, a bill, to protect the railroads and to promote the interests of their stockholders and bondholders for all time at the expense of the people, is both commendable and attractive. Its purpose and effect is not only to increase to the holders the value of their securities but to insure that holders and investors in railroad securities shall have at all times and at all hazards safe margins of profits, although every other business and every other investor may, in the paralysis of hard times and falling prices, be sustaining a loss. The present holders of railroad stocks and bonds will by this bill, if its design is accomplished, have their securities increased at least $2,000,000,000. Such favoritism to the special interests is unwarranted by any condition or fact. It is vicious and intolerable.

Mr. Speaker, the owners have been clamoring for the return of the roads since the armistice, and now when the Government is ready to return to them the roads, to receive them they charge the Government in gifts, loans, guaranties, and extensions of credits nearly $2,000,000,000, and in addition they demand the surrender by the States of all control over the intrastate commerce, and in further addition they demand their exemption from the antitrust laws.

The stockholders and bondholders of the railroads dictated and the conferees wrote into the report the terms and conditions upon which they would receive their own property, under the threat that if their demands were not granted they would bring chaos upon the country. One of the essential provisions which, as many advocates declared, causes them to support this report was conceived, prepared, and written by a prominent railroad president, chairman of the association of holders of railroad securities, and forced by him and other railroad officials into the report. The distinguished chairman [Mr. ESCH] disclosed this fact in his speech on November 19, presenting the Esch bill. He was then making an argument against the same provision, which was then in the Cummins bill—a stronger argument against it than to-day he has made for it. What railroad president or official, or what stockholder or bondholder wrote the other provisions of the bill, I do not know. The distinguished chairman has not told us, but I do say that this is a railroad bill, for and by the railroads, for and by the stockholders and bondholders. Advocates of the bill have shown by their speeches that this is a fact; that in this bill the Government, the people, the shippers, the producers, and consumers have not had a look in, nor have they had a chance even before the people's representatives to have their interests protected.

Before a vote is cast I propose that the membership of this House should know with certainty some of the unfair, unjust provisions of this report. Let every Member in this House remember that when he votes for this report he is voting—

To increase appropriations more than a billion and a quarter dollars;

To increase the public indebtedness which already amounts to the staggering sum of $26,000,000,000;

To make the already excessively high taxes higher;

To heavily increase freight and passenger rates after the expiration of the guaranty period;

To increase the cost of living;

To take out of the Treasury and pockets of the taxpayers of the country hundreds of millions of dollars for profits of the railroads for six months, which the Government thus far has never done for any other interest, corporation, or individual;

To guarantee from the Treasury and out of the pockets of the taxpayers, the shippers, producers, and consumers of the country that every railroad in the United States, however circumstanced or managed, shall make money, and that every man in the United States who speculates or invests in the stocks and bonds of railroads shall be insured a profit, and this the Government does for no other class or industry, corporate or individual;

To loan direct to the railroads hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money, which it does for no other class or industry;

To guarantee out of the Treasury and the pockets of the taxpayers indefinite millions to make good the deficits and losses of the railroads not taken over by the Government, which may have occurred during the period that the Government operated and controlled other roads;

To make the Government in its settlement with the railroads pay cash for its indebtedness and damages to the roads without the right of set-off, except in the most limited extent, and to extend the indebtedness of the railroads to the Government to the amount of over $1,000,000,000 for 10 years;

To force the farmers, merchants, and manufacturers living on one road to pay increased freight rates on everything they sell or buy to help another road make money on which they never ship a pound of freight;

To take profits from one road and bestow it upon another;

To destroy the rights of the States which they have exclusively exercised since the beginning of the Government to control intrastate traffic, including in such traffic the right to control the distribution of cars, of adjusting proper schedules and connections, of fixing rates, of building depots, and so forth;

To render void all railroad legislation in the States and to nullify the constitution of at least three States with respect to railroads; and

To exempt the railroads and their officials, lawyers, and agents from the penalties of the antitrust laws, which the Government does not do for any other corporation or individual—to make a virtue of an act by railroads, their officials, lawyers, and agents, which is a crime in all others.

When this bill begins to operate, especially after the six months' guaranty period, during which time the taxpayers must sustain the entire burden, and freight and passenger rates begin to increase from 25 to 50 per cent, adding to the burdens of the shippers, the producers, and consumers at least a billion dollars annually; when appropriations for the railroads are increased; when taxes are increased; when the public indebtedness is increased; when the Government losses from guaranties and settlements under this bill are found to be many hundreds of millions more than now estimated; when the cost of living is increased; when the railroad stockholders and bondholders have had their stocks and bonds increased in value at least $2,000,000,000; when Wall Street speculators have added to their fortunes a billion dollars or more; when the people of the States discover that all rights of their States over intrastate traffic have been destroyed and the laws and constitutions of the States relating to carriers have been nullified; when it is ascertained that while all corporations and individuals are subject to penalties of the antitrust laws, the railroads, their officials, lawyers, and agents are absolutely exempt—when all this favoritism and discrimination and all these burdens loom large and heavy before the eyes of an awakened people, I trust that gentlemen who vote for the adoption of this report will be able to solace themselves with the reflection that their votes were directly responsible for them all, and with the further reflection that they knew at the time of casting their votes all of them would be the direct consequences of such votes.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of giving the roads back to their owners, but I am unwilling to give to them, as this report does, the Federal Treasury, the taxpayers, and shippers "to boot." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield the remainder of my time, eight minutes, to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the hour is here when we are to have the opportunity to perform the greatest service to our country and our constituencies that we shall be privileged to perform during this Congress—that of advancing constructive railroad legislation to final enactment.

We are about to perform the most important duty of the time—that of providing legislation for the orderly administration of the railway systems of the Government when, under the President's proclamation recently issued, the railroads return to private management.

If this great measure, with its more than 100 pages of legislation, dealing with every feature and factor of the great transportation systems of the country, were entirely satisfactory in every detail to any one individual I should be suspicious of it, for I realize, as we all must, that no two thoughtful, intelligent men can have exactly the same opinion relative to every one of the hundreds of important features of such legislation.

The very fact that while its fundamental and basic soundness is practically unanimously admitted there is considerable difference of opinion with regard to some of its details affords the best possible evidence that the measure is a wise and workable product of our legislative system—a system under which the best judgment of trained legislators, formed after careful consideration, in the light of the widest possible information subjected to the test of debate and amendment in the two Houses, produces legislation representing the best judgment of a majority of the Congress.

Gentlemen attempt to justify their opposition to the bill on account of the provisions of the labor section, and yet anyone who has given that section careful consideration knows that there is not a line nor a word in it that can reasonably be objected to by any reasonable man; there is not a line of coercion or compulsion in it. If it has any fault at all, it is the fault of furnishing overelaborate provision for the submission and consideration of labor questions, but no man is required to either submit his grievances to or be controlled by the decisions of the agencies which are provided. [Applause.] It leaves every man free to work or quit work, individually or in combination with his fellows, and binds him not at all.

Gentlemen assume to be against the measure on the alleged ground that it contains improper guaranties, and yet it contains no guaranty whatever except the guaranty that wages of the employees shall not be reduced and, for the same period of six months, a guaranty of continuation of the standard return which the roads are now getting. The men who are complaining the loudest against this are the very men who would continue Federal control and the standard guaranty indefinitely. [Applause.]

The responsibility for the passage of this measure is primarily on this side. We are about to determine whether or not as a party in this House of Representatives we are qualified to legislate along constructive lines. [Applause.] But the gentlemen on the other side can not escape individual, though they may attempt to escape party, responsibility. No man on either side can vote against this conference report, praying at the same time that the report may be adopted, and get away with it. The American people—American constituencies—will not be mocked or fooled in matters of this importance. [Applause.]

By irrevocable presidential proclamation the roads will be returned to their owners and private management when the hour of midnight strikes the last day of this month, and the question before us is, Shall they return under legislation that will make possible the successful operation of the roads and the furnishing of adequate transportation facilities to the people, or shall they return under circumstances certain to create chaos, produce confusion, and bring nation-wide disaster? We are called upon to decide which it shall be. Shall we perform our duty? [Applause.]

No man can afford to vote against this conference report except the man—if any such there be—who is so enamored of public ownership that he is willing to invite nation-wide distress and disaster, beginning the 1st of March, in the vain hope that out of the wreck will come Government ownership.

The issue is so great, the interests involved are so vital, that no American constituency anywhere will allow any man to get away with hairsplitting, pusillanimous objections to some minor provision in this bill. The hour has struck in the orderly processes of our Government when a great piece of constructive legislation, having passed the tests of committee consideration and been placed upon the legislative anvil, is now before us in its finished and perfected form. The responsibility rests on us to say whether or not, notwithstanding stout and selfish opposition, we shall rise to the occasion, assume the responsibility the people have placed upon us, and vote for this conference report and against every motion that shall be made to delay the enactment of this wise, sound, constructive legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the order of the House the previous question is considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is considered as ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to recommit the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY moves to recommit the conference report on bill H. R. 10453 to the committee on conference.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 229, not voting 28, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the conference report:

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa (for) with Mr. DOMINICK (against).

Mr. SCULLY (for) with Mr. CLARK of Missouri (against).

Mr. FORDNEY (for) with Mr. SUMNERS of Texas (against).

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana (for) with Mr. DAVEY (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. SEARS.

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. SCHALL with Mr. HUDSPETH.

Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. BELL.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. FERRIS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3654. An act to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. DOMINICK (at the request of Mr. WHALEY), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ELLSWORTH, indefinitely.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. McFADDEN. On the rural credit bill that I introduced to-day.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I made the reservation because I thought the gentleman made the request to extend his remarks on the conference report. That had all been arranged for. I have no objection to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CAMPS AND CANTONMENTS.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, for printing in the RECORD under the rules.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] reserved all points of order on the conference report asked to be printed under the rules. Can he do that?

The SPEAKER. The proper time to reserve points of order on a conference report is after the report has been read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the time to make the point of order?

The SPEAKER. It certainly is; and the Chair has not been called upon to decide whether a reservation made in advance is valid or not. It is the proper time after the report has been read, and it would be well to make it at that time.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 23, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting request for proposed legislation to authorize and empower officers of the naval service to serve under the Republic of Peru, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11927), as passed by the Senate February 11, 1920, to increase the efficiency of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation, reported the same with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be disagreed to and that the House agree to a conference, accompanied by a report (No. 666), which said bill and report were referred to the Union Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BEE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4184) for the relief of C. V. Hinkle, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 667), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

1791. By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petition of the Votes for Women League, of North Dakota, indorsing and urging the passage of Senate bill S. 3259; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 23, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee with the worship that is ever awakened in our hearts and minds when we reflect upon the name of our first great President. When Thou didst call into being this great spiritual Empire of the West, Thou didst incarnate the principles of its institutions in the life of a man. Thou didst not give to us a king nor a dictator, but a man, and equipped him with spiritual powers for leadership.

We bless Thee that Thou hast ever raised up leaders to meet the exigencies of the times to lead us safely through the turmoil of the years. We bless Thee for their influence that remains with us rising out of the mists of the past, not only as a blessed memory but as a present influence and power to direct our steps and to guide us in the way of truth.

We thank Thee for the legacy that we have received from the name of George Washington and for the final expression of his thought and care for his country when he taught us that if we are to maintain our institutions of freedom we are to maintain them upon the basis of fixed standards of morality, which standards are possible only upon the basis of religion.

So we pray that with the thought of God always in our minds we may go forward with our task to complete the work so well begun by the fathers of this Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. SMOOT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 3654) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	Lenroot	Robinson
Ball	Glass	Lodge	Sheppard
Beckham	Gore	McKellar	Shields
Brandegee	Gronna	McLean	Simmons
Calder	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Harris	Myers	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Colt	Henderson	New	Sterling
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Kellogg	Owen	Underwood
Elkins	Kendrick	Page	Wadsworth
Fernald	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	King	Pittman	Warren
France	Kirby	Pomerene	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Ransdell	Williams

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained by illness. I ask that this notice may continue for the day.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. EDGE] on account of illness in his family.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] are absent on public business, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, under an order of the Senate and in accordance with a long-established and honorable custom Washington's Farewell Address will now be read. Under the previous designation by the Vice President, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will read the address.

Mr. POMERENE read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquillity at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discrimination,—northern and southern,—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations: they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamenal principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions: that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country: that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism—but this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchial cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominte in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundations of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak, toward a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But the jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people under an efficient government the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progess, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES,
17th September, 1796.

SHALL THE UNITED STATES TAKE A HAND IN EUROPEAN POLITICS?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in connection with the farewell address, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD a matter that I think is closely connected with it and involves the advice so magnificently given in it, to wit, an article printed in yesterday's New York Tribune entitled, "Shall the United States take a hand in European politics?" by Frank H. Simonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Tribune, Sunday, Feb. 22, 1920.]

SHALL THE UNITED STATES TAKE A HAND IN EUROPEAN POLITICS?—THIS QUESTION, WITH ITS MOMENTOUS POSSIBILITIES, MUST SOON BE SETTLED BY AMERICA—THERE IS AN INSISTENT DEMAND, ESPECIALLY IN ENGLAND, THAT WE LEND A HAND.

(By Frank H. Simonds.)

"In view of the very grave crisis which is rapidly developing in Europe, it is obviously not merely the right but the duty of every American to examine the conditions now existing there and to answer the insistent demand that the United States return to Europe, with a full recognition of what the circumstances mean for him and for his country.

"It is unmistakable that, less than a year after it was signed, the treaty of Versailles has broken down and its revision has become the clear demand of the two great European nations that, in association with us, won the war, but the direction this revision should take is totally different in French and in British minds. Moreover, it is from British quarters that the demand for the American return to Europe is most insistent. The British, not the Government directly, but very large numbers of Englishmen of influence and distinction, are asking that in view of the approaching break between the recent allies over the ever-widening European anarchy America once more intervene to prevent general chaos, and even economic and political disintegration.

THE ISSUES AT STAKE.

"In this situation it is essential to comprehend the issues at stake neither from a British nor French angle but from an American point of view, since very heavy responsibilities and immediate and eventual expenses of unprecedented character are to be asked of us as a circumstance in our resumption of participation in European affairs.

"To begin at the beginning, it is clear that the World War was the result of German aggressions. France was actually assailed by a German declaration of war, Britain menaced alike in her security and her honor by the invasion of Belgium and the attack upon France. Such being the conceded fact, we may agree that there are two things which France and Britain were entitled to look for in the treaty of peace ending the war, which was for them victorious—namely, security against a new aggression and reparation for the destruction of property by the Germans in the course of their unprovoked assault upon their neighbors.

"Now, there has been a great deal of misinterpretation in America of both the British and the French demands on these two scores, and not less misunderstanding in France and Britain of each other's demands. Not unnaturally, Americans, reading what the British said of the French and what the French said of the British claims, at certain stages have concluded that actually the Paris conference was little more than a scramble for loot. In spite of this result of Anglo-French asperities it is unmistakable that the claims of both our associates for security and reparation were justly founded upon unassailable right.

BRITAIN'S SECURITY.

"Now, by the treaty of Versailles Britain obtained security in this fashion: The elimination of the German fleet was ordered; actually it was sunk by the German crews, but only to escape destruction or division by the Allies; in addition, the German colonies, which had been used as the bases for attacks upon the British colonies, and were in addition details in the German scheme for building a German empire beyond the seas on the ruins of the British Empire, were, in the main, taken from Germany, an act which represented security, and placed in British hands, which represented reparation. Of course I am speaking of the title to these colonies; the British were in possession when the war ended.

"Thus, Britain obtained absolute security against German naval rivalry, against colonial attack, and she also acquired very valuable real estate. In addition, she procured the destruction of Germany's naval base at Heligoland and of the fortifications of her harbors. Security thus went to the length of disarming her foe, who lies completely at the mercy of the British fleet, both as to intercourse with the world by sea and in the matter of ports. Finally, to the reparation incident to the acquisition of the German colonies there was added the allocation of the larger portion of the German merchant marine to balance the depredations of the German submarines. There also remains to the British the reserved right to participate in the money indemnity, to be fixed later, to the extent of many millions; but this is for the moment immaterial.

By virtue of the treaty of Versailles, then, Britain did, in fact, have security which was absolute, and, in addition, in tonnage and colonies, things of great money value, chargeable to reparation, directly and indirectly. No legitimate criticism can be leveled at the British for insisting upon these things; they were entitled to them in view of the circumstances of the outbreak of the war, the character of the campaign waged by the Germans, and, lastly, in view of German purposes as disclosed during the war. I pass over the British acquisition of Mesopotamia and other Turkish territories, but they fall in the same category and increase British material gains in the war, which must be set against the material losses.

OPPOSED FRANCE'S WISHES.

"Turning now to the case of France, it will be seen that the same benefits were due to that country as a result of the victorious war. Indeed, they were not only due but due in larger measure in view of the fact that the war had disclosed that French insecurity against German aggression was far greater than British, and the costs of German destruction had been infinitely greater, the ruin of France being a far more expensive and dangerous wound than the sinking of the British ships.

"But in the Paris conference the French were faced at once by the opposition of both the United States and Great Britain to the French estimate of what constituted security. All French soldiers, most French statesmen, agreed that France could only be secure against a later German attack if the Rhine barrier were held against the German. They argued that this alone would be a precaution commensurate with that taken by the British eliminating the German Navy, seizing the German colonies, and destroying the German sea bases and harbor defenses.

"The French did not propose annexation outright, but they advocated the creation of a buffer state, guaranteed by the three allies, Britain, France, and the United States; they only proposed annexation, or rather occupation, which would in the end amount to annexation, provided that the United States and Britain would not guarantee this Rhine barrier. Moreover, when Lloyd-George and President Wilson did guarantee it, by the terms of the Anglo-French-American treaty, the French withdrew all demands to annexation or to occupation beyond that time necessary to enforce German compliance with the treaty of Versailles.

"But it must be observed that the French resignation of the Rhine barrier was, in the nature of things, conditional, not absolute. It was conditioned upon the pledge of the President and the prime minister to provide a substitute which should in all respects constitute as good a guarantee of French security. The French could not, and no one was justified in asking them to, abandon their claims for security, while the British claims were fully and completely met by the treaty provisions.

"Turning now to the question of reparation, the French asked both money indemnities, to reconstruct their ruined regions, as Britain had asked money payments for far less direct injuries, and they asked the title to the Saar Valley coal mines, in compensation for the destruction of the Lens mines by the Germans, and the occupation by them of the district for a period of time, their evacuation to be followed by a plebiscite to determine whether the inhabitants preferred independence of the sort Luxemburg possesses, union with France, or a return to Germany. In the first place, the French asked annexation outright, but they were faced again with British and American opposition and compelled to compromise.

BOTH ARE PAYMENTS.

"But it will be seen that ships and Saar Valley fall into the same category, in the sense that both are immediate German payments for German destruction. Moreover, the British did acquire the ships and, in addition, they acquired the title to the German colonies, which represented valuable real estate. The French, on the other hand, found that both in the matter of security and in the matter of immediate reparation, while British claims were satisfied without qualification, French demands, based on greater peril and vastly larger losses, were at once modified.

"So much for the examination of the situation in the past. The review may be concluded by the statement that the main claim of France for reparation was included in the financial clauses of the treaty, but the certainty of repayment depended upon many contingent circumstances. All that the French could be sure of was what they occupied. I make no mention of Alsace-Lorraine, because it was the view of all the allied nations, written into the armistice, that this constituted not reparation but restitution—the return to France of something which had been stolen. It was not a concession to security nor to reparation, but an act of justice.

"It will be urged that the disarming of Germany and the destruction of her fortifications along the Rhine constituted an equivalent to the elimination of her fleet, but this is only measurably true. It is a matter of years to construct a fleet, and construction can not be disguised, but it is not in the least the case with an army; and the familiar example of what Prussia accomplished under the nose of Napoleon I is the best demonstration of this fact. If Germany undertook to create a new fleet, Britain would be at once advised, and her control of the sea would enable her at once to bring Germany to terms. No such remedy would lie in French hands, nor would the warning be similarly prompt.

"It will be seen, then, that the treaty of Versailles substantially honored the just claims of Britain in the matter of security and reparations, but that it did nothing like so much for France. Indeed, the French might justly regard the treaty as a failure if it were not for the Anglo-French-American treaty of guaranty. Now, the Anglo-American guaranty has fallen by reason of the course of events in the United States Senate, and every well-informed Frenchman knows that the United States is not prepared to guarantee, at the risk of a new war in Europe, either the Rhine barrier or French security. Out of this situation develops the French demand for the revision of the treaty of Versailles, but, if one may use an Americanism, the demand is for a revision 'upward.'

A COMMON RUIN.

"In Britain, on the contrary, the tendency is in exactly the opposite direction. Many Englishmen, speaking with great authority and from recognized conviction, assert that the economic phases of the treaty of Versailles involve the economic ruin of Germany, and assert that this ruin will involve all of Europe and not impossibly the United States. They therefore demand that the treaty shall be revised in favor of Germany—not out of immediate tenderness for Germany, but to save the economic, the political, and the moral fabric of European civilization.

"And it is at this point that America becomes involved. These Englishmen argue that revision of the treaty can be had only if America uses her great financial and consequent moral influence to force such a revision. Moreover, they argue that the first step America must take is to forgive her recent associates in the war their indebtedness to her of $10,000,000,000. By indirection this cancellation of debts will contribute to lessening the weight of the terms imposed upon Germany, because upward of $6,000,000,000 or $7,000,000,000 of this debt is owed us by Belgium and France. Moreover, both Belgium and France owe Britain large sums, and if we cancel Britain's indebtedness to us she will cancel that of Belgium and France to her. To start with, then, the United States will pay this $10,000,000,000 in the shape of canceled indebtedness, which will, in the end, reduce Belgian and French claims upon Germany by this amount, and thus open the way to a salvation of Germany economically.

"Now, having taken this first step, the second for the United States follows logically. We shall still hold the purse strings, and we may, by using future loans as a stick to fortify our moral authority, demand that all the European nations, but chiefly France and Belgium, who are most concerned, reduce their claims for money reparation from Germany to such a total as will be within German resources to pay, and remain not only solvent, but a useful unit in European economic, political, and moral society. But the money phase is only one circumstance; we are in addition to undertake to compel France, Italy, and Poland, and other European nations to modify their territorial as well as their economic demands.

THE CRITICAL POINT.

"Now, this is the critical point: We are to tell the French to abandon all their territorial claims in the Saar Basin; we are to set our faces against their renewed demand for the Rhine barrier—that is, we are to compel France to resign the essential elements in her claims to the upper Silesian region, where the population is Polish—and we are to take equally drastic steps in the case of Italy, not merely in the Adriatic but in the upper Trentino region, where the population is German, but the country itself is on the Italian side of the Alps and has been the pathway of invasion into Italy since time immemorial.

"This means only one thing: It means that the United States is to undertake to compel the French and the Italians and the balance of the European races which fought Germany to surrender not merely their claims for reparation but their demands for security in the interests of the preservation of European civilization, the major part of all these sacrifies, including our own $10,000,000,000, to be dedicated to the restoration of Germany and the rescue of that country from the consequences of her attack upon European civilization.

"But it will be noted that there is no suggestion in this British proposal that the United States use its commanding influence to compel the British to restore the German colonies or the German ships, the one security and reparation, the other outright reparation comparable with the taking of the German merchant marine by the British. Yet it can be maintained, and many Germans argue that the merchant marine would be of more immediate value in rehabilitation than the Saar Valley.

"So much for the British proposal; now for the French. The French base their claim for a revision of the treaty of Versailles on the obvious fact that it has not provided them with any real security, and the prospects of reparation grow less and less with each succeeding week. They fortify their claims by the just recitation of the fact that they merely consented to resign their claims to the Rhine barrier on the receipt of a promise by the United States and Great Britain that their armies and fleets would be a substitute barrier; that armies and fleets would be organized to the necessary strength and held in the necessary readiness to move simultaneously with the arrival of the news that Germany had violated the Rhine barrier. This promise having lapsed, the French argue that they have now reacquired freedom of action.

WHERE IS DUTY?

"In the face of these circumstances, what is American duty? What must be American policy? Obviously it will not do to take the British side of the controversy. We can not sanction the British demand for security and reparation and reject the demand of the French and the Italian, which rest on a sounder basis, in the matter of security, because even with the German fleet in being Britain was not invaded. Such a course would be neither right in itself nor could it have any other consequence than to destroy all our moral influence on the Continent at once by confirming the well-established suspicion—the fruit of Paris events—that there is an Anglo-Saxon partnership to dominate the world.

"Nor can we assail both the British and the French, as well as the Italian, claims for security, expressed for the British in the terms of German colonies, for the French in the Rhine barrier, and for the Italians in the bulwark of the Alps, without driving very large sections of popular opinion and political leadership in each of these countries into common accord against us. Above all, we can not ask the French to retire from the Rhine, the Italians from the Alps, the Poles from the White Russian marshes, without undertaking to guarantee the French against the Germans, the Italians against the Slavs, and the Poles against the Russians, Bolshevist or nationalistic, with the full power of our war-making resources. No honorable American could think of passivity if the United States having persuaded the French to retire from the Rhine or the Poles from the Pripet Marshes, the Germans or the Bolshevists were able in consequence to penetrate French or Polish soil. We would be bound in honor, and we would have to undertake obligations in treaties to guarantee these peoples against such contingencies before we could obtain a respectful hearing.

"Consider the situation of the United States if to-morrow the Government should consent to the surrender of the $10,000,000,000 indebtedness and agree to make new loans, and then on the strength of the influence accruing to it as the holder of the purse strings it should undertake to compel a remaking of the treaty of Versailles. It would have to begin by declaring that all the acquisitions of the several European nations resulting from the victory must again be laid on the table for a revision, subject to American approval. It would have to say to the French, let us assume, 'You must quit the Rhine barrier.' To the British, 'You must turn back the German colonies.' To the French, 'You must surrender the Saar Basin.' To the British, 'You must agree to the return of the German ships.' To the Italians, 'You must retire from the upper Adige, from Albania, the Greek Islands, from Asia Minor.' To the Poles, 'You must give up upper Silesia, Vilna, the lands east of the Bug.'

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN?

"What would be the consequence? Who can mistake it? The French would give up the Rhine barrier if we once more agreed to substitute our Army. The Poles would come back from the White Russian territory if we would guarantee their ethnic frontier and promise them financial assistance. Even the Italians would make concessions to our military and financial capacities. As to the British, possibly they might consent, although my judgment is that with perfect justice this American dictation would be rejected by the British Empire, mother country and colonies alike.

"As a result of all our efforts Germany would receive back her Silesian and Saar coal regions, her Rhine territories, her commercial fleet, her colonies, and the Danzig 'corridor' would be abolished. She might then be willing to make financial reparation to France and Belgium, reduced by our $10,000,000,000 and by our other loans, but it would be incumbent upon us to collect it. All the European nations would quite justly hold us as surety for Germany.

"Of course, this leads to absurdity, but how can one stop short of absurdity once the United States embarks upon a policy of world regulation? We must do the whole job or none; we must assume the same tone and manner with each nation. We can not consent to the acquisition of complete security and measurable reparation by the British while the French remain exposed to German attack, the Poles open to the Bolshevists. The moment several nations feel that we are 'playing favorites' our influence is at an end on the moral side. But this means that our first quarrel will be with the British and our second with the French, while our present quarrel with the Italians, or rather theirs with us, growing out of a similar interference, will only be accentuated.

"As to the wisdom of our country not merely canceling the $10,000,000,000, which is at least arguable, but of embarking on a new series of loans, all of them designed in the last analysis to prevent European anarchy by rehabilitating Germany, it seems to be dubious in the extreme. It certainly means the imposition of very great burdens upon the people of this country, and the sole possible compensation must be the opportunity to play the dangerous rôle of constable to creation.

"Further than this, my own experience at Paris by no means convinced me that the United States possesses the knowledge or the experience in European matters to enable it to act with wisdom or even justice in settling European matters. We certainly agreed to grave injustices, we unmistakably supported British views and opposed French, in a measure, because the British were wise enough, as well as gracious enough, to fall in with our own. We did not call into question certain British acquisitions which stood or fell on the same principle that justified or condemned French or Italian acquisitions which we violently opposed. We surrendered to Japan and remained obdurate in the presence of Italy, not because the moral circumstances were different, but because we had lost Italy's support for the League of Nations and feared the loss of Japan's with the consequent collapse of the scheme, if we took a similarly high tone.

COLLISION CERTAIN.

"In sum, in my judgment wise American policy can not be a further and much increased participation in the settlement of purely European questions. The present invitation carries with it the certainty of collision with France and Great Britain. Bismarck undertook to play the part of 'honest broker' at the Congress of Berlin and in the end was compelled to support Austria against Russia and thus make inevitable the Franco-Russian alliance. With a million times less skill or experience, could we hope to be more fortunate? Are the results of the recent experiment such as to tempt Americans in new ventures?

"I shall have failed entirely in this article if I have left the impression that I regard British and French claims for security as unjust, immoral, chauvinistic. On the contrary, they seem to me to be exactly the claims which the German course in the recent war and the German policy in the last century made inevitable. But because British and French circumstances are dissimilar and therefore their demands for security are also unlike, I can not see any excuse for the United States to champion or accept the British and oppose or reject the French. If we are to reject the French we must in justice reject the British.

NOT OUR DUTY.

"But as an American I can not accept the idea that it is the duty of my country, at the cost of treasure and of blood, to undertake to restrain these historical instincts of two great nations, much less to accept one and reject the other. Duties we may have toward Europe, but the sum of these duties does not seem to me to amount to the obligation to undertake world regulation, with all its risks, to undertake to do for the highest moral purposes what the German undertook to do for the lowest and basest purposes nearly six years ago.

"On the contrary, my judgment is that the national instinct underlying all else in the controversy which has been going on in this country for many, many months over the League of Nations has been founded upon a shrewd realization upon the part of the mass of American people that it was unwise, unsafe, fraught with incalculable peril for this country to assume to direct or dictate the settlement of purely European questions, even if these questions had a certain secondary influence upon American conditions.

"If one could be sure that Germany and Russia were henceforth certain to fall in with Western ideas, if one could be sure that the new Germany which is to come would be totally different from all other Germanies which the world has known, then there would be no question of providing France and Britain with securities. The alienation of German colonies and the occupation of the Rhine barrier would be unnecessary and the British and French arguments supporting such policies would lose their chief merit.

"But no such certainty exists or can exist. Therefore French and British statesmen are bound to insist upon gauaranties of their security, however harmful to Germany, and thus to political and economic peace. It has become fashionable to refer to the treaty of Versailles as a 'Carthaginian peace.' But this, after all, is mere language. Carthage and Rome represented two civilizations, two cultures, and between the two there was a deadly struggle for world supremacy. If Rome had lost we should now talk of a Roman peace, for the terms would have been the same. But, granted that we know little of the Punic world, it is true that what little we do know encourages the conviction that the victory of Rome was a triumph for real civilization, while Roman defeat would have been a disaster for the world.

"The same is true, in my judgment, as between Germany and her British and French foes, even though the terms of the treaty of Versailles carry with them the doom of Germany as we have known that country." (Copyright, 1920, the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

MAGNA CHARTA (S. DOC. NO. 232.)

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to take advantage of this occasion to ask unanimous consent to have the Magna Charta printed as a Senate document, together with a series of notes, article by article. Magna Charta is the foundation of English liberty and jurisprudence. It is the corner stone of American liberty and jurisprudence. Article 39, to my mind, is the finest fruit of 60 centuries of human struggle and evolution. I was surprised the other day to find it impossible to secure a copy of the Great Charter in the Senate Library. It is not generally available, and for that reason I make this request, and I wish to have as large a number printed as the rule permits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to have Magna Charta printed as a public document. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of Parkersburg Post, No. 15, American Legion, of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of Gill I. Wilson, father of Joseph Volney Wilson, killed in action in France on October 23, 1918, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the National Wool Growers' Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the indication of substitutes for virgin wool in the manufacture of wearing apparel, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3950) to provide for the promotion of physical education in the United States through cooperation with the States in the preparation and payment of supervisors and teachers of physical education, including medical examiners and school nurses, to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 3951) granting a pension to Mary S. Wilkins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3952) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charleston, in the State of Missouri; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KNOX (by request):

A bill (S. 3953) for the relief of certain estates; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNOX (for Mr. PENROSE):

A bill (S. 3954) providing for the refund of duties collected on flax-preparatory machines, parts, and accessories imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CAPPER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,800 for salary of assistant superintendent press gallery and $1,200 for salary of messenger for service to press correspondents, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the conference report upon House bill 10453, the railroad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report upon House bill 10453. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled, "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

[The conference report appears in the proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, the 18th instant, pp. 3043–3059.]

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, with the submission of the conference report on the railroad bill to the Senate for its consideration, the Committee on Interstate Commerce enters the final stage of more than eight months of continuous, unremitting, difficult labor.

I hope it is appropriate for me to acknowledge publicly my appreciation of the fidelity, intelligence, and persistence with which my associates upon the committee have prosecuted their long and arduous task. First upon the subcommittee, then upon the full committee, and afterwards in conference, these men have exhibited a grasp of the subject, a toleration and forbearance, and an industry without parallel in my observation.

It has been most gratifying to me and I am sure it will be to you to know that throughout all our prolonged, intense, and comprehensive discussions there has never appeared even the slightest approach toward partisan feeling, and whatever there is in the bill worthy of commendation is due just as much to the Democratic members as to the Republican members. All of them have labored with equal loyalty for the public interest, rigidly excluding all other considerations.

Mr. President, in submitting the conference report upon H. R. 10453, the railroad bill, I shall not attempt to review in detail the many differences which have been composed by the conference committee and which did not involve underlying principles of railway regulation. A very large part of the two bills as they passed the Senate and House had a common purpose and differed only in what may fairly be called details, although a large proportion of these details were of great importance and required the most painstaking consideration. In this field I may mention the provisions relating to the adjustment and settlement of the accounts between the Government and the railway companies growing out of Federal control, the funding of indebtedness due from the railway companies to the Government, the extent to which immediate set-offs should be allowed, the payment of deficits to railways which were dismissed from Federal control prior to July 1, 1918, the guaranty for six months after March 1, 1920, and the arrangement for proper remedies against the United States in causes of action arising during Federal control. All these things presented tremendous difficulties and imposed upon the committee an inquiry into every phase of Government operation. Happily, however, we have been able to reach a conclusion which is fairly satisfactory to the conferees—a conclusion which lies somewhere between the positions taken by the Senate and House with regard to these most important subjects. There were numerous controversies of a vital character with respect to the sections which may properly be called amendments to the act to regulate commerce, such as the car-service act, the regulation by Federal authority of the issuance of railway securities, the power on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission to deal with instances of congestion in transportation by diversion of traffic, the common use of terminals and other facilities, the division of earnings and of joint rates for the protection of short-line roads, the procedure in cases of conflict between interstate and State rates, and many other very much needed modifications of the present law. I will not comment upon the changes which have been agreed upon in such matters, for they were thoroughly discussed while the bill was on its passage through the Senate and the conference report does not depart from the Senate bill sufficiently to warrant a review. I hold myself, however, in readiness to answer any question that may be propounded touching these less distinctive points of difference between the action of the Senate and House.

It is, I think, my duty to call your attention specifically to those parts of the two measures wherein the differences were fundamental and could not be settled by compromise, but, in the nature of things, had to be reconciled either by the Senate or House receding from the action it had taken.

First. The bill, as it passed the Senate, proposed the organization of an additional tribunal, known as the transportation board, to which were to be committed certain very important functions in the administration of the law. I need not enlarge upon these functions nor further describe them, because the Senate conferees found it necessary to recede from this provision; and in the future, as in the past, the Interstate Commerce Commission, increased by two members, will exercise all the authority conferred by the law for the regulation and control of railways.

Second. The Senate bill provided, under certain conditions, for Federal incorporation of railway companies, either by reincorporation of existing companies or original organization under Federal law. The House conferees were so inflexibly opposed to this principle that in order to reach any conclusion the Senate conferees were compelled to yield; and the bill as now reported contains no authority for Federal incorporation in any form.

Third. The Senate bill proceeded upon the declared theory that in order to make rate regulation completely successful and absolutely just as between the public and railway owners the railway properties of the United States should be divided for ownership and operation into not less than 20 nor more than 35 systems, preserving fully the competition in service now existing and the established channels of trade and commerce. It provided that the transportation board should, after hearing, make and publish a plan of consolidation, that for seven years consolidations in harmony with the plan so prescribed should be voluntary, and that thereafter necessary measures should be taken by the Government to complete the execution of the plan. It further prescribed that in all consolidations the capitalization of the consolidated companies should not exceed the actual value of the railway properties involved in the consolidation.

In so far as the Senate bill contemplated compulsory consolidations, the Senate conferees have found it necessary to recede, but the real principle embodied in the Senate bill has been preserved. The substitute found in the conference report upon this subject provides that the commission shall, as soon as practicable, adopt and publish a plan for the consolidation of our railways into a limited number of systems, with the same requirements as to competitive service and the observance of existing routes of commerce as were laid down in the Senate bill. With the approval of the commission, guided solely by the public interest, consolidations are to be permitted, but they are to be voluntary and must be consistent with and in furtherance of the plan adopted by the commission. Furthermore, in whatever consolidations may take place, the properties consolidated must be treated as of their true value, and the commission is charged with the duty of determining this value under the valuation act of 1913.

While I regret that the House conferees could not be brought to a complete acceptance of the Senate bill upon this subject, I feel that the provisions agreed upon are a tremendous advance toward the desired end, and will eventually result in such a readjustment of our railway systems that it will be possible for the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish charges for the service of transportation that will fairly sustain all our railways without giving to any one of them an excessive return upon the value of the property rendering the service.

Fourth. That part of the Senate bill known as "section 6" was accepted by the House conferees with two principal modifications. The entire section was rewritten and now appears in the conference report as section 15a of the act to regulate commerce, but while its phraseology has been somewhat changed it is essentially the same, with two exceptions, namely, the period in which the 5½ per cent basis is to continue as a direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission has been reduced from five years to two years, and the division of excess earnings or income instead of being one-half between 6 and 7 per cent of the value of the property and one-quarter above 7 per cent is now one-half to the company and one-half to the Government throughout.

Inasmuch as this section has been the subject of the grossest misrepresentation on the part of some critics and the most mysterious misunderstanding on the part of many sincere people I deem it my duty to submit a brief comment upon it. In order to prejudice it among the people it has been termed "a guaranty of income." This is not true in any sense of that phrase. There is a guaranty in the bill of the standard return and against deficits, continuing for six months after the railways are returned to their owners, but this was in substance in both bills and apparently has not excited any considerable criticism, for in view of the circumstances its necessity is obvious.

Section 6, now 15a, is, however, not a guaranty, nor does it approach a guaranty even remotely. Not a dollar is to be paid from the Treasury on account of its provisions, and no obligation whatever on the part of the Government is created. It is a direction to an administrative tribunal that in so far as it may be practicable the commission shall make rates that will yield a net operating income of 5½ per cent upon the true value of the railway property held for and used in the service of transportation considered as a whole. The assumption of this basis by the commission does not promise to any given railway company any given net operating income, for the income depends wholly upon the location of the railway, the population it serves, the volume of its traffic, and the conditions under which it is operated. Under this basis some railways will earn 2 per cent upon the value of their property, some 4 per cent, some 6 per cent, some 8 per cent, a few more than 8 per cent, and a few less than 2 per cent. This basis takes no account of either stocks or bonds, but is concerned solely with the value of the property as a whole. It is a basis about $50,000,000 less in the aggregate than the basis of 1917 and about $50,000,000 more than the basis of the test period as defined in the Federal-control act. To call it a guaranty is to be either maliciously false or stupidly ignorant. Its value is found in its tendency to give stability to railway credit in the unsettled period through which we are passing. It is a legislative declaration of a rule by which we may assume the commission will be guided in the difficult duties which are to be immediately imposed upon it.

It gives the investing world the assurance that the commission will, during these two years, make an honest effort to adjust rates upon this basis. There are enough uncertainties attending the administration of the law without adding to them an uncertain basis of rate making. For the sole purpose of showing how absurd it is to speak of the rule as a guaranty, I may be permitted to suggest that in applying it the commission must conjecture or estimate the volume of traffic which the railroads will carry in a future year, and, furthermore, it must conjecture or estimate the cost of maintaining and operating the railways during a time in the future.

If this provision accomplishes its purpose it will not be accomplished because it gives to railway companies undue profit but because it establishes a measure of confidence in the minds of those who have money to invest, which is now, unfortunately, lacking. I take it for granted that the chief desire of the American people is that their commerce may be supplied with adequate facilities for transportation. The country has suffered more in the last year on account of the inability of producers to reach their markets freely and promptly than from any other one cause, and while they want transportation at the lowest practicable cost, their overwhelming demand is for transportation itself.

Without entering into the details of the situation, it is well known to every observer that we need from 100,000 to 200,000 additional cars, we need more main tracks, more sidetracks, more warehouses, and more terminal facilities of all kinds. If the railways are to succeed in giving to the people what they must have, if we are to prosper, these companies must borrow or secure in some way not less than $600,000,000 this year and $1,000,000,000 next year. In preparing the section about which I have been speaking, I was not thinking so much about the return upon capital already invested in the railway enterprise as about men who have money to loan or to invest and the conditions upon which they would be likely to make loans or investments in railway properties. It is my deliberate judgment that those Members of Congress who fail to take into consideration this problem in all its aspects and who use their influence either to delay or defeat this bill will in the end deeply disappoint the great body of the people intent upon marketing their products and in developing to the highest point our social and industrial systems.

One word with reference to the much-maligned requirement that a railway company receiving in any year a net operating income of more than 6 per cent upon the value of its property used in the service of transportation shall pay to the Government one-half of the excess.

This regulation is founded upon one of the long-established principles in the regulation of public utilities. It has been in common use from the very beginning of public control. It is neither socialistic nor confiscatory in its character. Some lawyers, looking at the question from the standpoint of their clients, may doubt its constitutionality, but the great majority of the legal profession find no difficulty in defending its validity. If we are to look upon transportation as a national subject and accept it as our duty to sustain railway carriers in all communities which are rendering an indispensable service, we must impose some such limitation. I predict that this feature of the Senate bill, preserved in the conference report, will meet with almost universal approval and that the immediate future will vindicate its justice and efficiency.

Fifth. The Senate conferees discovered very early in the conference that the House would not accept that part of the Senate bill which undertook to create tribunals for the adjudication of disputes between railway employees and railway employers, and to make it unlawful, through combination or conspiracy on the part of either employees or employers, to punish the public in order to maintain their disputes.

I confess that I yielded upon these provisions of the Senate bill with extreme reluctance. The procedure established in our bill may have been susceptible of improvement, but the principle is everlastingly right. That there will come a time when railway workers will see that this principle protects them more perfectly than they can ever hope to be protected through the strike, I have no more doubt than I have in the ultimate triumph of justice in all the fields of human endeavor. Is it not possible that in the progress of affairs we can discover some way in which to prevent these disputes ripening into an interruption of commerce which menaces the lives, the health, and the peaceful, orderly development of society? To me the thought is abhorrent that the judgment of a governmental tribunal composed of fair, high-minded men—a tribunal which takes into consideration the rights of man and speaks for the public welfare—can be overthrown or disregarded by any class of our citizens. Whenever the public interest requires the Government to assume jurisdiction over a dispute and to enter its decree expressing the very right of the matter, all of us, no matter how we work or where we work, ought to respect and abide the decision.

So much I have felt that I must say in vindication of the action of the Senate in receding from the so-called "antistrike" sections of the Senate bill. The Senate conferees yielded simply to supreme necessity, for we all recognized that a railroad bill must be passed before March 1, or chaos would ensue.

With respect to the labor provisions of the conference report, I am utterly unable to understand the opposition which they have aroused among labor leaders, for they leave all men free, whether employees or employers, to do whatsoever they please at any time, at any place, or under any circumstances. All that I can say of them is that they are the best we could devise under the conditions which confronted us.

The voluntary formation of boards of adjustment to consider and settle, if possible, all disputes except those relating to wages is authorized and encouraged.

A governmental tribunal is established, composed of nine members, with a tenure of office of five years and an annual compensation of $10,000. It is to be known as the "railroad labor board." All of the members are to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate—three of its members upon the nomination of employees, three upon the nomination of the employers, and three, without restriction, to represent the public. All controversies respecting wages or salaries are to be submitted to this board, and also all other disputes not decided by the boards of adjustment which seem likely to result in a substantial interruption of commerce. Decisions by the railroad labor board are to be made by a majority vote, but no decision can be made unless at least one of the members representing the public joins in the decision. It is my sincere hope that this board may command the confidence of railway wageworkers, railway carriers, and, above all, the public. I earnestly hope that through its intervention justice may be done, and especially that the wageworkers shall receive that full measure of compensation which alone can make men happy, contented, and progressive. Let us at least try the experiment with faith and courage in the abiding belief that whatever defects may be revealed in the plan as time passes on we will have the intelligence and patriotism to remove.

Finally, inasmuch as the conference report carries an appropriation of $300,000,000 for loans by railway companies and $200,000,000 for immediate use in making settlements with railway companies, I submit a very brief statement of the results of the two years and two months of Government operation of the railroads.

I submit this statement, Mr. President, because from time to time the developments in the Railroad Administration—and I am not criticizing that administration—have changed the financial conditions.

We have heretofore appropriated for expenditure by the Railroad Administration $1,250,000,000. We are now in this bill appropriating $500,000,000 more, and before the close of the present fiscal year we will be compelled to make another appropriation of not less than $400,000,000; in all, $2,150,000,000. Of this vast sum it is expected that the railways will at various times during the next decade—10 years is the limit of the credit extended by the Government to the railroads—pay to the Government of the advances so made sums which in the aggregate will reduce the Government's expenditures to something like $850,000,000, and this will represent the loss incurred in two years and two months of Government operation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does that include the unliquidated claims which the railroads will prefer and which will probably aggregate $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 and which will probably call for from two hundred to three hundred million dollars when the court, or whatever tribunal passes upon them, finally reach a conclusion?

Mr. CUMMINS. The sum I have named does not include those claims, as will appear in my next sentence.

When I presented the railroad bill to the Senate this loss—I mean after the railroads pay everything due to the Government and the Government pays everything due to the railroads—was estimated at not more than $650,000,000.

I remarked then that, in my judgment, when a final accounting was had it would appear that the loss would be much greater than $650,000,000. It now is estimated at $854,000,000. I said then that I believed it would be more, and I say now we will be fortunate if the loss does not increase to more than a billion dollars, for it will be remembered that the amounts I have given are estimates of the Government and do not include a large number of claims asserted by the railroads and denied by the Railroad Administration. I greatly hope, however, that the amount of such claims will not reach the sum suggested by the Senator from Utah, nor do I believe that it will, but it is quite safe to reckon upon something like $100,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. May I remind the Senator also that a very large number of claims will be presented by the shippers because of excessive rates charged, and those will have to be taken into account later?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what tribunal, if any, has been set up to determine these claims and pass upon them?

Mr. CUMMINS. The tribunal is provided for in the Federal-control act of March 21, 1918. It is the Court of Claims. The district court of the United States has jurisdiction, I think, in cases against the United States to $10,000, and beyond that the only jurisdiction is that of the Court of Claims. I am now speaking of suits brought by carriers against the Government. What I have said with regard to them, however, is not true with regard to suits brought by shippers upon causes of action growing out of Federal control, out of losses sustained by shippers during Federal control.

With regard to these causes of action, the ordinary courts throughout the country have jurisdiction, precisely as though the suits were brought against carriers instead of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ought not some tribunal to be set up by which these claims may be settled without bringing suit?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, surely. We have a most energetic tribunal in the Railroad Administration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know we have now; but when this law is repealed, what is going to take its place?

Mr. CUMMINS. This law is not repealed. Certain powers under the law are to be taken away from the President, but the power of adjustment and settlement still remains, and the President has but recently appointed one of the most equitable-minded and distinguished lawyers of the country at the head of the Bureau of Liquidation, and I have no doubt that this work will go on as rapidly as possible, and that the interests of the Government will be fully protected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the President has recently conferred power upon the Director General to distribute coal, under the powers which the Congress gave him in the Lever Act. I am being inundated with telegrams and letters complaining of injustice in the seizure of that coal, owing to the difference between the price that the Railway Administration pay and the contract price that these consumers and jobbers are paying. May I ask the Senator whether the present machinery in the Director General's office would be the proper tribunal to adjudicate those differences between the Director General and the consumers or shippers?

Mr. CUMMINS. If the causes of action or claims grow out of or arise under the Federal operation of our transportation system, the suits could be instituted by shippers in any court of competent jurisdiction. The President is required to appoint in each jurisdiction a suitable person to receive service of process, so that the persons who may be affected throughout the country shall not be required to come to Washington in order to present and to prosecute their claims against the Government; but the carriers, under the act of March 21, 1918, in my opinion, must either prosecute their cases in the district courts of the United States, where the amount involved is less than $10,000, or, where the amount involved is more than $10,000, prosecute them in the Court of Claims in the District of Columbia.

It would be unpatriotic to complain or criticize, and the deficit must be accepted as a part of the cost of the war. I have mentioned the subject only to remark that, grievous as the burden is, we must bear it, and promptly—cheerfully, if possible—discharge our honest obligations.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	Knox	Pomerene
Ball	Gay	Lenroot	Robinson
Beckham	Glass	Lodge	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gronna	McKellar	Shields
Calder	Hale	McNary	Simmons
Capper	Harris	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Henderson	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Spencer
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend
Dial	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Kenyon	Phelan	Underwood
Fernald	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
France	King	Poindexter	Warren

Mr. GRONNA. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, throughout almost a year the appropriate committees of both Houses of Congress have been continuously engaged with railroad legislation.

This proceeding, the adoption or rejection of the pending conference report, culminates one of the most prolonged legislative contests in the history of Congress.

Recognizing the necessity for comprehensive legislation concerning railroads, in order to assure the public efficient and adequate transportation facilities, prior to the outbreak of the war in Europe, Congress created a joint commission with complete powers of investigation and recommendation. While this commission was in the midst of its duties the war came, and circumstances and conditions respecting transportation became abnormal, thus interrupting the work of the commission and preventing the accomplishment of the purposes for which it was created.

Our entry into the war signalized the beginning of revolutionary industrial movements.

The transportation systems passed from private to Government operation and control. Existing industries were, in a measure, socialized, and new industries necessary or incidental to the conduct of the war sprang into existence.

When the Federal control act was under consideration the Director General of Railroads suggested that no specific limitation on the period of Federal control be provided, and I supported that view because my studies of the subject led to the conclusion that a proper solution of the railroad question would be attended with such difficulties that it ought not to be unduly hastened or influenced by the uncertainty and confusion necessarily associated with the immediate return to the owners of the railroads following the war.

Congress, however, in its wisdom, fixed a limitation of 21 months, and subsequently the Director General of Railroads asked that this limitation be extended. This Congress refused to do.

The President thereupon announced his purpose to terminate Federal control March 1 of the present year, giving to the Congress apparently adequate time to prepare and enact necessary legislation.

Immediately began agitation in favor of prolonged Federal control. This viewpoint was occupied by the advocates of permanent Government ownership or closely related theories, such as the Plumb plan.

Public sentiment, as reflected in the Congress, overwhelmingly and uncompromisingly supported private operation and control of railroads and opposed Government ownership and operation.

There has been no referendum and none is practicable under our system of legislation, but I have not the slightest doubt that the antagonism of the American people to the principles of Government ownership and operation of industries, which has existed and repeatedly been manifested throughout the country's history, has been emphasized and intensified by the incidents and circumstances of Federal control.

Unquestionably conditions have not permitted a complete experiment, and it can not be asserted that in normal times all of the difficulties which have arisen during Federal control in war time would have manifested themselves.

The demand for Government ownership and operation of the railroads came principally from organizations of railway employees and affiliated labor organizations.

The Plumb plan, which contemplated the purchase of the railroads at their value and the organization of one great operating corporation managed by an equal number of representatives of the public, the railroads, and the laborers, was advanced by the representatives of the organizations.

In the propaganda associated with the conduct of publicity respecting this plan it was said that nation-wide industrial revolution was at hand, and that the railroad workers were so insistent upon the adoption of their plan by Congress that they would combine to defeat all railroad legislation on a different theory, until the question could be thrashed out in a national election.

This attitude of resistance to railroad legislation based on any other theory than the Plumb plan, or something analogous thereto, has been continued, and I am convinced is the principal motive and influence underlying the opposition to this bill both here and in the body at the other end of the Capitol.

It is not so much the specific provision of the pending legislation which prompts the bitter opposition to the measure, as recognition of the certainty that its enactment renders improbable further serious consideration in the early future of the principle of Government ownership and of that somewhat indefinite theory known as the "nationalization of industries."

It seems neither necessary nor appropriate, in view of the publicity which has been given to the measure and the explanations of its provisions which already have been made by others, that I should undertake a complete review of the conference report.

Important subjects dealt with among others include:

(1) Legislative approval and express authorization of the return of the railroads to private control and operation March 1, as proclaimed by the President, and the settlement by him of matters arising out of Federal control;

(2) Provisions relating to compensation of carriers, including carriers having no contract;

(3) Procedure respecting causes of action arising out of Federal control;

(4) The refunding of carriers' indebtedness to the United States;

(5) A six months' guaranty to carriers after termination of Federal control;

(6) New loans to railroads;

(7) Provisions relating to water transportation;

(8) Generous treatment of short-line railroads;

(9) Modification of the long-and-short-haul clauses of the act to regulate commerce;

(10) Federal control of issuance of stocks and bonds by carriers;

(11) Provisions relating to rates and returns of railroads; and finally

(12) Labor provisions.

It may be recalled that the conference committee agreeing to this report was confronted with a task of almost insuperable difficulty. The House, or Esch, bill and the Senate, or Cummins, bill were framed upon radically different theories. While many provisions in the two bills were identical and others quite similar respecting the most important features named above, the divergence between the two bills was so great as to make agreement, acceptable to both Houses, improbable.

The labors of the conference committee charged with the duty of bringing the two Houses together have extended over a period of several weeks. We have been in daily session. Members of the conference representing both Houses have devoted their time and efforts almost exclusively to this subject.

Having in mind the history of the legislation, the difficulties which have attended it, and the divergence of opinion reflected in the action of the two Houses, I consider the result satisfactory, and advocate the adoption of the report. Do not understand me to assert that all of the noteworthy terms of the bill as reported by the conference meet with my approval. There are many respects in which I would like to see them changed. Some of the most vital features reflect my views quite completely. I have acquiesced in or consented to others because the conference committee could only reach an agreement through a compromise or a series of compromises as to the conflicting positions taken by the two Houses.

Believing that the principal purposes justifying legislation upon the subject at this time are fairly realized I accept the measure as a whole in the hope that it will stabilize conditions, both as to railroad labor and revenues, and bridge over the exceedingly difficult period of readjustment which inevitably must follow the termination of Federal control and the resumption of private operation.

PRIMARY PURPOSE OF PENDING LEGISLATION.

The primary purpose of the pending legislation, broadly stated, is to terminate Federal control and restore the railroads to their owners for operation under conditions which will prevent a breakdown of the transportation systems and assure the public necessary and adequate facilities.

To comprehend the important phases of the problem is prerequisite to a fair determination as to the sufficiency of the remedies agreed upon.

Federal control of railroads was caused by the threatened breakdown in the operation, particularly in the eastern part of the United States, at the time we entered the war. A retrospect of the subject warrants the belief that the primary purposes of Federal control might have been accomplished in a simpler way than was adopted. Congestion on the lines of transportation reaching the Atlantic seaboard, particularly New York, might have been relieved by the taking over of only a few trunk lines, those in the eastern part of the United States, and by authorizing diversion of freight as to other lines coupled with provisions for compensation and for reimbursement for losses thus occasioned.

Federal control of the railroads will result in a loss to the Government of about $636,000,000. In addition, probably more than a billion dollars owed by railroads to the United States will have to be funded. The claims against the Government arising out of Federal control and of various character will require for settlement a long period and much litigation.

Nevertheless Federal control has accomplished the big things it was designed to bring about. It cleared the railway lines and terminals for the movement of troops and munitions, gradually relieved the congestion which rendered probable a breakdown in transportation when its continuance was indispensable to winning the war, and continued the operation of the railways in spite of repeated threatened interruptions from various causes.

The Government is fortunate in having had as Director General of Railways two great executives—Mr. William G. McAdoo, whose financial training and executive ability inspired and retained the confidence of the public, including the railway laborers, in a time when the Nation badly needed them, and his successor, Mr. Walker D. Hines, who is probably one of the best-qualified men in the United States for the position of Director General. He is readily recognized as preeminently qualified for the difficult, harassing, and important duties incumbent upon his office. He has displayed patience and courage, as well as intelligence and devotion to the public interest. Whatever failures or disappointments are connected with the Federal control of the railroads inhere in the system and do not result from the inefficiency or neglect of those who have headed the Railroad Administration.

There has been, undoubtedly, some decline in the morale of railway managers and laborers. As to the first, it has been due no doubt in part to the uncertainty as to the tenure of their service and the very natural desire to reassociate themselves with the corporations soon to resume control and operation.

As to the laborers, they prefer to deal with the Government rather than with corporations. While dissatisfied with prevailing wages and conditions and insisting upon enormous increases approximating a total of $1,000,000,000 per annum, the advances already made during Federal control, aggregating more than $500,000,000 per annum, while not commensurate with increases to laborers in the steel, packing, textile, shipbuilding, and other fundamental industries, are so substantial as to justify the anticipation of efforts by the corporations to reduce compensation to the laborers before the prices of the necessities of life have materially declined.

The provisions in this bill respecting compensation and the six months' guaranty are designed to tide the railroads over the period of adjustment immediately following the end of Federal control. Short routing and diversion of freight by the Federal administration of railroads has materially disarranged the normal proportion between the earning of railroads and their operating expenses. A few of the roads have enjoyed enormous increases in earnings, while others, competing with them, have suffered heavy declines in their revenues and very great increases in their operating expenses. This, of course, will continue in some degree after the carriers resume the operation of their properties. The proper relation as to earnings, so materially affected by short routing and diversion of traffic on the various railroads, can not be quickly or immediately restored.

While I can not now go into the subject fully, the provisions in this bill relating to compensation and providing for a six months' guaranty after the end of Federal control, while entirely independent of each other, are both designed largely as temporary expedients and to prevent the likelihood of financial disturbances, railroad receiverships, and lawsuits indirectly caused by the exercise of the very extraordinary but necessary powers conferred on the Federal Railroad Administration to short route and divert traffic.

CAUSES OF ACTION ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

It is certain that many suits will result from Federal control. This conference bill authorizes legal proceedings, based on causes of action arising out of the possession, use, or operation of the railroads by the Government of such character as could have been brought against the carrier prior to Federal control, to be brought against an agent—who will probably be the director general—designated by the President.

Where the Government has entered into contracts with the railroad for the conduct of litigation arising out of Federal operation, process may be served upon any agent of the company authorized by law to be served.

If no such contract has been made, process may be served on such agents or officers as may be designated by the President.

Complaints for reparation on account of damage caused by the collection during Federal control of unjust or unreasonable rates may be filed with the commission against the agent designated by the President and determined by the commission as provided in the act to regulate commerce. Proceedings pending when Federal control terminates may proceed to final judgment in the name of the agent designated by the President.

Execution, save on a judgment recovered by the United States against the carrier, may not be levied on carrier property, where the cause of action grew out of Federal control, for the simple reason that the judgment is the debt of the Government and not the debt of the carrier. Such judgments are to be paid from a revolving fund carried in the bill.

REFUNDING PROVISION.

The refunding provision was very carefully considered. The conference committee, in their preparation, enjoyed valuable aid and suggestions from the financial director of the Railroad Administration, Mr. Swager Sherley. His legal experience and ability, his prolonged service in Congress and thorough familiarity with governmental finance, his fairness and devotion to the public interest have enabled the committee to work out a refunding provision which is believed to be both simple and just.

The President is authorized to ascertain the amount of indebtedness each carrier owes the United States at the termination of Federal control for additions and betterments made during Federal control and properly chargeable to capital account, as well as the indebtedness of the carrier otherwise incurred, and the amount the United States owes such carrier arising out of Federal control.

The President may set off the amount due the United States against either or both classes of the indebtedness of the carrier to the Government, to the extent permitted by the contract of the Government with the carrier, or to the extent permitted in the standard contract between the Government and carriers. But this right of set-off may not be exercised so as to deprive the carrier of sums necessary to pay accruing taxes, interest, dividends, and analogous corporate charges and expenses; nor shall this right of set-off be exercised unless the Government has paid the carrier sums equivalent to one twenty-fourth of its operating expenses for 1919 as a working capital.

Any remaining indebtedness of the carrier to the Government may be funded as follows:

1. If it is for additions and betterments, and the carrier desires, it shall be funded for a period of 10 years or less, at the option of the carrier, at the rate of 6 per cent.

2. Indebtedness of the carrier to the United States may be funded through the medium of car-trust certificates, and if this is done, as is authorized under the act approved November 19, 1919, such indebtedness shall not be refundable otherwise.

3. Any other indebtedness of the carrier to the United States after the settlement of accounts shall be evidenced by notes of the carrier, payable in one year or less, at the carrier's option, with interest at 6 per cent, and secured by such collateral as the President may require.

It is necessary to give the President latitude or discretion in the exercise of the right of set-off, the purpose being to make sure the continuance of railway operations through the corporations, while at the same time reducing their debts to the Government as much as practicable and refunding only such sums as may be necessary, and doing this under such conditions as will encourage the carriers to find the resources with which to promptly discharge their obligations to the Government.

Congress proceeds in this legislation on the theory that in restoring the railroads to their owners the financial interests of the carriers reasonably must be safeguarded as a public necessity, to prevent the breakdown of our transportation systems and to give reasonable probability that they will be extended to meet the requirements of commerce.

In addition to the temporary expedients designed to accomplish this end, embracing the provisions in the bill respecting compensation of carriers having no contract, the refunding of indebtedness due the United States which the carriers can not immediately pay, the six months' guaranty after termination of Federal control to afford an opportunity for readjustments as to the earnings of roads, and new loans from the Government to railroads which without them might be thrown into receiverships, it is believed that the terms of this measure affecting rates or charges for transportation service and returns to railroads therefrom are of great importance.

GENEROUS TREATMENT OF SHORT-LINE RAILROADS.

The policy of the conference bill accords generous treatment to short-line railroads. While there are a few short lines which probably should never have been constructed, considered as a whole the short lines are regarded by the conference and are treated in this bill as indispensable to the industrial and commercial interests of the entire country, as well as to the development of the various localities which they immediately serve.

The authorization to the commission to initiate and require fair divisions of earnings, the establishment of through routes, and, under certain conditions, proper routings of traffic not routed by the shipper are among the safeguards designed to prevent bankruptcy to this class of carriers.

CONTINUANCE OF EXISTING RATES FOR SIX MONTHS.

Rates, fares, and charges in effect on February 29, 1920, are continued in force until changed by State or Federal authority, respectively, but prior to September 1, 1920, they may not be reduced except with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges in effect when Federal control terminates are carried forward until changed either by mutual agreement between the interested carriers or by appropriate State or Federal authority.

"SECTION 6"—TRANSPORTATION RATES AND RETURNS TO CARRIERS.

One of the most vital features of this measure is what has come to be known as "section 6." It has been widely misrepresented, and I believe is not generally understood. In the hope of clearing this subject of the misunderstanding which surrounds it, let me analyze its purpose and effect.

The commission is directed to so modify or adjust rates that carriers as a whole or in such rate groups or territories, as the commission may designate, will, under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment, earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of the carriers as a whole, or in such groups held and used in the service of transportation.

The commission is empowered and directed to determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return, and this percentage is made uniform for all rate groups.

In fixing this rate the commission is directed to take into consideration, among other things, the transportation needs of the country and the necessity of enlarging facilities to meet the requirements of the public.

Honest and economical management and expenditures constitute an important and controlling consideration.

Five and one-half per cent of the aggregate value is fixed by the Congress for a period of two years as a reasonable return, and the commission may authorize, in addition, a sum not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision for nonremunerative improvements, betterments, or equipment.

It is expressly provided that the aggregate value of the property of the carriers shall be determined by the commission from time to time and as often as may be necessary, and the commission can only give to the property investment account of the carriers that consideration which under the law it is entitled to in establishing values for rate-making purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am quite interested in this part of the bill; indeed, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, it is one of the big questions of the bill. I was wondering if there was any limitation or restriction upon the Interstate Commerce Commission ascertaining the value of the property for rate-making purposes based upon the valuation of a road without any earning capacity; that is to say, take a road whose earnings are negligible, or, indeed, a road which runs behind but which has cost a large amount of money. Measured by the standard of return, if return determines the value, such a road would be practically valueless. Is there any restriction upon the commission, that ascertains the value of the road, based upon the fact that the road may not be a going concern or an earning road?

Mr. ROBINSON. In answer to the question of the Senator from Utah, Mr. President, I will say that the only specific restriction in the bill in that regard is the one which I have just quoted, expressly requiring the commission to give to the property investment account only such value as the law requires shall be given. The view which the conference committee took of the subject was that the rules governing the determination of the question of value are fixed by law and that Congress could not arbitrarily tell the commission that it must apply any given rule. The commission is left to determine the value of the property under the law, and, in the last analysis, the Supreme Court of the United States will determine what is the proper rule. The Senator's suggestion involves a very difficult question, which I am going to discuss in just a moment.

Experience has shown conclusively that rates that are necessary to secure the operation of some railroads indispensable to the commerce of the country will, as to some competitors, yield an unreasonable and excessive return.

The problem, therefore, is to prevent railroads of the first-mentioned class—that is, those which are indispensable to the commerce of the country, and which can not live on the rates which might be ample for other competing roads—from going out of business and at the same time secure the public against the payment of extortionate and unreasonable tribute to other railroads. Look at the question squarely and in the public interest. If the commission exercises its undoubted power under the Constitution to so adjust the rates that a given carrier may receive no more than a reasonable return on the value of its property, its competitors in many instances could not live on those rates, entirely adequate under the Constitution for the first-mentioned road.

If, on the other hand, the commission takes a road which must have an exceedingly high rate for it to receive a reasonable return on the value of its property, the more favored carrier in competition with it would reap an excessive profit at the expense of the public. In the past the Interstate Commerce Commission, with no express rule of law to govern it, has performed its duty under great difficulties and in spite of many uncertainties as to its authority.

It has had no legal direction to guide it in adjusting rates as a whole, and the result has been that while a few roads have been unreasonably profitable others which are almost as necessary to the transportation interests of the country have received returns too low to meet their reasonable requirements, considered from the standpoint of the public welfare.

The plan adopted in this bill is not perfect. No perfect scheme has been suggested. It is, however, a great advance from the standpoint of railroad credit and the public interest generally.

The inequality already mentioned, which constitutes the chief difficulty in rate making, is removed in part—only in part, however—by the plan of this bill.

Division of the country into rate-making groups, fixing legislative returns for the carriers as a whole or in rate groups, will undoubtedly yield some roads excessive returns and others inadequate returns, but the disproportion will be diminished and every road which ought to continue operations will have a living rate.

This legislative direction to the commission to adjust rates so as to provide the carriers, considered in rate groups or as a whole, with as near as may be 5½ per cent on the value of their property has been inaccurately described as a guaranty. It is no such thing. It is merely a legislative expression as to what constitutes a fair return and a direction to the commission to proceed on that basis.

It can not be described as a guaranty for the reason that if the rates actually established by the commission fail to meet the standard, the Government is under no obligation whatever to make good the deficit. Moreover, it is not expected that 5½ per cent shall constitute a basis of return for any given carrier. It merely eliminates from the labors of the commission any controversy as to what constitutes a fair return on the aggregate value of the property in a group.

Unless the basis fixed in the bill, 5½ per cent on the value of railroad property as a whole or considered in rate territories, is excessive, there can be no complaint on the part of the public.

Throughout the prolonged and many-sided discussion of this question I have heard no one suggest that 5½ per cent on the value of the property is an unreasonable or excessive return. No one has suggested that the Interstate Commerce Commission, if required to fix a rate, would make it lower than 5½ per cent.

Considered with reference to well-known conditions, it is not likely that any authority fairly constituted would regard 5½ per cent on the value of the railroads, as a whole or in rate districts, oppressive to the public.

Another aspect in which the subject is misunderstood or misrepresented: It has been said that the effect of this provision is to validate watered stock and to require the public to pay transportation rates on the basis of railroad capitalization. Whoever makes this statement is either ignorant or deliberately falsifies. The 5½ per cent rate must be passed on the value of the property held and used for transportation. It has no relation whatever to either stocks or bonds. The practicable ascertainment of the value of railroad properties presents difficulties which no one can deny. The commission, however, is charged with the duty of performing that service. It already has collected under existing law much information which will aid in reaching a conclusion as to the value of the railroad properties. Under this act the commission can not, even if it should choose to do so, base rates on the property investment account of the railroads. It could not base its finding as to the value of railroad properties held and used for transportation on the stocks or other securities of the carriers. While there exists a divergence of opinion as to some of the elements which enter into the determination of the value of railroad property, this bill requires that questions of value shall be determined according to the principles of law governing the subject and in the last resort by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Under existing practices a few railroads enjoy very large returns collected under rates made or approved by the Government. The theory that rates may be based only on the value of the particular service performed is absurd and impossible of practicable application. Who can tell accurately or approximately the actual cost of transporting a box of oranges from Florida to Washington, or of carrying by rail a hundred pounds of hardware or a given quantity of other merchandise from one point to any other given point?

It is true that there must be some regard for proportion in fixing freight rates, class or commodity, but it can not be asserted, considering the complex conditions which enter into transportation, that an intelligent standard of rates can now be based solely on the value of the service performed in each particular case. We are compelled, in the very nature of the subject, to consider rates as a whole and their effect on the returns of the carriers. The standard fixed in this bill, while in no sense perfect, is a reasonable one and as entirely consistent with the Constitution as any other which has been devised. It takes from no carrier anything to which it is entitled. It gives to no carrier any return which may prove seriously oppressive to the public.

The provision necessarily resulting from the adoption of a legislative standard of return for railroads as a whole, contemplating a division of excess earnings as to the carriers which under the general rule would receive more than 6 per cent, after the payment of all reasonable operating expenses, is necessary to the public interest and entirely consistent with the rights of the carriers. All returns in excess of 6 per cent which would be received by any carrier are divided into equal parts. One-half goes to constitute a reserve fund for the carrier, which may be drawn from in lean or unprofitable years to provide dividends and pay interest and rents on leased roads, where the carrier's net railway income is less than 6 per cent. When this fund has accumulated to 5 per cent of the value of the carrier's railway property, the carrier is at liberty to use its half of the excess income for any lawful purpose. The other half above 6 per cent is to be paid to the commission and to constitute a general railroad contingent fund to be used in making loans, refunding the debts of needy carriers, and to secure equipment necessary in the performance of their duties to the public.

After two years the commission may readjust the basic rate of 5½ per cent on the carrier's property, considered either as a whole or in rate districts. I hope it may be found practicable to reduce the same, and I am satisfied that the commission will pursue this course if the conditions justify. The provisions of section 6 will not destroy initiative or discourage the exercise of diligence by profitable carriers. No railroad will receive anything that it does not earn, except the benefits which may come through the general railroad fund in the nature of loans, and these must be well secured, bear a high rate of interest, and be repaid.

Railroads which under the plan herein provided earn more than 6 per cent will be enabled to build up a reserve fund insuring them against the inability to pay dividends, interest, or rents during unprofitable years. When that reserve has reached 5 per cent of the value of the carriers' property it will be at liberty to use its one-half of the excess above 6 per cent in any lawful way that it pleases.

The provision gives due consideration to the necessity for honest and economical management.

It has the advantage of certainty. It inspires confidence in investors, makes probable necessary developments in our transportation system, and safeguards the public against the dangers and losses likely to result from an inefficient and inadequately maintained transportation system.

It is one of the most effective and valuable provisions in this bill. Stripped of confusion and the misrepresentation, it stands forth as an evidence of the willingness and ability of the Congress to enact necessary and practical legislation to assure the preservation of existing transportation facilities and to make probable the development of additional facilities demanded in the public interest.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES.

I come now to the consideration of another important feature of this bill, one which has caused more controversy than any other.

The labor provisions, fairly construed, do not justify the assaults made against them. It might be possible to improve them from the standpoint of the public interest, but in my opinion this could be accomplished only by strengthening and clarifying the machinery and procedure for adjusting railroad labor controversies and not by eliminating or weakening those provisions.

Aside from the power granted the commission to direct the installation of automatic train stop or train control devices, or other safety devices, under the conditions and limitations prescribed, which are of more importance, perhaps, to the general public than to railroad laborers, the features of this bill which directly affect labor may be considered under two heads:

1. The continuance of existing schedules of wages. The provision requires that each carrier shall pay to each employee or subordinate official wages or salary at a rate not less than that fixed by the decision of any agency or railway board of adjustment during Federal control, for the six months' period ending September 1, 1920.

It has been misrepresented or misconstrued as preventing increases to railroad employees within that time, but the plain meaning and effect of the language used is to deny to the carriers during the six months' period—which is the same as the guaranty period—the right to reduce wages. Certainly no laborer can object to the measure in this particular. It guarantees that compensation shall not be reduced for six months, and does not estop the laborer from claiming or prevent him from receiving any increase which may be awarded either as the result of voluntary agreements with his employer or of a decision by the labor board.

The carriers or the public might complain, inasmuch as it may result in preventing for a time the elimination of qualities which have crept into the wages of certain classes of employees, resulting, it is claimed, in excessive compensation in some instances. Certainly no laborer who believes his scale of wages too low can justify opposition to this feature of the legislation.

The average compensation to all classes of railroad laborers has increased since 1913 approximately 48.5 per cent; since 1917, about 43 per cent. These figures do not tell the whole story, and represent an average increase which does not reflect a very accurate idea of the advances made within that period to the various classes of employees.

Material as are these increases to railroad laborers, they are less than the increases which have been made to laborers in many other spheres of industry. Applications for further increases are pending before the director general, which, if granted, would aggregate something less than $1,000,000,000, in addition to the advances heretofore made. Nothing in the bill forecloses this application or prevents the granting of the increases contemplated by it at any time. On the contrary, this dispute may be determined under the provisions of the bill, unless it is referred to some special board prior to the enactment of this bill.

2. The other important labor provision relates to the settlement of controversies.

Some labor leaders have bitterly denounced the plan proposed for the settlement of labor disputes. When analyzed the principal grounds of attack are twofold:

1. That it accords to subordinate officials and unorganized employees the right to have their cases heard and decided by the labor board.

2. That this board will be so constituted that it either can not or probably will not fairly exercise its powers, and will thus cause a denial of the substantial rights of labor.

UNORGANIZED EMPLOYEES HAVE THE RIGHT TO BE HEARD.

Unquestionably members of the labor board representing the employees will be nominated by the railway labor organizations in such manner as the commission may prescribe. The whole purpose of the bill in this respect is to make the labor board truly representative of the three interests involved, namely, the public, the laborers, and the carriers. The unorganized employees, constituting but a few thousand in number, must secure their rights through a board upon which they will have no direct representation, in so far as the determination of wage disputes is concerned. Who here would deny to unorganized employees the right to be heard? The principal of equality of right to every citizen has never been made dependent on membership in any organization, secret or public. Under the law of equality and justice, the laborer who is unable to secure membership in a union of his fellow craftsmen, or who voluntarily refrains from joining it, has just as much right to access to a public tribunal, just as much right to fair treatment, as the most influential walking delegate or other officer or agent of a union. It would be intolerable to declare by law that only those railroad employees who belong to labor unions shall have representation on or hearing through an official tribunal. Practical considerations will probably prevent the unorganized employee from having direct representation on the labor board, which, in order to be effective, must be truly representative in character, but it is outrageous to declare that he may not be heard, however just may be his complaint.

I have been astonished at the brazenness and arrogance which have marked criticism of the labor provisions of this bill because it does not outlaw the man who does not belong to a labor union.

Labor unions are not only justifiable under modern conditions, they are necessary. Their legitimate purposes are entirely consistent with that personal liberty which is inseparable from good government. Labor organizations have promoted advanced standards of living for workmen and have been the means of securing necessary comforts and opportunities to their members. When any organization, however powerful, departs from its wholesome purposes and seeks to crush or oppress the helpless or the weak it enters upon a field of activity remote from its real usefulness and becomes to that extent an agency of injustice.

This is not a Government of labor organizations. It must not be perverted in character so as to become the means of denying right or justice to any class of law-abiding citizens. Threats of industrial revolution, boasts of political vengeance to be wreaked on contemptible cowards who occasionally disgrace public office, vengeance through the manifest ill temper of labor leaders who mistakenly regard themselves as the dictators of public policy, may secure temporary advantages detrimental to the general public interest for the organizations which they misrepresent, but in the end the public will know and understand. The people as a whole will fix and maintain both the industrial and political institutions of this country. They will neither indorse nor tolerate legislation which expressly or impliedly penalizes a citizen for the exercise of his right to earn his bread by his toil.

The criticism of this measure based on the fact that it secures to every railroad laborer the opportunity to have his case heard and decided and that it does not expressly require that every member of the labor board representing labor shall be a member of a labor union is un-American, unreasonable, and will not justify in public opinion the opposition to this bill.

THE LABOR BOARD A FAIR TRIBUNAL.

The second criticism, namely, that the board will be an unfair tribunal, oppressive to the interests of labor, justifies examination and consideration.

It has been said repeatedly during hearings before Congress in recent years that labor controversies are of such a nature as to transcend the powers of government; that it is impossible to provide any fair means for the settlement of such disputes; that the right to strike must be left unrestricted and unqualified if laborers are to remain free.

Assuming for the present that it is not only the province but the duty of government to provide an orderly process for the settlement of all disputes, including labor controversies, likely to result in misery, suffering, and death, and leaving the contrary assumption for discussion a little later, let us assume now that the peace, happiness, and lives of our people depend upon the exercise by Congress of its power to regulate commerce in such a manner as to prevent the suspension of commerce and to make certain that its agencies, including railroads, will continue to function without serious or prolonged interruptions.

It is said by some critics of this bill that the labor board, if such a tribunal is to be created, should consist only of representatives of the carriers and of the employees; that the railroads and the laborers should have equal representation; and that the public should have no representation whatever on such a tribunal.

What is the justification for this position? The public's interest in the subject can not be denied. The public want commerce continued. They therefore want labor disputes likely to result in strikes settled, for they know that a universal strike would cause intolerable conditions. In a conflict between the laborers and the carriers to be decided by the rules of law and justice the public sympathy naturally is with the laborers, and this always will be the case except in instances where, in a particular controversy, the conduct of the laborers or of their representatives incenses public opinion.

The public pays the bill. "Jones" always pays the freight. Why should he who pays the bills be denied check on the accounts which he must pay? The shippers and consumers of the United States do not object to, they never will oppose, reasonable demands advanced by railroad laborers, either as to wages or working conditions. The whole course of history respecting labor controversies discloses that the progress of labor's cause has been by means of favorable public opinion rather than in spite of it.

Even more important than this consideration—that is, the pecuniary interest which the public have in wage disputes—is their just and reasonable desire that these disputes be settled without resort to strikes. If the board is to be composed only of representatives in equal numbers of the carriers and their employees, deadlocks frequently will result, and the board will be far less likely to reach a decision than if it were composed as this bill provides.

Little likelihood exists that this board constituted as proposed would fail to reach a decision in any case likely to result in a strike of nation-wide or far-reaching consequences. It is desirable that the tribunal be fair. I would not support any measure which I believed created a Government agency likely to become an instrumentality for the oppression of labor. If experience shows that changes in the board are necessary, no difficulty will be found in passing the legislation required. There is not now, and there never will be, a desire among our people to override the legitimate interests or to suppress the laudable aspirations of men who work. It is not only necessary that the tribunal be fair and just, but it should be so constituted as to make probable the decision of every case likely to result in a serious strike.

No method of enforcing the decisions of the labor board is expressed in the bill. I thought and still think that the law should declare decisions of the labor board final and binding. The conference committee, however, did not take that view. It leaves for future determination, either by construction of its express provisions or by subsequent legislation, the determination of the effect and manner of enforcement respecting the decisions of the labor board.

No penal provision, such as was carried in the Cummins bill, no penalty of any character whatever is embraced. The forces of publicity and public opinion are relied on as the chief agencies in carrying out the decisions. If public opinion sustains them, strikes will become ineffective and will be rarely resorted to. A strike can not be maintained to enforce a demand deliberately withheld by the employees from consideration and decision by the labor board. If a carrier, in the face of a threatened strike, should refuse to submit its cause for decision, the public would at once decide against that carrier, and the same thing would result if employees threatening to strike should refuse before doing so to have their case considered and determined. They would lose the strike when they began it, and only one effort of that character would ever be made.

While I have always considered myself a champion of the legitimate interests of labor, and in no sense accept the designation which my position on this subject has caused some labor leaders to apply to me—that of an enemy to labor—I am a firm believer that strikes in the fundamental industries must give place to some legal process. The power of Congress to deal with industrial disputes is limited and circumscribed by the Constitution. No doubt exists in my mind that the commerce clause under which the Adamson Act was sustained by the Supreme Court comprehends the power to pass this law. The decision in Wilson v. New (243 U. S., 35) expressly affirms the power of Congress to fix wages, or the standard for determining them, in case of disputes between railroads and their employees, or to provide by appropriate legislation for compulsory arbitration. In that case the court held that Congress has the power to fix a maximum as well as a minimum wage for trainmen; to require compulsory arbitration of labor disputes which may seriously and directly jeopardize the movement of interstate commerce and to take measures effectively to protect the free flow of such commerce against any combination, whether of operatives, owners, or strangers (id. 389).

It is regrettable that the attitude of union labor, as reflected in the position of their representatives here during the consideration of this subject, has been retrogressive. It was a leader of organized labor who first suggested the compulsory arbitration of labor disputes as the logical and necessary substitute for strikes. His suggestions, when made, met with opposition from the carriers and were supported by the laborers. It is astonishing that the labor organizations should assume the position that wage demands can not fairly be determined by any tribunal which human wisdom can conceive or which American statesmanship may devise. I am so certain that this position is wrong, that it is inconsistent with the legitimate purposes of labor, and with the public interest, that I have no hesitancy whatever in frankly and emphatically parting company with those who take that position and in taking my stand unqualifiedly upon the premise that no class or cause is superior to the processes of our Constitution. I believe and affirm, without qualification, that it is not only within the power of Congress but that it is also our plain duty to secure by law the reasonable and just demands of labor and to provide for their enforcement through legal processes. This will be of far more value to labor than the preservation of autocratic power to their leaders, able and enlightened as these have shown themselves to be.

In this bill Congress fixes by law the right of laborers to just and reasonable wages and working conditions.

In the exact language of the Senate bill it requires that in determining the justness and reasonableness of such wages and working conditions the labor board shall take into consideration, so far as applicable, among other relevant circumstances:

1. The scale of wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries;
2. The relation between wages and the cost of living;
3. The hazards of the employment;
4. The training and skill required;
5. The degree of responsibility;
6. The character and regularity of the employment, and in addition to the Senate provisions;
7. Inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment the result of previous wage orders or adjustment.

This becomes a bill of rights for labor. It assures the employment of the power of the United States, when invoked, to protect and safeguard those rights.

How doubtful in value appears the use of force, the resort to strikes, compared with this dignified and legal guarantee.

Congress can not legislate effectively for the adjustment of industrial disputes of every character. Its powers over the subject are limited to the regulation of commerce. Other phases must be dealt with by the State. Kansas has led the way and set an example worthy of imitation by other Commonwealths.

The deficiencies in this provision disclosed by experience may be supplied by future legislation. The least thing we can do to promote the interest of labor, as well as the interest of the public, is to secure by law just and reasonable compensation to the splendid men who actually operate our railroads. We must not leave them dependent upon arbitrary influences. Let us define and secure their rights by law. In doing this no injustice can result to any man or to any business. Make no mistake about it. Many laborers realize that law on their side is more compelling than force. They know the value of public opinion, the inconvenience, hardships, and suffering inevitably associated with strikes. Many railroad laborers want legislation on the subject, and their number will increase, so that in time the jealousy with which the right to strike is now guarded will be supplanted by confidence in the readiness and ability of the public to secure justice for laborers through lawful processes and agencies.

It is the chief aim of every State and throne,
That justice shall prevail,
And all men in the world shall have their own,
For there, where justice rules, all men enjoy their property secure,
And over every hearth and every home law watches with an angel's eye.

During the delivery of Mr. ROBINSON'S speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Will the Senator from Arkansas suspend? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Clerk.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. ROBINSON'S speech,

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am greatly disappointed that the provision which was in the railroad bill, as it passed the Senate, for compulsory arbitration of disputes between railroads and their employees, and which forbade strikes on railroads, had to be eliminated in conference. I think it was very greatly needed. I believe the time has come when we should get away from the old, haphazard way of allowing railroad companies to offer what wages and working conditions they may please, and compelling the employees to take them or resort to the strike. I think we should get a higher and fairer method of settling disputes of that character. I believe the antistrike provision of the Cummins railroad bill, as it passed the Senate, was a most wise and beneficent provision in the interest of labor, as well as the railroads and the public; but I realize that it had to be dropped in conference. I know the Senate conferees did all they could to retain it, and that they had to drop it in order to get legislation on this subject.

We must have railroad legislation before the 1st of March or the railroads will go back to their owners without any legislative action, and will face sure bankruptcy, ruin, disaster, and financial panic for the roads and, as well, the country; so it was absolutely necessary, I understand, to drop from the bill in conference the provisions to which I have referred. The House, I am satisfied, would never have adopted them, and, therefore, I do not blame the Senate conferees for receding.

As I understand the bill, as it now is before the Senate for action, the provision for arbitration between railroad companies and their employees as to wages and working conditions is purely voluntary and can not be enforced. I think it would be far better to have a provision for a fair and impartial tribunal to decree what are adequate wages and fair working conditions and to have the power to compel the railroad companies to grant them. I think that would be far better for the railroad companies, for the railroad employees, and for the public and all interests concerned.

Along with that there should inevitably go a provision against concerted railroad strikes. But, as I said, those provisions were of necessity dropped from the bill in conference. I believe the bill which is reported to the Senate is the best that can be had on the subject, and there must be some legislation on the subject before the 1st of March, in order that we may avert a great calamity to the country, which would affect not only the railroad companies but the public and the railroad employees themselves most disastrously.

I realize that the provision for compulsory arbitration, to be binding alike on the railroads and the railroad employees, was defeated by the violent and unalterable opposition of organized labor. Had it not been for the unyielding opposition of organized labor, I believe that provision would have been adopted by the House and that the country and all interested would be better off.

I believe organized labor is making a mistake in going to the extent to which it is going to force on the people of the country class legislation of the rankest kind. I believe it is taking a position which is unwise, unjustifiable, and untenable. I say that not as an enemy of organized labor. In its legitimate sphere, I am a friend of labor, whether it be organized or unorganized. I have voted for many measures in this body for the advancement of the interests of labor, both organized and unorganized. I have voted for many measures that organized labor wanted because I believed they were legitimate, just, and reasonable and in a fair way advanced the interests of organized labor. But I can not approve of the extreme length to which organized labor is going at present in order to force class legislation, by a class, for the benefit of a class, upon all the people of the country. It has made demands for which I can not stand and about which I must honestly and unalterably differ. I can not and will not go with organized labor to revolutionary and autocratic lengths, utterly repugnant to republican institutions and the welfare and freedom of the public.

I think labor in its demands of the present day is going entirely too far. I think the extreme, radical, dominating demands, actions, and threats of organized labor are the greatest menace that confronts the country to-day and think they constitute a very serious menace. Organized labor has entered the ranks of the Government employees, and I think at least four-fifths of the Government employees of the country to-day are affiliated with organized labor and subject to the influence and domination of the American Federation of Labor. From reports which come to me it has in many instances become extremely difficult for employees of Government departments to be promoted or advanced in their work or even to hold their positions unless they belong to a Federal employees' union. The Federal employees' unions, which comprise a large majority of the employees of the Government, are united with an organization which many times puts itself in direct, positive, and violent opposition to the Government and takes a stand in opposition to Congress and which is inimical to the welfare of the Government and the people of the country. I do not believe there is any remedy for that condition of affairs in the departments of the Government. A few months ago the Senate put an amendment on a bill which provided that no Federal employee should belong to any organization affiliated with a higher body of organized labor, but the provision was defeated in the House and had to be dropped in conference. I do not believe there is any way of getting such legislation through Congress. I can see no relief whatever. I think the evil will grow instead of diminish.

In my opinion, organized labor is to-day virtually dominating the public schools of the District of Columbia. Nearly all of the teachers in the schools are organized into unions and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and anything that they oppose it appears has to go and anything they want they appear to get. It is my opinion that the public schools of the District of Columbia to-day are virtually being conducted on the soviet system; that the teachers have all to say about it and the school board and the patrons have practically nothing to say about it.

The teachers' unions of the District, I understand, are opposed to the retention of Supt. Thurston and, ergo, he must go, and I believe will go. One of the teachers who belongs to a teachers' union, last winter, it is said on good authority, gave in the public schools a talk to the pupils on what she called the other side, the pleasant side, the good side, of Bolshevism. She was disciplined for it by the school board, and the entire body of the teachers' unions in the District, backed by organized labor in the District of Columbia, by the labor unions of the District, rose up in rebellion and in violent protest at the action of the school board, and two of the members of the board who disciplined her are now off of the board, and their places have been taken by members who are apparently more acceptable to organized labor and to the teachers' unions. I think it is a bad state of affairs, and I do not believe it is justifiable or desirable.

It appears that the school board of the District is largely subservient to the demands of the teachers' unions of the District, which are connected with the American Federation of Labor and which virtually dictate, it seems to me, from my information, what can and can not be done in the schools of the District.

Here I have given two instances of the aggressive, dominating determination of organized labor to reach out and obtain control of all branches of government and to go to lengths not wholesome for the body politic.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator has made a statement about which, if he is correct, I have been wrongly informed, and that is as to the influence exerted by the teachers in the dismissal of Supt. Thurston. My information is to the effect that the teachers are rather protesting against the dismissal of Supt. Thurston and not that they are in favor of his dismissal.

Mr. MYERS. All I know about it is what I have read in the news columns of the Washington Post, which I regard as a reliable and reputable newspaper; and the reports which I have seen show that the teachers' unions are in favor of Supt. Thurston going, and have been opposed to him all along, and are largely the cause of the dissatisfaction with him. I think there has long been friction between them.

Mr. STERLING. Whether I gained my knowledge or information from the Washington Post or not, I am not certain. I certainly got it from some newspaper of the city of Washington. I would not say that it was the Post, but the other view was taken by that paper.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator and I have received different information. I shall be pleased if I am in error. If I have been misinformed, I would be pleased to know it. The American Federation of Labor has now gone into the field of national politics and announced that all who oppose it—all Members of Congress who oppose what it wants and all other public officers who oppose its demands—must be defeated in the coming election this year, if they should be candidates for reelection, and that organized labor will see that only those who are subservient to it are elected. I think that is going entirely too far for free government, entirely too far in the direction of class legislation, by a class, for the benefit of a class.

I heartily agree with the substance of what the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has said, that this is not or should not be a Government of organized labor. But it appears to me that it has about come to that—that it is a Government of labor unions, for labor unions, by labor unions. At any rate, it has gone a long way in that direction, and I think we are hastening headlong to that condition, and the people seem to be asleep. It has gotten to be so that I hardly hope for any legislation which is opposed by Samuel Gompers to pass Congress. The majority of the bills opposed by Mr. Gompers certainly fare badly in Congress. A few weeks ago the Senate passed the Sterling antisedition bill. There was not very much said about it in the way of opposition here. It passed by a large majority in the Senate. It went to the House, and Mr. Gompers gave out an edict that the bill must not become a law. It has not become a law and, in my opinion, it will not. I think its doom is sealed.

The House was told by Mr. Gompers that it must not pass any antistrike provision in railroad legislation, and that was the result in the House. It is true that the House has just adopted by a large majority the conference report which is now before the Senate, but we have two of three vital pieces of legislation of great importance to the country which recently were defeated at the behest of Mr. Gompers and the organization which he represents. He opposed three measures and two of them have been defeated, or at least have not been enacted into legislation. I think if, hereafter, we can get through Congress one bill out of three that is opposed by Mr. Gompers, the country will be doing remarkably well.

In regard to the threat which has been made by Mr. Gompers and organized labor that all Members of Congress who do not vote as they desire must be defeated and will be defeated, I think it will in large measure be carried out. I think in large measure it will prevail and be successful. The trouble is the people seem to be asleep to the dangers that beset them. I have an Associated Press article, taken from the Washington Post, giving the statement of organized labor's attitude on this matter, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

LABOR ANNOUNCES WAR ON CONGRESS; ONLY UNIONS' FRIENDS TO BE VOTED FOR—FEDERAL LEGISLATURE "HAS FAILED IN ITS DUTY" AND IS "REACTIONARY," AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR CIRCULAR CHARGES—NATIONAL NONPARTISAN COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO CONDUCT POLITICAL CAMPAIGN—POINTS IN THE OFFICIAL CIRCULAR.

Organized labor, 3,000,000 strong, has thrown its hat into the political ring.

Vigorously denouncing Congress, which it was said "has failed to do its duty," the American Federation of Labor yesterday announced the appointment of a national nonpartisan political campaign committee which will mobilize trade unionists and "all lovers of freedom" in an effort to defeat candidates indifferent or hostile to labor and to elect "true and tried" friends of the trade-union movement.

TO CAMPAIGN AT ONCE.

Not waiting for the general election in November, the campaign will be started immediately and pursued without relaxation through the primaries, in which it is stated all aspirants for office will have their records "analyzed, stated in unmistakable language, and given the widest possible publicity." This program applies to all candidates, from presidential nominees down.

Samuel Gompers, president of the federation; Frank Morrison, secretary; and James O'Connell, president of the federation's metal trades department, were appointed an executive committee, empowered to obtain such assistants as necessary. Four women are included in the national committee.

CRISIS IN NATION SEEN.

A national crisis, threatening the free institutions of the country by the "reactionary" attitude of Congress, it was said, impelled organized labor to apply this year the nonpartisan policy formulated in 1906 and used in several subsequent campaigns.

Announcement of the decision was made in an official circular embodying the conclusions of the federation's general committee, which has been in session here several days. This circular will be distributed to trade unionists in every State through the local unions, by which it will be called also to the attention of friends of organized labor.

WHAT CIRCULAR SAYS.

"The inherent rights and principles of our people are threatened," the circular begins.

"The free institutions of our country are menaced.

"The ideals of democracy are in danger.

"The Congress of the United States has failed to do its duty. It has failed to meet the emergency. It has given encouragement and support to autocratic and reactionary policies. Its dominating thought has been the repression of labor.

"Every effort to secure remedial and constructive legislation has been strangled. Every appeal for redress has met with subtle and open hostility. The halls of Congress have been used by labor's enemies to foster and spread a vicious propaganda against the efforts of the toilers to exercise their normal and lawful activities for the protection and promotion of their interests and welfare. Labor has appealed for relief in vain.

CALLED TO MARSHAL FORCES.

"The hour has arrived when those who believe in the maintenance of democratic institutions must marshal their forces in defense of their rights and ideals.

"It is intolerable that a people who spared no cost to make the world safe for democracy should be forced to submit to any restriction of the glorious liberties inherited from the founders of our Nation. The perpetuation of our fundamental rights and the enactment of essential constructive legislation demand the election of men, regardless of their political affiliations, who are truly representative of American ideals of liberty.

LABOR'S CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAM.

"Conscious of its responsibilities, impressed by the grave problems resulting from the Great War, the American Federation of Labor, at its annual convention in June, 1919, adopted a reconstruction program. This program defined the essential industrial policies and legislative enactments required to establish a full measure of justice and opportunity for labor.

"Because of grave emergencies which arose since that convention, it became imperative that the representatives of organized labor and of farmers should assemble and confer to devise ways and means for safeguarding their rights and liberties as free men and citizens. On December 13, 1919, a conference of representatives of labor and of farmers met in Washington, D. C.

"This conference expressed labor's grievances, protests, and demands.

ITS RECOMMENDATIONS IGNORED.

"No favorable legislative action upon the recommendations contained in the American Federation of Labor reconstruction program or those expressed at the December conference has been taken by Congress. Instead, many Congressmen have endeavored to enact legislation providing for compulsory labor. Despite the patriotism and sacrifice of the masses of labor of America during the World War, under the guise of antisedition laws the effort has been made to repress free association, free speech, and free press.

"Scorned by Congress, ridiculed and misrepresented by many Members of both Houses, the American labor movement finds it necessary to vigorously apply its long and well established nonpartisan political policy.

CAMPAIGN IN PREVIOUS YEARS.

"Confronted by a succession of hostile Congresses, the American Federation of Labor in 1906 announced its historic 'bill of grievances.' This was followed by a vigorous and successful nonpartisan political campaign. In 1908, 1910, and 1912 the same program was energetically applied. As a result, many of labor's enemies in Congress were defeated and all of the essential legislation in 'labor's bill of grievances' of 1906 was enacted.

"Constructive legisltion has never been so necessary as at present. Never has it been so essential to secure the defeat of labor's enemies and the election of its friends and supporters.

INDEPENDENT OF PARTIES.

"Sinister forces are already actively engaged in efforts to confuse and nullify labor's political power. Their object is to divide the labor vote so that the election of reactionaries and enemies of labor will be assured. Unless labor holds steadfastly to its nonpartisan political policy, the enemies of labor will be successful in their efforts. Labor can not, labor must not, permit its political strength to be divided in the present crisis. Organized labor owes allegiance to no political party. It is not partisan to any political party. It is partisan to principles—the principles of freedom, of justice, and of democracy.

"It is the duty of trade unionists, their friends and sympathizers, and all lovers of freedom, justice, and democratic ideals and institutions, to unite in defeating those seeking public office who are indifferent or hostile to the people's interests and the rights of labor.

TO FIGHT HOSTILE CANDIDATES.

"Wherever candidates for reelection have been friendly to labor's interests they should be loyally supported. Wherever candidates are hostile or indifferent to labor's interests, they should be defeated and the nomination and election of true and tried trade unionists or of assured friends should be secured.

"Complying with the instructions of the last convention and the labor and farmer conference of December 13, 1919, the American Federation of Labor announces its determination to apply every legitimate means and all of the power at its command to accomplish the defeat of labor's enemies who aspire for public office, whether they be candidates for President, for Congress, for State legislatures, or any other office.

LOYAL SUPPORT SOLICITED.

"The American Federation of Labor calls upon all affiliated and recognized national, international, and brotherhood organizations, State federations of labor, central labor bodies, local unions, and labor's friends and sympathizers to unite and give loyal support to the nonpartisan political campaign now set in motion.

"This political campaign must begin in the primaries. The record of every aspirant for public office must be thoroughly analyzed, stated in unmistakable language, and given the widest possible publicity. Labor's enemies and friends must be definitely known. To this end the American Federation of Labor has created the national nonpartisan political campaign committee, and it now calls upon all affiliated and recognized labor organizations to create district and local committees and to cooperate with the national committee and coordinate its efforts.

"The future welfare, the very ability of the trade-union movement to carry on its work for humanity, depends upon the success of the campaign herewith inaugurated.

"There can be no hesitancy.

"There must be no turning aside.

"The time for vigorous and determined action is here."

THE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

The general committee in charge of the campaign consists of the executive committee; the eight vice presidents of the federation—James Duncan, Quincy, Mass.; Joseph F. Valentine, Cincinnati; Frank Duffy, Indianapolis; William Green, Coshocton, Ohio; W. D. Mahon, Detroit; T. A. Rickert, Chicago; Jucob Fischer, Indianapolis; Matthew Woll, Chicago—Daniel J. Tobin, Indianapolis, treasurer of the federation; John Donlin, Chicago, president, and William J. Spencer, Washington, secretary of the building-trades department; A. J. Beeres, Washington, secretary of the metal-trades department; John W. Hays, Indianapolis, president, and John J. Manning, Washington, secretary of the union-label trades department; James Lord, Washington, president of the mining department; Bert M. Jewell, Washington, acting president, and John Scott, Washington, secretary of the railroad employees' department; John P. Frey, Norwood, Ohio, editor International Molders' Journal; Mrs. Sarah A. Conboy, New York, secretary United Textile Workers; Miss Anna Fitzgerald, Chicago, president of Women's International Labor League; Miss Melinda Scott, New York, United Felt, Panama, and Straw Hat Trimmers and Operators; and Miss Anna Neary, Baltimore, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.

Mr. MYERS. It seems to me that conditions have come to such a state of affairs that Mr. Gompers is the most powerful individual in the United States. In some respects he has more power than the President of the United States. The President of the United States can only veto legislation after Congress passes it but he can not keep Congress from passing it. However, it seems to me that in a large measure Mr. Gompers has the power to keep Congress from enacting legislation objected to by him. He has so demonstrated.

As to carrying out the threats that have been made, I believe, as I have said, in many instances they will be successful. I believe many Members of Congress who vote for the adoption of this conference report and who voted for the antistrike provision of the Cummins bill will be defeated on that account at the coming election. If so, the fault will be with the unorganized people, who need awakening.

If the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], whose term expires with this Congress, I believe, were not a resident of a State with about 100,000 Republican majority, I believe his tenure of office in this body would be greatly jeopardized by his votes and attitude on this legislation. If he were representing in this body a State which had only 20,000 or 30,000 majority of his political party, I believe he would be almost certain to go down in defeat, if a candidate for reelection, as a result of his attitude in regard to this piece of legislation. I think that would be a calamity. If the Senator from Iowa shall be a candidate for reelection this year, as I hope he may be, I think all the people of Iowa who do not belong to labor unions, including the Democrats of Iowa who do not belong to labor unions, should vote for his reelection. If I were living in Iowa and had a vote, I would vote for the reelection of the Senator from Iowa, and I hope he may be reelected if a candidate. I think the time has come to put country above party in some things.

If I were a Republican and living in the State of Ohio, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] might be running for reelection, if, indeed, he be not called to higher honors meantime, I would vote for the reelection of the Senator from Ohio. If I were a Republican and living in the State of Arkansas, I would vote for the reelection of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], if he were a candidate for reelection.

However, the great mass of unorganized people seem to be blind to conditions that confront them. The most of them stick to party names and let a small minority highly organized demand and get class legislation for the benefit of a few. This condition of affairs will exist, class legislation will prevail, and closely organized, compact bodies that vote almost as a solid unit will largely prevail in the election of Members of Congress until there is a realignment of political parties in this country. I think there should be a realignment of the political parties of the country. There is no true alignment at present. The alignments are fictitious. To-day there is no great material issue between the Democratic and Republican Parties. The approaching campaign will probably be fought largely on the past records of the two parties and the traditions of the two parties, unless unconditional ratification of the peace treaty and the League of Nations may be made the paramount issue, which I hope may not be the case. Otherwise, the campaign this year will probably be fought on past issues.

I revere the past as much as anyone. I have as great admiration for the past records of the Democratic Party as has anyone. I have as great reverence, respect, and admiration for the grand and glorious accomplishments of the Democratic Party and of this administration, during the first term of President Wilson, prior to the outbreak of the European war, as anybody can have. It is a glorious record. I am an admirer of the achievements of this administration in successfully prosecuting to a finish and to victory and in being the determining factor in the winning of the great World War during the present term of President Wilson. But those things are behind us. Political parties should not fight their battles entirely on tradition and past accomplishments and reverence for the past.

What are the vital and material issues between the Democratic and Republican Parties of to-day and for the future? I should like to have any Senator arise and tell me one of them. In my opinion the tariff can not be a vital issue for many years to come.

For many years this country will need all the revenue it can get from all sources, in order to pay the enormous expenses of the great World War and in order to reduce the public debt and defray the great expenses to which we will be subject for many years to come. We will need all the revenue we can get from the tariff and all other sources. We will need all the revenue that the traffic will bear from every source, and I can not see how the tariff can be made an issue between the Democratic and Republican Parties for many years to come.

The political alignment between the Democratic and Republican Parties of the country to-day is fictitious. It is along false lines. It is just like an orange that is cut in two, with half of it put on a plate before you to eat. If the orange is divided up and down, it is divided along natural lines, but when you cut cross-grain and cut it in two around the middle it is divided along unnatural lines and against the grain.

Both the Democratic and Republican Parties in this country to-day are separated by issues that go across the grain. In the Republican Party there are Members of Congress and voters who believe in strong antisediton laws, and there are Republican voters and Members of Congress who do not want any antisedition laws. In the Republican Party there are Members of Congress and voters who believe in antistrike legislation and there are Members of Congress and voters who do not want any antistrike legislation. In the Republican Party there are Members of Congress and voters who believe in Government ownership of railroads, mines, and other public utilities, and there are others who do not believe in those things.

It is precisely so of the Democratic Party. In the Democratic Party, on each one of those issues, are found Members of Congress and voters for and against them. Those are the greatest issues that confront this country to-day, I believe, and neither party has taken a definite or decided stand on any one of them.

With all respect to him as one of the leading citizens of this country and one of the ablest men in the country, I think the recent action of Mr. Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, in appointing a platform committee of, I believe, 181 members, embodying every shade and variety of opinion, from those of the most reactionary standpatters to those of the most rampant Socialists, was an act of the rankest political dishonesty. Politically, I think it absolutely dishonest. It is an evident attempt to try to get all of those different elements to combine to support the Republican Party and the Republican nominees for President and Vice President and to get them all to stand on one platform that will be acceptable to all and to which none will have any objection. That is manifestly inconsistent and a political impossibility, and yet I admit that the Democratic Party in that respect does not seem to be any better off.

I have no doubt the Democratic national convention will try to combine all of those elements in one platform and in support of one ticket, and it would be just as repugnant to consistency as is this attempt of Mr. Hays. Mr. Hays is evidently trying to get the followers of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the followers of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to stand on one platform and to get something that they can all support. It can not be consistently or honestly done. I have no doubt the same thing will be attempted in the Democratic Party, and there it will be just as inconsistent.

I predict that when the Republican national convention assembles at Chicago it will make an effort to combine and to bring to its support all of those different elements; that it will cater to both elements—the element which wants stable government, good government, representative of all the people, and the element which is strongly tinctured with socialism and radical labor ideas; that wants class legislation, by a class, of a class, and for the benefit of a class. It will undertake to construct a platform upon which all of those different elements may stand; it will try to construct a platform which will undertake to carry water on both shoulders and in the middle; it will appeal to all who have ever called themselves Republicans, and will try to please them all.

When the Democratic national convention convenes at San Francisco, I predict it will try to do the same thing. In my opinion, neither one will have the courage to resist outright the extreme demands of radical leaders of organized labor. Those leaders will be at each convention, demanding that their claims be incorporated in the platform of each party. In my opinion, neither convention will have the courage to reject them outright; neither convention will have the courage to declare outright in favor of them. In my opinion, each convention will straddle the issue, and then they will go to the people in a sham battle, with a shell game, each one pretending that it stands for all that is good in government and that the other stands for all that is bad in government; and neither one will be telling the truth.

The alignment of political parties in this country to-day is exactly crosswise to the division of sentiment between the people of the country. In my opinion, one of those parties should declare against all antistrike legislation, against all antisedition legislation, and in favor of Government operation or ownership, or both, of all public utility corporations, such as the railroads and the mines of the country. The other convention should declare to the contrary of all of those things; it should declare in favor of antistrike legislation, in favor of strong antisedition legislation, and against Government ownership or operation of railroads, mines, or other public utilities. Then we would have a clean-cut issue between the two parties on the material issues that confront the American people to-day and which vitally affect their welfare. We would have a clean-cut divergence between the two political parties on the issues which actually are alive and before the Amercan people to-day, which are agitating the American people, and which the American people want to have settled in one way or another, and which must be settled before we will have peace, prosperity, and tranquillity in this country. That would be an honest political fight and there would be a way of determining what should be the policy of this country in the future; but, according to the present alignment of parties, there is no way of determining those issues. The vital divisions are all within the Democratic and Republican Parties, respectively, within each party, and not between the two parties as parties.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is always frank.

Mr. MYERS. I am trying to be exceedingly frank this afternoon.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator has stated that one of the two political parties ought to declare for the drastic laws which he has enumerated and that the other party ought to declare against them. Which party does the Senator think ought to make a declaration for these drastic measures?

Mr. MYERS. The first one that gets to it [laughter]; the first one that sees fit, and then let the other party take the other horn of the dilemma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend a moment. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries if there is any further outbreak.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, do I understand the Senator that if the Republican Party shall hold its convention first and declare for the laws which the Senator has enumerated, the Senator from Montana will become a member of that party?

Mr. MYERS. In the coming presidential campaign, if those issues are drawn and made plain, I will support any political party that declares in favor of antistrike legislation, in favor of antisedition legislation, and against Government operation and ownership of public-utility corporations, such as railroads and mines, as against a party declaring expressly to the contrary on all of those questions. I am ready to take my stand in accordance with my views whenever there is an honest realignment of political parties in this country.

Mr. GRONNA. I realize that the Senator from Montana is always courageous and frank.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator. I try to be.

Mr. GRONNA. But would it not be a better solution of this whole question, instead of calling the parties the Republican and Democratic Parties, if we are to do as the Senator has just suggested, to rename the parties and call them liberal and tory, or something of that sort?

Mr. MYERS. I do not care what the names may be; a name means nothing to me any more. I do not care what parties may be named; I look to the principle back of the name. Too many people vote a Republican ticket because it is labeled Republican or vote a Democratic ticket because it is labeled Democratic. That is the trouble with this country to-day. So long as the political parties of this country are divided along false and fictitious lines, and so long as the only real division is within the parties themselves, it will enable any highly organized class of voters of considerable numerical strength to hold the balance of power and obtain class legislation. That is the reason why I say I believe that the threat of Mr. Gompers and of organized labor to dominate the next Congress is very likely to be carried out in large measure. In my opinion, it will work in this way: We will say there is a Republican Member of the House of Representatives who represents a district with, we will say, 50,000 votes. It has had a small, working, reliable Republican majority. We will say that Member of Congress voted for the adoption of this conference report and voted in favor of the antistrike provision of this piece of legislation; we will say that there are 5,000 voters in his district, of the 50,000, that belong to labor unions, and 45,000 who do not belong to labor unions. Of those 45,000, we will say that 23,000 are Republicans, of the party to which the Representative belongs, while 22,000 are Democrats. If that Representative be renominated by his party, I believe in the coming election the 5,000 members of organized labor will go to the polls at the general election and, with practical unanimity, will vote as one man, in a body, against that Representative in Congress and for his opponent. It will not make any difference whether his opponent is favorable to what organized labors wants or not; I do not think they will pay much attention to that; they will say, "We will fix this man, anyway, as an example for the future; we will give him what he needs, anyway." So the 5,000 members of organized labor will vote against the reelection of this Republican Representative. Will the 45,000 voters who do not belong to organized labor vote for him because he stood true for their rights and welfare? They will not; they will not begin to do so; they will not think of doing so.

Twenty-three thousand of them will calmly and deliberately go to the polls and vote for him because he is on the Republican ticket, while 22,000 of them will go to the polls and calmly and deliberately vote for his opponent because his opponent is on the Democratic ticket; and the 5,000 organized labor votes, which will be cast practically as one vote, will defeat that Represenative for reelection. The 22,000 Democratic voters, instead of voting for the reelection of that man, will rub their hands in great glee and say, "Here is a chance to elect a Democratic Representative, and we will go to the polls and take advantage of it." The conditions would be the same, in my opinion, if they were reversed and if the Representative to whom I have referred were a Democrat. If the Democrats had 23,000 unorganized voters in the district and the Republicans had 22,000, the Democrat likewise probably would be defeated by the 5,000 votes of organized labor. An unorganized majority is helpless, when there is arrayed against it a compactly organized minority.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I might say by way of comfort to the Senator from Montana that I have just returned from my office, where amongst my mail were two letters the writers of both of which proceeded to say they had been Democrats all their lives, but, due to the vote of the Democratic Party on the antistrike provision in the House, that they had thereafter ceased to be Democrats. So, while the condition outlined by the Senator may obtain, not only labor but other voters will endeavor to settle this matter righteously, as it seems to me, at the polls, and, if they find that a man is being opposed simply because he has voted his convictions on this great subject, it is quite likely to make him votes from the other party.

Mr. MYERS. I congratulate the Senator from Michigan on receiving letters from two constituents out of the two or three million population of his State, saying that they will disregard party lines. Whenever the Republican Party in its national convention and in its platform declares in favor of antistrike legislation and in favor of strict antisedition legislation and against Government operation or ownership of public utilities, such as railroads and mines, I think it will be time enough for those who are in line with that view to declare their allegiance to it. I want to see some party action taken on the subject, but I do no see any more indication of it in one party than in the other. So that as long as political parties are constructed along fictitious lines of division and false issues that are simply raised for the purpose of making issues and in disregard of the real issues which confront the American people, I say there will be no opportunity for the majority of the people to rule in this country in accordance with their ideas of economic and industrial justice, but the balance of power will be held by a comparatively small body of highly organized, compact voters, who disregard party lines, disregard all other issues, and regard only their own will to rule in their own favor, in their own behalf, for their own benefit.

In order to carry its ends, there has been a desperate effort made by organized labor to make it appear that its interests are identical with those of the farmers of the country; and to unite the farmers of the country with organized labor in its campaign to overthrow both of the old political parties, to overthrow government by political parties, and to institute an autocratic government of class rule. How many farmers that may deceive, I do not know; but if the farmers will use their common sense and reasoning power, I believe they will see that their interests are not in accord with any such subtle political attempt.

I have here an article taken from the Associated Press of a few days ago, which I will read:

SHORT-HOUR WEEK CAUSE OF HIGH COST OF LIVING—PRICES WON'T FALL UNTIL WE CAN GET TO WORK AND SAVE SOME MONEY.

(By Associated Press.)

SYRACUSE, N. Y., February 1.

Sherman J. Lowell, master of the National Grange, in a statement given out here to-night, declared that it was the belief of the farmers of the country that the only way to reduce the cost of living was for everyone to be willing to do "a reasonable day's work," and that the 44-hour week would never support even America.

"Those who are best informed on agricultural conditions in America can not offer the slightest hopes of lower food prices, so far as the farmer is concerned," said the statement.

GET BUSY!

"In the reconstruction everyone must get ready to actually work again, to save again, and to a considerable degree to get back to thrift, sanity, and common sense, or else accept as permanent the present scale of living costs, in which event we might just as well stop ranting about the high cost of living and realize that a new basis of economic procedure is here to stay.

"This is the declaration of the National Grange, which sees in the future no reason why its members should slave long hours, seven days a week, to supply cheap food to the other workers of the country who are enjoying short hours and unlimited opportunity for rest and pleasure.

"Speaking as the largest and best established farmers' organization in America, the Grange hereby notifies the world that the farmers do not intend to keep responding to the call, 'produce, produce, produce,' so long as other lines adopt as their slogan, 'reduce, reduce, reduce.'"

In my opinion the fundamental economic mistake which organized labor in this country is making to-day is its constant, insistent pressure and its constant, unremitting effort constantly and ever to increase wages and reduce working hours and thereby reduce production. The cost of living never will come down as long as that is successfully done, and the cost of living is one of the vital issues that confront the American people to-day. It concerns them more than almost anything else; and I think the labor unions of the country are pursuing a false theory in their action in that regard.

I am glad to see that labor in England is beginning to awaken to the true situation of affairs in that respect. Under date of February 9, there appeared in the Associated Press telegrams of this country a telegram from London, as follows:

LABOR LEADER WARNS OF WORLD CRASH UNLESS MORE WORK IS DONE.
(By the Associated Press.)

LONDON, February 9.
(Canadian Press.)

James Henry Thomas, general secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, said to-day that the state of the world was such that unless something is done speedily a crash would come in which nobody would suffer more than the workers.

Mr. Thomas declared that the British workmen must work a quarter harder than before the war, the French twice as hard, and the Germans eighteen times harder. He added that the labor party's difficulties arose not through the cleverness of the other parties, but through jealousies in its own ranks.

I think as long as the labor unions of this country insist on the absolute, unqualified, unquestioned right to strike whenever they may wish to do so, for whatever they may deem a cause, and they to be the sole judges of the cause, disregardful of the public and of all others, and as long as they press steadily onward and forward in their insistence for ever-rising, ever-increasing wages and decreasing work hours and decreased production, there is going to be an issue before the people of this country to which the political parties of the present day and of the present alignment are not fitted and are not adjusted, but which must some time be adjusted along true political lines. When they are so adjusted I believe the majority of the people of this country will say that they believe the attitude of organized labor in that respect is radically wrong and contrary to sound economic principles and industrial justice, and that then a majority of the people, when they have an opportunity, will speak out on the subject in no uncertain terms; but there will have to be some changes in political alignment before it can be done.

Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say on this subject. I have given expression to some views which I have held for some time and on which I have done considerable thinking of late. I have tried to tell some plain truths, wholesome if unpalatable. As to the conference report, I believe it embodies the best that can be had on the subject at this time. It is not in all respects what I should like to have it, and not in all respects what most of us would like to have; but I believe, so far as it goes, it is fair, just, and workable, and will prove fair and just to the public, the railroad owners, and the railroad employees alike; and that when put in operation, if not interrupted by some unjustifiable strike, the railroad employees will find in time that it is to their interest and that they are better off under it than they ever were before.

I shall vote for the adoption of the report.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, when this bill was up before I expressed my views at considerable length. I realize that a great deal of legislation is brought about by compromise, and I shall therefore content myself now with a very few remarks as to my objections to the bill.

I must say that all of us are indebted to this conference committee for their long and arduous labors. Certainly they have worked faithfully, and no doubt have done the best they could, and, ordinarily, if I could do so I would vote for the report without protest; but it is so foreign to my views of what a bill ought to be that I can not refrain from stating my objections.

In the first place, it is contrary to all methods which have been enforced heretofore for fixing rates. I can not give my consent to the proposition that it is right to say that property shall earn so much upon its value, irrespective of its use. Not only that, but it is very doubtful about how you can get at the value. We have been trying to value these railroads for something like seven years, I believe, and before we get one valuation made the value has changed. Now, at best it would be merely a guess for the Interstate Commerce Commission; but to say here that we should now reverse all of our training and say that a road should earn 5½ or any other per cent on its value, irrespective of the quantity of freight it hauls, is to do away with all incentive for competition and for efficiency and for economy, and it certainly seems to me that it is on the wrong basis in that line.

Not only that, Mr. President, but I am thoroughly of the opinion that the bill is unconstitutional on two or three grounds: First, it seems to me that it confiscates private property without due process of law. The next proposition is that it is double taxation. It confiscates the income of the company without due process of law. It is class legislation. This rule does not apply to any other kind of property—not to banks, not to mills, not to factories—so it seems to me it is class legislation, it is special legislation, and it is obnoxious on that ground.

Then it is certainly contrary to the express provisions in the constitutions of many of our States. In the State of South Carolina we expressly provide in our constitution that one railroad can not acquire a competing line, and that provision of the constitution is carried out by our statutes, and the same no doubt is true in other States. This does away with all of our effort in the States to get competition. I feel that not a single new mile of railroad will be built after this bill goes into effect—I mean, as an independent proposition.

I do not refer to some little extensions which existing roads may make, but I feel that if this bill passes the owners of railroad property in this country will feel that they have practically sold their property to the Government, and we will destroy competition, and the buiding up of our roads, and we will stop developing our country.

I shall vote against the report, not on the ground that some vote against it, on the ground of the harshness of its labor provisions; I do not so decide. I should feel better satisfied if the labor provisions were stronger, but I feel that it is a bad principle to put in the bill to say that the railroads can not reduce the cost of their labor for the next six months. It is unwise for Congress to try to legislate salaries of any employees. While our friend, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], has cited us to a decision, and no doubt it was been decided, and no doubt that is the law, yet I feel that it is a bad principle and bad policy for the Congress to follow.

I wish that all disputes between capital and labor could be amicably adjusted, but I am not of the same opinion as my friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. I must congratulate him upon his manly stand, and I usually stand with him; but I am not in as doleful a mood as he this afternoon. I have a high faith in the wisdom and in the patriotism and in the good judgment of the American people. I do not believe that the people of this country will turn over the management of our Government to any class of our people. I feel that an autocracy of labor is just as distasteful to the people of this country as an autocracy of capital, and we are not going to allow either to come in here and rule our Government exclusively. The people are now doing more thinking along this line than they have ever done, and they are going to wake up, and they are going to elect men here, not to represent any particular class, but to represent all of our people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee concerning one feature of this bill, in order that I may have its meaning clarified.

On page 4 of the copy of the bill which I have in my hand, section 201, this language is found:

On the termination of Federal control, as provided in section 200, all boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways (hereinafter in this section called "transportation facilities") acquired by the United States in pursuance of the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Federal-control act (except the transportation facilities constituting parts of railroads or transportation systems over which Federal control was assumed) are transferred to the Secretary of War, who shall operate or cause to be operated such transportation facilities so that the lines of inland water transportation established by or through the President during Federal control shall be continued—

And so forth. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if the language which I have just read will result in the indefinite continuation of operation of Government barges upon the New York State Barge Canal?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I understand that this will not cover the operation of barges upon the New York State Canal. This was intended to cover the operation of the barges upon the lower Mississippi River and the Warrior River. These barges have been built, and they were acquired by the Government under section 6 of the Federal-control act. My information is that whatever has been done upon the New York State Canal has not been done under that section of the act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My own recollection is that the Government did build barges for use upon the New York State Barge Canal and for two years has been in a position to operate them and, I think, has operated some of them.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Railroad Administration advises the committee, as I recall, that it has not operated barges on the New York State Canal. Just how and under what authority that has been done I am unable to say, but the committee was informed that it was not done under section 6 of the Federal control act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The point is exceedingly important to the people of the State of New York. Of course, let me say to the Senator from Iowa, even if my construction of this language is accurate, I realize the impossibility of upsetting the conference report and reopening this whole railroad bill, but I did want to be clear about it and to state just a few things in connection with it.

Shortly after the entrance of the United States into the war the State authorities offered to the Federal Government the use of the barge canal in order to expedite transportation and to relieve the railroads of the very heavy burden that was weighing them down and probably would weigh them down during a considerable period of the war. That offer, as my recollection goes, was accepted, and for two years tariffs upon the New York Barge Canal has been under the control of the Federal Government through the Railway Administration. To the great disappointment of the people of the State, the Railway Administration did not use the canal to anything like its capacity; but the fact that they were using it prevented any private citizen from venturing upon making an investment in the building of a barge. The result is that this great waterway, together with its terminals, which has cost the taxpayers of New York at least $150,000,000, has been almost idle for two years, and there is a very strong feeling about it. The people of New York built that canal and paid for it out of their own pockets, and the people assured themselves and all their neighbors that when it was finished its use would be open to any citizen without the charging of tolls; that the State government would maintain it.

Now, Mr. President, the State government is maintaining it, but the Federal Government, by the use of its barges in the canal, makes it utterly impossible for any citizen of the State or anybody else outside the State to go into the canal traffic business, because no citizen will compete with his own Government. He can not do it.

I hope the Senator from Iowa is correct—I have not had time to look up section 6, referred to in the text of the bill in section 201—for if he is not correct, and this language means what I fear it means, and which, incidentally, the commercial interests of New York fear it means, the great New York State Barge Canal will never be of use to the citizens of the State. So long as the Federal operation of barges is continued there, the people of New York have spent their money for nothing, because none of them nor any other citizen can compete with the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is, of course, impossible to amend the bill now——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The committee formulated it upon the theory that the barges operated upon the New York State Canal were not a part of the property acquired under section 6 of the Federal control act, and we acted upon the advice that was given to us in regard to the matter. The bill was drawn solely for the purpose of taking care of transportation upon the lower Mississippi River and Warrior River. That seemed to be a very important thing to adjust in the bill. If it should turn out that we have not been correctly advised there would be no difficulty at some subsequent time in eliminating the New York State Canal from operation by the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as a part of my remarks I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter written to me by the secretary of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, which bears upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
New York, February 20, 1920.

Senator JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The New York State Barge Canal conference at its meeting held in Albany on Wednesday last, February 18, by a unanimous vote directed "that proper representations be made to the Government at Washington and to Congress in opposition to the provisions of the railroad bill (sec. 201) which contemplate the continued operation by the United States Government of barges on the New York canals for commercial purposes."

The provisions of section 201 apply generally to all the inland canals and waterways of the United States and to the operation of vessels thereon by the Secretary of War, and this includes the canals of New York State.

The protest of the New York State Barge Canal conference is directed against section 201 only so far as it applies to the New York canals, and does not call for or contemplate a repeal of section 201, but does call for the insertion of an amendment specifically excepting the canals of New York State from the application to them of the provisions of section 201, and the immediate and permanent withdrawal from these canals of all barges owned and operated for commercial purposes by the Railroad Administration upon the New York canals.

The insertion of the following amendment at the end of section 201 of the bill would be satisfactory, viz:

"Provided, That no vessels owned by the United States or under its control shall be hereafter operated for commercial purposes upon the canals of the State of New York, which are hereby expressly excepted from the application of the provisions of this section."

The New York State Barge Canal Conference represents in these views the following organizations, viz:

Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.
New York Board of Trade and Transportation.
Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce.
New York Produce Exchange.
Bronx Board of Trade, New York City.
Buffalo Chamber of Commerce.
Rochester Chamber of Commerce.
The city of Oswego.
Oswego Chamber of Commerce.
City of Utica, N. Y.
Chamber of Commerce of the Tonawandas.
City of Rochester.
Fulton Chamber of Commerce.
Troy Chamber of Commerce.
Plattsburg Chamber of Commerce.
Newburgh Chamber of Commerce.
Oneida Chamber of Commerce.
Poughkeepsie Chamber of Commerce.
Yonkers Chamber of Commerce.

It was the unanimous sentiment of the canal conference that the influence of the United States in the operation of boats upon the New York canals by the Railroad Administration during the last two seasons of navigation has been disastrous to the canals and the interests of the State of New York and to the commerce of the State, and that the State canals must be absolutely liberated from this baneful influence.

We understand that the provisions of section 201 as applying to the Mississippi River and other waterways are deemed to be desirable by the interests affected thereby, other than the New York canals, but that such interests have no wish that the provisions of section 201 shall apply to the New York canals, and there will not be a single voice heard in objection to the amendment we propose.

It is of the utmost importance that this amendment shall be made in the pending bill before its passage, because if not made we can hardly hope to secure the passage of a measure amending it immediately after its passage, or before the opening of the next season of navigation, and we must rid our canals of these United States barges before the season opens if we are to be able to encourage the building and operation of barges by independent enterprises.

The canal conference, therefore, appeals to you to exert your utmost effort to secure the insertion of the exception in the pending bill.

Very truly, yours,

FRANK S. GARDNER,
Secretary.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement regarding my position on the conference report. I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] concerning the probable attitude of both the great political parties in their platforms respecting the demands of labor. There are some people who believe that the political parties ought to take the position of resisting all demands of labor, but remain silent concerning the demands of organized capital. I sincerely hope that neither of the political parties will take a position resisting the demands of labor, but if the political parties will render a public service they will devote themselves to ascertaining the cause of the unrest and discontent and, in so far as governmental action can remedy such conditions, will seek the remedy and provide it.

The Senator from Montana also called attention to the fact that organized labor, holding the balance of power in a State or a district, could absolutely defeat anyone who took a position not in accord with their wishes. That may be true, but it goes without saying that it is the duty of every Senator here to consider not alone this legislation, but all legislation from one standpoint only, and that is the standpoint of the public interest. If organized labor does unjustly attack a Senator here because of his position with respect to demands that may be made by labor, any Senator ought to be willing to go down to defeat if necessary so long as he has but one thing in view, and that be the interest of the general public.

I appreciate that in the vote I am about to cast I may be placed upon the blacklist of labor. I can not help that, and I shall not worry about it if it comes.

Now, with regard to the pending measure, I voted against the Senate bill, the Cummins bill, for the reasons which I then gave, and one of the principal reasons was because the labor provisions in that bill I believed to be very unfair to the railway employees of the country. Under the provisions of that bill I believe that the final tribunal provided to pass upon disputes between employees and the railroad owners would not intentionally but inevitably mean that the final tribunal would be composed of men who were antagonistic to the interests of railway employees and would not be in a position to give them that justice which they were entitled to receive. Not only that, but it was provided in the bill that when such a decision was rendered it was in effect made a criminal offense for them to strike. I voted against that bill, and I suggested then that I believed the time had come when an impartial tribunal should be created to whom such disputes could be referred, and if such a tribunal was created, one that was fair, a tribunal that would deal justly with both capital and labor, there would be no occasion to have legislation attempting to prohibit the right to strike, because a fair decision receiving the indorsement of public sentiment would be acquiesced in by all parties concerned.

In the conference report which we now have before us that is provided. The obnoxious provision in the original bill has been eliminated. It is provided that the final tribunal shall consist of nine men, three of them selected from recommendations made by the railway owners, three by the railway employees, and three representing the public appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. We have here the recognition that should have come long ago, that a dispute between railway employees and employers is not merely a private quarrel between them but it is a matter in which the public has an interest. That is recognized in the labor provisions of the bill. The final arbiters will be the three men representing the public, and they can be trusted to do justice if there be an impartial tribunal appointed, as I believe there will be, and to render fair and impartial decisions.

But the bill stops there, and properly so, for, however desirable it may be to have uninterrupted service in the transportation interests of the country, we have not yet come to the point in the United States where we will have compulsory service or involuntary servitude upon the part of men anywhere. The bill leaves the right to strike unimpaired, but with a fair decision, a decision rendered by a fair tribunal, that decision will, in my judgment, be accepted by the railway employees and will be indorsed by public sentiment, and no strike can succeed in the United States that has not public sentiment behind it. So much for the labor provision.

Mr. President, organized labor has sent to all of us and to the press a protest against the adoption of this conference report. I may say in passing that I am gratified to observe that in the protest there is no protest whatever concerning the labor provisions in the conference report, from which it is fair to assume that organized labor does recognize that the provisions are fair and just. But they argue, first, that if the bill passes in its present form it will be granting a very large subsidy to the railroads of the country, an unconscionable subsidy. Let me read the paragraph. It states:

6. The Cummins-Esch bill, with its guaranty of earnings, is an invitation to waste and extravagance. If guaranteed a return, railway operators will be under no impulsion to keep down their own salaries, to buy cheaply, or to operate the railroads efficiently. Waste is inevitable under any kind of a guaranty of earnings. This is especially true with railway officers and stockholders interested, as they are, in every kind of supply bought by the railroads.

I may say in passing that there are only two guaranties in the conference report as I recollect it—one a guaranty that the owners of the railroads shall for a period of six months after March 1 receive a minimum return equal to the amounts they have received during Federal control, and the other a guaranty that the employees of the roads shall for a like period receive a minimum wage equal to that which they are now receiving under Federal control. If I am mistaken, the chairman of the committee will correct me.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is entirely right in that respect.

Mr. LENROOT. There is a direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow rates that will produce a return of not less than 5½ per cent and, in their discretion, 6 per cent upon the value of their property, but that direction lasts only for a period of two years. I would prefer that that were not in the bill. I think for the next two years it would mean the same whether it was in the bill or not, because I do not believe there is anyone who will take the position that at the present time a 6 per cent return on money is an unreasonable return.

There was great objection made when the bill was before the Senate, particularly by my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is now absent on account of illness, because of the provision in the bill that would have permitted, as was then claimed, the Interstate Commerce Commission to take the book value of a property investment in the road and base the return upon that book investment. Under the conference report the Interstate Commerce Commission is prohibited from placing any greater weight or value to this investment account in the books of a road than they are entitled to receive under the law as it now exists. So it can not be claimed that there is any direction or even permission to the Interstate Commerce Commission to take the book investment of the roads as a basis for making rates.

I have read a paragraph from the letter of organized labor as to the subsidy granted by this bill; but the very next sentence in the following paragraph reads as follows:

Bankruptcy, we believe, is inevitable if railroads are returned.

That is to say, these gentlemen believe that, notwithstanding in their opinion there is a large subsidy granted in the bill which will lead to waste and extravagance, nevertheless, under the terms of the bill and with this subsidy, as they view it, the railroads will be driven into bankruptcy.

8. Railway bankruptcy—

They say—

in the United States may bring on a panic. Railway securities and Government bonds are almost the only solvent securities in America. They form the basis of a great part of our credit. If they tumble, industry may tumble with them.

9. World-wide bankruptcy may result from such a collapse. The credit of the world rests in America. If the financial structure of America collapses there may be a world panic.

Mr. President, I would need nothing further to justify my support of the conference report than the language I have just read. The issue is not whether Government control shall continue for two years longer. The issue is whether the railroads shall be returned to their owners on the 1st of March under existing laws or whether they shall be returned under the terms of this bill. That is the only issue. The President has announced that he will return the roads to their owners on March 1; and if these gentlemen are right, that bankruptcy will ensue, even with the more liberal provisions of the bill, how can anyone justify the return of the roads under existing law with the result that these gentlemen say will follow if the roads do go into bankruptcy? Will anyone deny that if the roads of the country do go into bankruptcy, labor, not only labor upon the railroads but labor everywhere, will be the first sufferers from that result?

But, Mr. President, while I would need no futher justification for my vote upon the conference report than the language of the representatives of organized labor, let me call attention to another portion of the bill which everyone must agree is not only in the public interest but absolutely necessary if the public is to be protected, if the roads are to be returned to their owners, and that is the provision of the bill relating to the control of the issuance of securities by railway carriers.

There is nothing in the present law upon that subject. This bill does provide that no securities shall be issued without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Not only ought that to be a protection to the public but it ought to be a protection to the interests of the railway employees themselves. However, these gentlemen argue very strenuously for a continuation of Government control for two years. They speak about the increase in rates that will follow the return of the roads to their owners and how that will be carried on to the consumer. If they are right, that the railroads are now upon a paying basis or nearly so, if the Interstate Commerce Commission performs its duties there will be no increase in rates. If they are wrong, and the railroads are not upon a paying basis, if the Government retains their control the deficit must be made up out of the United States Treasury in the future as it has been made up in the past. There are some gentlemen who seem to think that if we pay money out of the Treasury, that money never comes from the people at all. They seem to have an idea that money comes into the United States Treasury out of the blue sky. So far as the people are concerned, whether a tax be levied to carry on transportation or whether an increase of rates be levied to pay the deficiency, the people pay the bill in both cases, and it rolls up in the same way in the case of taxes that it does in the way of increased rates.

It is estimated that an increase in rates affording an increased revenue of a billion dollars will mean an increase by the time it reaches the people of something like $4,000,000,000. Whether that be true or not, if it is true in the case of railroad rates, it is likewise true in the case of taxes. We have tried to reach the profiteer, especially during the war times, by taking the major portion of his profits after they have exceeded a reasonable amount, thinking that we would then protect the public; but what has happened in the case of excess profits? We all know that the practice to-day upon the part of practically all business men and manufacturers is to exact such prices as will compel the consumer to pay every dollar of the excess profits and a profit upon what he himself is to pay in taxes. The result is that in the prices that are fixed to the consuming public the manufacturer and the business man fixes his prices so that, in his judgment, he will make the same profit himself as if there were no excess-profit tax whatever.

The excess-profits tax is carried on to the consumer. So if in case of the transportation tax it is quadrupled, it is likewise quadrupled on the people in the case of the excess-profits tax.

Then there is another feature that these gentlemen do not seem to have considered, and that is this: If the railroads are to remain under Government ownership for a period of two years, even assuming that they would pay their own way, where is the new capital to be found with which to make the betterments and improvements which will be necessary in order to afford an efficient and adequate transportation system? If we hold them for two years, every railroad company in the United States is going to say, "Let Uncle Sam pay." If we continue the control under the present system, the United States will have to furnish anywhere between one and two billion dollars within the next two years upon capital account, to say nothing at all concerning any possible or probable deficit in operations; and that, too, Mr. President, with little or no security, for the lien of the Government for those capital accounts will be junior and subordinate to existing liens and mortgages. Where is the money coming from? Are we going to raise another billion dollars in addition to the staggering sum that we are compelled to raise for the ordinary purposes of running our Government? Are we to increase our taxes to raise another billion dollars? How are you going to do it and where are you going to put the taxes? True, it could be done; it could be done, of course, by several methods. We could reduce the exemption from income taxes to $600 or $800 a year, yes; so that practically every person in the land would be compelled to pay a portion of the money used for the benefit of the railroads. We could put a tax upon gross sales, yes; we could raise the money; but in either case the people of the country would pay every dollar of it. If there must be money raised in that way, I think it is a little more just that the railroads, through the use of their own credit, shall borrow the money, if they can, and in case of deficit in operation, if increased rates are necessary, I think it is fairer for those who utilize the transportation to pay for it in the first instance than that the people of the United States generally, irrespective of the benefits received by them, shall do so.

Mr. President, in voting for this conference report I desire to say that I do not believe it is going to prove a solution of the railway question; I do not believe it is going to be possible for the railroads to secure the amount of money necessary to furnish to the country an adequate transportation system; but we must choose between the turning back of the railroads within the next 10 days under existing law or under this proposed law. I am satisfied that if we retained control of the roads for two years longer we should simply have a situation much more difficult to unscramble and untangle than we have to-day.

There are some people who say, "We should continue Government operation for two years, and by that time we shall have an opportunity of demonstrating whether we ought to adopt the Plumb plan of railroad control." Why, Mr. President, there is nothing in the present situation that either helps or hinders the adoption of the Plumb plan, if the people of this country should ever desire to adopt it. Under the present plan we have control of the roads, and private citizens own them; under the Plumb plan the Government would own the roads and the railway employees would operate them. So there is no similarity, there is no common ground between the present situation and the Plumb plan. It would be just as easy for the people who desire to adopt the Plumb plan—which I am satisfied they never will—to do so after the roads have gone back to private ownership.

As for myself, I believe that we have got further to try out the experiment of private ownership under some such plan as this; but also I believe, Mr. President, that the time is not far distant when it will be recognized that the only solution of the railroad problem is either out-and-out Government ownership and Government operation or Federal incorporation and unification of the railroads under private ownership and public control; but compelled to choose, as we now are, between the laws as they exist or which did exist prior to our taking the railroads over and this bill, in the interest of the public, in the interest of the railway employees themselves, and in the interest of prosperity in this country, I shall vote for the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I find myself unable to vote for the pending conference report, and I desire to occupy about five minutes of the Senate's time this afternoon in giving my reasons for not being able to do so.

Mr. President, the railroad bill has undoubtedly been greatly improved in conference, but section 6 of the Cummins bill, which is to be found in section 422 of the conference bill, still contains the Government guaranty of 5½ per cent returns, or, in the discretion of the commission, 6 per cent returns, and also takes away the excess profits of the good roads and turns them into a fund for bad roads, and to these two principles of legislation I can not subscribe.

We do not guarantee a fixed income to any other class of our citizens. Then why make special favorites of the railroads?

It is true that the guaranty is limited to two years, but by this guaranty the camel gets his head under the tent, and I do not believe he will ever be gotten out. The provisions of this section are communistic and bolshevistic, and I doubt very much whether they can be maintained under our Constitution. They are certainly inimical to everything that we have heretofore believed to be a part of American principles. I believe that the railroads should be turned back to private ownership, but I can not subscribe to these provisions of the bill.

There are many other provisions of the bill that are unfair and unjust to the American people. Apparently the American shippers have not been taken into consideration at all. The American traveling and shipping public, generally more interested in the railroads than any one class of our citizens, is largely ignored in the bill. In this bill the Republican Party is running true to form in granting everything to the special interests, which it has so long served and which have so long served it.

I am so anxious to return the railroads to private ownership that I would like to be able to vote for the bill, but I can not, for the reasons mentioned, vote for this one, which taxes all the people for the benefit of a favored class of corporations, and then taxes the well-managed corporations for the benefit of wildcat concerns that have hitherto built more or less worthless railroads as a gamble.

Pass this bill this afternoon and the worthless stocks of railroads all over this country will be of great value on the stock market to-morrow morning, not because of any intrinsic value they may have now, but because of the favoritism of this Congress in giving a value by law where there was no value before. For the Government to make the stock of these wildcat concerns good is to my mind little short of criminal.

What I said about the Cummins bill on December 12 last I now repeat.

I have no antagonism at all to railroads or to railroad companies. They are absolutely necessary to the prosperity and the well-being of the people of this country. They should be encouraged in every proper way. They should be protected in all of their property rights. They should be encouraged by the Government to render their very best service. At all times they should be treated absolutely fairly by Congress, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, by the State commissions, and by every regulatory power.

I do not believe, I never have believed, in this so-called baiting of the railroads. It is not right. Business could not go along a day in this country without them. They are the great arteries of all business and all commerce. We must protect them in their lawful rights. We must see to it that they get a proper income. There is no desire upon my part in anything that I have said, or any inference that can be drawn from what I have said, that I am opposed to railroads; not at all. They are the builders up of communities, they are the builders up of States. A State full of railroads is a State of prosperity; it is a State of happiness; it is a State of progress; and I say that we ought not to pass any bill that will stop the building of railroads, as this bill does, in my judgment. We ought not to pass any bill that stops enterprise upon the part of the railroads themselves, as this bill does, in my judgment. We ought not to pass any bill that does away with competition in service, as this bill does. We ought not to pass any bill that does away with individual initiative, as this bill does. I believe in the railroads. I believe in their necessity and their value.

It may be asked what I would do with them. I have prepared with some care just what I would do with them. My idea of railroad legislation at this time may be succinctly stated as follows:

First. Terminate Federal control and restore the railroads to their several owners in a manner by which active competition in service may be restored and maintained.

Second. For the purpose of enabling carriers by railroad subject to the commerce act properly to serve the public during the transition period immediately following the termination of Federal control, provide for new loans to the railroads under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with reasonable limitation upon these loans, together with a temporary guaranty of present income for a period not longer than six months, the House bill provision on the subject of loans to the railroads being deemed a wise and proper provision.

I may say in that connection that I doubt the wisdom of a six months' guaranty, but we might let the present rate of 5 per cent continue, say, for 90 days, until they can secure these loans and go out and make their own way, as every other citizen goes out and makes his own way. Five per cent is more than they ever made before in their history. Why should we increase it? And especially why should we give this valueless stock a value to which it is not entitled? I think three months' guaranty would be absolutely sufficient at the present rate.

Third. Give to the Interstate Commerce Commission increased powers, including a supervisory jurisdiction over arbitration of labor troubles; the issuance of railroad securities and the chartering of additional lines, to the end that railroad securities may be stabilized and rendered a safe investment to the public; all dealings of the several railroad corporations with their employees; all subjects arising out of Federal control; refunding the carriers' indebtedness to the United States; and the establishment of minimum as well as maximum rates.

Fourth. Provide that existing rates shall be continued with full power vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise or lower them and thereby fix reasonable rates, to the end that both the railroads and the public shall be fairly treated and that each road that is efficiently, economically, and well managed shall be permitted to earn a just and reasonable income, but without Government guaranty.

Also, that railroads rendering the best service to the public and the greatest efficiency in management and operation shall be entitled to make the greatest income and that all railroads shall have and retain such incomes as they may rightfully earn without dividing any portion thereof with the Government or with other less favored railroads.

I say that if this bill were recommitted to the committee with instructions to prepare a bill along those lines, it would be for the manifest benefit of the American public, and the manifest benefit of the railroads themselves. In turning the railroads back—and we ought to have done it long ago—we should make the terms fair and just toward all—toward the public, toward the railroad owners, toward the security owners, toward the operators, toward the men, both union and nonunion men. We should not put any theoretical plan on the statute books. We must not let the Government continue to hold the bag. We should not put it in the power of any railroad organization to exploit the American people.

Mr. President, that is what this bill does—it puts it in the hands of the railroads of the country to tax the American people, to exploit the American people. The time will come, in my humble judgment, when every man who subscribes to this special legislation for special interests will wish he had not done so. The American shipper, the American business man, who daily uses the railroads, has some rights, but his rights are not safeguarded in this legislation. The people are again taxed for the benefit of a favored class. When rates go up to make the stock of the gamblers in railroad securities good, then will the plain people of this country understand how they have been fleeced by this remarkable bill. Instead of its being a bill turning the railroads back to their owners, it is a bill turning the taxing power of the Government over to the railroads. I can not conscientiously give my vote for such a bill, though I am not for Government ownership and want the railroads restored to their private owners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Lodge	Robinson
Ball	Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard
Beckham	Hale	McLean	Shields
Borah	Harris	McNary	Simmons
Brandegee	Harrison	Myers	Smith, Md.
Capper	Henderson	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Spencer
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Dial	Kellogg	Owen	Townsend

Fletcher	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
France	King	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Poindexter	Warren
Gay	Knox	Pomerene	Watson
Glass	Lenroot	Ransdell	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I had expected to enter into a somewhat full discussion of the questions presented in this conference report; but the hour is late, and Senators are very anxious, I am sure, to vote; so I am going merely to state in a very few words the reason why I shall vote for the conference report, notwithstanding the fact that I voted against the Cummins bill.

I am not going to discuss this bill. The conference report has eliminated a great many things in the bill that were objectionable to me. Since the bill was formerly before the Senate I have had time to investigate thoroughly some questions about which I then said I was in doubt because I had not sufficient information to form a satisfactory conclusion. I have had that time for investigation. The conference report has removed some of the features of the bill which were most objectionable to me. It is still not a perfect measure; it is still far from such a bill as I would desire; but I am not entirely satisfied that under the circumstances it is not about as good a bill as we could get, especially in view of the fact that the time for action is so short.

I am going to vote for this conference report not because I entirely approve it but because I know, as every Senator here knows, that unless legislation is passed now providing for the return of the railroads to private ownership they will under the Executive order in a very few weeks go back into the hands of their private owners without legislation.

Mr. President, I believe that if, in the present condition of the railroads of this country, the Government shall turn them back to their owners without some provision such as is contained in this conference report, in a very short time—in less than three months, I will say; indeed, that is rather too long a time—the result, in my judgment, will be a financial and business condition in this country of such character and such proportions, fraught with so much danger to the public interests, and so disruptive of all the business conditions of the country, that even our supposedly panic-proof Federal Reserve Banking System would not be able to save the country from a panic.

I recognize that there is some opposition to this legislation growing out of its supposed defects, but I am of the opinion that, eliminating the supposed defects in its machinery, there is a substantial agreement throughout the country on the part of the railroads, on the part of the business interests of the country, and on the part of the masses of the people and taxpayers of the country that under the circumstances this measure ought to be passed. I do not say there is no opposition to it. There is certain spasmodic opposition, and there is one source of organized opposition—an opposition which, under ordinary circumstances, I might very highly respect. I refer to the opposition of the labor unions of the country.

Mr. President, I am thoroughly convinced that the opposition from this source is not based upon any defect in this legislation for the accomplishment of the purpose it has in view. I know that the labor unions state that it will bring about certain results disastrous to them; but, when you analyze that source of opposition, you see that there is no foundation to it; at least, there is no opposition upon which they have laid their fingers, and the grounds of which they have stated, that in my juudgment it lies in the mouth of labor to urge. At first, of course, they had good grounds for opposing it on account of its antistrike provisions. There were many of us that to some degree sympathized with them in that opposition; but those provisions have been removed. It is true that they contend that the arbitration provisions of the bill will be hurtful and detrimental to their interests; but, Mr. President, it does not lie in the mouth of labor to oppose compulsory arbitration of the character provided in this bill. They have too often consented to that proposition and too often championed that proposition. It is only a few months now since a great conference met in this city, and in that conference labor complained that they were not permitted to have arbitration because of the opposition of the other parties to that controversy. Arbitration is something that the representatives of labor in this country have never opposed, so far as I know. They have opposed penalties for failing to carry out the terms of arbitration awards, but this bill does not provide for any of those things which they have opposed in connection with arbitration. Their opposition, therefore, must be taken as confined to the proposition of arbitration advanced in the conference report, unless, of course, they put it upon the ground that the public has no right to be represented in an arbitration board to pass upon wage questions as between them and their employees.

Mr. President, that may be true in certain cases, but it is not true with reference to arbitration to decide the question of railway employees' wages. The railway is a public utility. The service which it performs is performed in the interest of the public, or at least it is supposed to be performed in the interest of the public. The public pay whatever wages are fixed and agreed upon, voluntarily or compulsorily. The public not only pays the wages but they pay the rates of transportation that may be established. So both the transportation rates allowed to the railroads in this bill and the wages that may be allowed in the arbitrations provided for in the bill will have to be paid by the public; and to say that the public has no right to representation in the fixing of these wages and these rates, which it must pay to the last penny, is absolutely untenable. The labor unions can not object to the bill on that score.

Mr. President, there are other supposed objections asserted by the unions which are just as untenable as this and which I will not discuss now. These objections to the character of this legislation are not the real objections of labor to the bill. They have not suggested a better process of legislation for the accomplishment of this purpose than is contained in this bill. It is not, in my judgment, a bona fide and sincere objection to the bill. The objection is grounded upon another theory and for the purpose of promoting another interest. The unions are opposed to this legislation because they want Government ownership of railroads in this country. They say, "Let the roads be run two years longer by the Government." For what purpose? To try out the question of Government ownership, and, further, to test its merits and give them an opportunity, through their propaganda and their agitation, to strengthen their organization, and to undermine the sentiment of this country against Government ownership.

Why do they ask for Government ownership? Why are they so insistent upon it? The reason is a purely selfish one. It is because they believe that under Government control of the railroads they will be able to obtain higher wages; that they will be able, through their control of the Congress of the United States, if I may say it, through the opposition that they are now organizing against every man who dares to vote against the measures they advocate, to do what they did when they came here and forced us, against our will, to pass the Adamson bill in order to save the situation in this country. That is the ground of their opposition—not that the bill is defective, not that the bill will not properly meet the situation and is not an appropriate bill for returning the roads to their private owners, but because of their purely selfish interests.

I am not an opponent of labor. I have respected their demands when they appealed to my judgment and to my conscience. If the representatives of labor come to me to-day in advocacy of any of their measures, my disposition will be, if I can properly help them, to support them. But when the representatives of labor come to me and ask me to support a proposition that I believe is fraught with danger to this country, in order that their selfish interests may be subserved, I can not find it in my heart or in my conscience to support them .

Why should we take time in order that the question of public ownership may be tried out, in order that we may better find what is the sentiment of the country, in order that there may be time to formulate and mold public sentiment in the country in favor of Government ownership? If any proposition in the country has been met and, in my judgment, decided definitely and decided right, it is the question of the Government ownership of railroads. Away back in the nineties a great party sprung up suddenly known as the Populist Party. It acquired enormous proportions and influence in certain sections of the country. Their cardinal demand was Government ownership of railroads. The time was most auspicious for favorable consideration and action upon that proposition. The railroads in the country at that time had become the dominant influence in politics and in business. Through their supreme control of the distribution of the products of industry in the country they regulated our politics and dominated every business interest in the country. And yet even in those conditions the people of the country overwhelmingly turned down Government ownership. Why? They recognized the dangers of the situation which then existed. They recognized that they must be relieved in the interest of the people. But they saw greater danger in the alternative proposition of the Populist Party, which was Government ownership of railroads. They saw in that proposition the utter destruction of the rights of the States of the Union. They saw in that proposition the unbalancing of the division of power between the coordinate branches of the Government of the country. They saw the executive department of the Government suddenly constituted into a giant dictator against which the power of the people in the future would be absolutely impotent. They decided then and there, I think, definitely, that the only way to deal with the question was through regulation and control by that means.

We have followed that ever since, and most of the evils that were complained of in those old Populist days were remedied. The railroads have taken their hands off the politics of the States and the Nation. The rates which they are permitted to charge the people have been reduced to a reasonable basis. There was no further arbitrary control of the business of the country; there was no further domination of the politics of the country.

We had during the war, to meet the exigency that everybody recognized the railroads were unable to contend with, to take the railroads over. We can see now that if we had not taken them over, in view of the enormously increased traffic that was entailed by reason of that conflict, the railroads would utterly have collapsed. Our experience during those few years does not strengthen the position of Government ownership as taken by the Populists in the nineties, but it incalculably weakens their position. We have had as the result of Government operation during the war a practical demonstration of the unwisdom of the Government operating the public utilities of the country. In an incredibly short time under this system we are now told by the distinguished Senator who is chairman of the committee that the losses of the people will probably amount to something nigh a billion dollars.

If my objection to the features of the legislation were twofold greater than they are, when I am confronted by the fact that in less than 10 days if this legislation is not passed the railroads will be returned to their owners, under conditions that will bring about financial and business chaos and demoralization in the country that can not result otherwise than in widespread panic and industrial ruin, I feel impelled to cast my vote for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have received protests against this bill from labor, as has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I have received protests from railroad managers and from shippers. In fact, I have received protests from everyone affected by railroads, probably, except the bondholders and stockholders. However, I feel that that which should influence me in this matter should not be the protests I have received from anyone. Most of the speakers that I have heard to-day seemed to find their incentive in some protest.

The bill is intended, I believe, to establish permanent regulations upon the return of the railroads to their owners. It occurs to me that it would be far better to return them without any regulation than to return them with regulations that are indefinite and uncertain and that have had their origin in legislative expediency, as was stated by the chairman of the committee.

I realize that the conference committee has worked hard on this matter and I realize the necessity for the adoption of the conference report. If it were a matter of compromise on an appropriation bill, I would not have any hesitation in voting for it. I can understand where there can be a compromise between an appropriation for $50,000,000 and one for $100,000,000, but I can not understand how there can be a compromise of the character we find in this report. It pretends, on the one hand, to protect labor against the control of anyone, in their wages and hours of labor and in the conditions under which they shall work, and at the same time it pretends to protect the people of the country against any act on the part of labor to obtain such protection. It is a simple pretense on both sides. It is the only thing that could come out of the character of compromise that the conferees on the part of the two Houses have been engaged in.

I am opposed to Government ownership and have been at all times, and yet I believe confidently that if there is anything on earth that is going to bring the Government to Government ownership of railroads it is the passage of this bill. It will not be six months, in my opinion, before the railroad owners, the laborers, and the shippers and everyone else, except the bondholders, will be complaining against the turmoil and chaos that the bill is going to bring about.

We hear a speech reciting the horrors of Government ownership, but what does this bill do? It does not provide for Government ownership, but it provides for Government responsibility. It throws all the obligations and burdens and liabilities on the Government, and at the same time denies the Government the ownership of the property. I would prefer Government ownership to individual ownership and Government paternalism. The bill is founded absolutely upon selfishness and legislative deception. It is influenced by railroads that never earned 5 per cent on their capital in the history of their existence, bondholders and stockholders of drowning railroads. It is influenced by coast points that have been built up through arbitrary and discriminatory railroad laws.

You are preparing railroad regulations for the future, and yet, in spite of the fact that your committee have found by a majority vote heretofore that the so-called long-and-short haul rates are indefensible, you perpetuate them in the bill. Senators talk about taxation by reason of high rates. What does any railroad rate amount to to us as compared with a rate that costs the people of my State twice as much to ship freight to Boston as it does the people of California? Yet that is exactly what you have perpetuated in this bill. You have not only perpetuated it in the bill with regard to my State, but with regard to the State of Montana, the State of Arizona, the State of Texas, and all the other intermountain States. Every one of those States is suffering under this discriminatory legislation.

I want to say to you to-day that as a matter of fact we pay for the shipment of our products to-day to the eastern markets nearly twice as much as they pay from the Pacific coast points. How do you justify that? Do you expect any man suffering under those conditions to vote for this kind of a bill? Is there anyone here willing to stand on the floor of the Senate to-day and deny that we pay $40 where Pacific coast points only pay $20 for the shipment of wool to the eastern markets? This is but one example.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The conditions of which the Senator from Nevada complains do not arise out of this bill. They find their authority in the existing law. This bill does not perpetuate that law, as the Senator has stated. On the contrary, it amends it. It modifies this discrimination, I think, to the very material advantage of the interior country.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know the Senator thinks that, or he would not have stated it, but as a matter of fact if this little proviso found on page 66 in section 406 were not there, it would never be in the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make that discrimination. The Senator from Washington has introduced a bill in the Senate, and on one occasion had a favorable report on it, where he endeavored to strike out this very provision that we find in the bill to-day. Why did he want to strike out that provision? It was because under the provision put in this bill the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to grant a railroad company the right to charge more for a shipment from the East to Spokane than to Seattle, which haul is several hundred miles longer on the same line.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. One might infer from the statement the Senator has just made that that proviso was proposed by this bill. That is not the case. The proviso to which the Senator refers is in the existing interstate commerce act.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand that the proviso is in the existing interstate commerce act, and the Senator introduced a separate bill providing for the striking out of that proviso. Why? Undoubtedly, it is obvious why. It is because under that provision the Interstate Commerce Commission, utilizing that authority, was permitting the railroads to charge more, as I said, for hauling freight from eastern points to Spokane than through Spokane to the Pacific coast. In fact, they were charging as much for freight from Chicago to Spokane as they charged to Seattle and back to Spokane, with a very slight discount. They were charging for freight from Chicago to Reno, Nev., as much as they charged from Chicago to San Francisco and back to Reno, Nev., with a very slight discount. They were doing the same thing on the southern route. They were charging as much for freight from Chicago, St. Louis, New York, and Boston to points in New Mexico and Arizona as they were charging to San Diego, Calif., and back to those points. It was absolutely indefensible. It had but one excuse in the world, and that was to please the selfish demands of the Pacific coast points. The committee recognized that, and the only answer of the committee was, if we right this matter now it will work a hardship upon those people who have enjoyed these special privileges. But I say to you that you do perpetuate it in this bill. Why? Because you are carrying in the bill exactly the same provision which the Senator from Washington and other western Senators have sought to strike out of the interstate commerce act for years. I for one say that I do not care where that provision is found, in what bill it is found, I shall never vote for a bill that contains it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. To restate what I think the situation is in regard to the matter, that provision is going to remain in the law whether this bill passes or not. The Senator does not get rid of that provision by voting against the conference report or by defeating this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator realizes that a condition may come about by which we may strike it out of this bill, or it may come about by which we may repeal that portion of the interstate commerce act. If this bill does not become a law, then the conference committee will probably attempt to deal with the matter. If this bill does not become a law, and the bill comes back before the Senate for due consideration, the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Nevada will have an opportunity to protect their States, as we have been trying to do for years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is that point in conference at all?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it is in conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is in conference by reason of the fact that there are two separate bills, and they have both been before the conference committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was that particular point passed upon by both Houses?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it was not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree with the Senator about the point, but I see nothing in conference about it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator in this way: The provisions are different in the two bills. The bills are entirely different, and it has been held and stated in this body that where two bills entirely different go into conference a substitute of any character or kind may be presented by the conferees of either body. What I am contending is this: I feel that the bill imposes upon me the duty to vote against it in the hope that it will not become a law, in the hope that the bill will be sent back to the respective bodies for further consideration. I was not here when the bill was being considered in the Senate. I was prevented from being here by reason of illness in my family. I simply state that as the reason why I did not then make the remarks that I am making now.

I want to say to you not only is the discrimination such as I have stated, but that every interior point in the country is discriminated against, not only in freight from the East but in shipments from the various points in those States. Machinery that we buy from Pennsylvania, New York, Chicago, and Boston we pay more for than do the people on the Pacific coast, 600 or 700 miles farther away on the same haul. Not only that, but we pay more for the shipment of our products 1,000 miles shorter distance than the people who are on the other side of us. We have no market, we can not have wholesale houses, we can not have factories by reason of the perpetuation of this unjust discrimination in this railroad bill. I have given an illustration.

I said the bill was based upon selfishness, and it is. The whole underlying principle of it is selfishness, and the method in which it was obtained was by the most humiliating consideration compromise and legislative expediency that anyone has ever yet seen.

I want to say one more thing in conclusion. If there were no other reason than my oath to support the Constitution as I see it, that would prevent me from voting for the measure. We may fix rates; but when a railroad earns a certain income under those rates that earning is legal, and it can not be taken away from them in whole or in part unless it be in violation of the Constitution of the country. The bill attempts to state that the railroads may earn 10 per cent and that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall take 5 per cent or 4 per cent from them. There is no authority in the Constitution to do that. They may regulate the rate, but that is all that they may do in a case of this kind.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in answer to the last remark of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], of course there is all authority under the Constitution for what he denies. There is not only that authority, but there is authority under the Constitution to take and operate the railroads, if anyone chose. I am opposed to that. There is authority under the Constitution to force a consolidation of all the roads, simply because the railroads are not private enterprises but are quasi public servants and are quasi public corporations.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for that purpose. I am in favor of the adoption of the conference report, although there are several provisions in the bill and several provisions in the existing law of which I do not approve. However, when you are brought face to face with a situation you are not called upon to say what is the best thing possible, but what is the best thing presently attainable. I think that this conference report is the best thing presently attainable. I do not, however, want my position in favor of the adoption of the conference report misunderstood, and therefore I want to say that in a part of what has been said by the Senator from Nevada I sympathize very much. As to that, I like to go back to history for an argument.

When the original railroad commission bill, as it was called, which afterwards became the interstate commerce law, passed the House of Representatives under the championship and leadership of Mr. Reagan, of Texas, afterwards a Member of this body, and prior to that time postmaster general of the Confederacy, and a man of very great ability, it contained a proviso to the effect that there should never be a freight rate for a short haul exceeding a freight rate for a long haul upon the same road in the same direction. When that bill got here, the Hon. John Sherman, then a Senator from the State of Ohio—I believe it was he, but if not he, he advocated it, at any rate—proposed an amendment which the Senate adopted, putting in three little words, "under similar conditions," I believe were the words or, perhaps, "under similar circumstances."

When the law went to the courts and to the Interstate Commerce Commission they decided that when freight was being carried from New York to San Francisco or from Boston to New Orleans on a railroad the railroad had a right to compete with water rates on the ground that water rates and land rates were not similar but dissimilar, and that, therefore, the three little apparently innocent words "under similar conditions" changed the entire construction of the law. They, therefore, ruled that a bale of cotton could be carried down the Yazoo River from my town, which was on the Yazoo River, to New Orleans on the railroad for $1.25, whereas from Vaughan Station, 25 miles due east from me, and the same distance on the same railroad, but not on a navigable river, they could charge $2.25 a bale. The decision was based upon the ground that Yazoo City was on a waterway and Vaughan not, although Yazoo was out of the direct way from Memphis to New Orleans. What has been the consequence? The entire actual commerce upon the Mississippi River has been killed as dead as a door nail. When I was a boy I could go down to the wharf at Memphis, Tenn., and find any day from 15 to 25 boats at the levee. You could have gone down to New Orleans and found still more; to Vicksburg and found as many; but the minute the railroads were allowed to reduce their freight rates in competition with water rates just low enough to put the steamboats out of operation, the steamboats went out of operation.

Then, a great many people in these towns on the rivers but in favor of river and harbor bills began to talk about "potential competition." What is needed is not "potential" competition but actual competition.

What was the further consequence? The further consequence was that the railroads on each side of the Mississippi River—and there is a continuous line on each side—were congested with freight, so that it frequently took absolutely a longer time to send a given commodity by freight on the railroad from Memphis, Tenn., to New Orleans, La., by rail than it did downstream by river, because the railways were congested. The reasons for that Senators who understand insurance and understand the remainder of the situation will appreciate.

Mr. President, what happened in Germany in connection with a similar condition? Under old Bismarck's wise statesmanship the German Reichstag absolutely forbade any railroad ever charging more for a short haul than for a long haul. There were railroads on each side of the River Rhine, and when I was a boy, before Bismarck's policy went into operation, the Rhine had no great cargo-carrying business at all. Tourists made use of it and it carried a few commodities from river landing to river landing, just as the Arkansas or the White River steamboats do; but after that policy was put into operation two things occurred. The first thing that occurred was that all the lumber and the iron ore and the coal, where expedition of delivery was not essential to the business, went by water down and up the Rhine, and other business requiring expedition went by rail, there being two continuous railroads, one on each side of the Rhine. The consequence was that the railroads were never congested and that the Rhine increased its business twentyfold.

The consequence of the other policy, which was pursued here, was that the great Mississippi River, the central artery of this country, carrying freight from St. Paul to New Orleans and from above St. Louis on the Missouri to New Orleans and from above Cincinnati on the Ohio to New Orleans, was absolutely crippled and put out of business except for a little coal delivered on barges downstream and some grain delivered in the same way.

So I am just as much opposed to the system which is criticized by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] as he is; but, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] says, the fault is in the present law and not in this conference report. That is not all. That particular point about long and short hauls is not in conference at all. If the conferees had attempted to deal with it a point of order could have been made, under the amendment to the rules submitted some time ago by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and adopted by this body, and the entire report could have been recommitted to the conferees. The old law contains the objectionable provision; the House bill does not alter it, and the Senate bill repeats it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. This bill reenacts that section of the interstate commerce act, and in reenacting it the conferees could have eliminated this discrimination.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, of course, and if they had done so and if the House had not eliminated it, then there would have been a point in conference; but the House did not eliminate it, and the Senate did not eliminate it, but repeated it, and, therefore, there is no difference in conference between the two Houses upon the particular point.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Vice President has ruled on that point, and his decision has been sustained in this body. It was made on the general leasing bill, I think, or on a subsequent bill. A Senator, acting as presiding officer, having held to the contrary, subsequently the Chair ruled that where the Senate passed a bill and the House struck out all except the enacting clause and substituted a separate bill, the conferees were not obliged to adopt one section or the other in conference, but where the two sections were different the conferees were at liberty to go so far as to write a new section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand that, but quoad this particular subject matter, there are not two different sections. The old law is left by the House untroubled; it stays upon the statute books; and as the House did not change it, but even repeated it, then there is no difference between the two Houses upon that subject.

However, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing that question. I arose more for the purpose of reinforcing what the Senator from Nevada has said about the injustice of not providing in the law that no railroad shall ever charge more for a short haul than for a long haul of freight in the same direction. The first objection to the power or discretion to charge more for a short than for a long haul is that it kills water commerce; the second objection to it is that it congests railway commerce; the third objection to it is that if a railroad charges less for freight from New York to San Francisco or from Boston to New Orleans than it does from either terminal point to some intermediate point, it discriminates by double force in favor of the water terminii.

Water carriage alone—a gift of God and of nature—makes a sufficient discrimination, and if a railroad were forbidden ever to charge more for a short haul than for a long haul, whenever they reduced the long-haul charge they would have to reduce the short-haul charge proportionately, and intermediate points would get the benefit, and this would avoid the very inequity of which the Senator from Nevada complains and would bring about that equality of opportunity, which, whether for individuals or communities, spells equality.

I know in my own section how the scheme has been worked. Freight can be carried from Memphis to New Orleans upon the Mississippi River, by the Illinois Central or the Mississippi Valley Road, or on the road on the western side of the river. The rail rates are put just a little bit above the water rates, because they need not go quite down to the water rate. Shippers having the same rate both by water and rail will prefer to send by rail, with the idea that the shipment will reach its destination quicker. So the railroads put the boats out of commission; they were tied up; no new boats were built to take their places; and the great, magnificent interior waterway system that God gave this country has been deprived of almost all of its efficacy.

I live upon a waterway terminal; I have every interest in favor of waterway transportation. Natchez and Vicksburg, Miss., and Memphis, Tenn., where I was born, have been petitioning me to vote against a proposition that I believe was originally introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], although I do not remember accurately, the intent of which was to prevent a greater charge for a short haul than for a long haul on the same railroad in the same direction. I wrote back and told them that I would not do so. They kept saying that they got cheaper freight rates by "the potentiality of river navigation," but I told them, "I do not care about that"; that what I wanted was actual competition and not potential competition, and that I did not admit the right of special terminal privileges on the part of railroads based upon water competition.

What right was there to send freight from Memphis, Tenn., to New Orleans, La., at a lower rate than from either terminal point to halfway the distance between the two? Yet that used to be the case. It is not quite the case now; it is not quite that bad; but they do still send it cheaper to the terminal points than they do from either terminal point to an intermediate point. I remember the time when they charged twice as much from either of the water terminals to the point halfway down the line as they did clear through to the other water terminal.

I do not so much reprobate the question of discrimination against intermediate points, although that is unequal, inequitable, unjust, and bad, as I do the destruction of the God-given navigability of the waterways of interior America. This is the very opposite of conservation of resources. It is destruction of natural resources by the artificial operation of statute law. Here is this great arterial system from above St. Paul to New Orleans, from the Blue Ridge down to the Gulf, from the Rocky Mountains nearly down to the Gulf; and just by three apparently innocent little words in a law this whole magnificent opportunity of the American people was destroyed. You may say whatever you please about old Bismarck and the Germans—and I have no good word to say for Bismarck's way of running his country—but Bismarck had better sense than that; he never destroyed the commerce on the Rhine; he built it up. He never destroyed the railroads, because while the water carried the heavy commodities, the railroads carried the light commodities, and, wherever expedition of delivery was the chief thing to be considered, the railroads carried the freight and where cheapness of delivery was the chief thing the water carried it.

I am with the Senator from Nevada upon the reason that he gives, but I am absolutely opposed to his position in the conclusion which he reaches, because this question of the adoption of this conference report goes far beyond that. I hope some of these days to cooperate with him in amending the defect in the present law; and I can tell the Senator all he has to do is to strike out the three little words in that old act "under similar circumstances" or "under similar conditions."

Then later on there was another act passed which left it within "the discretion" of the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit a greater charge for a short haul than for a long haul.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the one I have in mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Strike that out also, and then you have cured the whole evil; but, for Heaven's sake, do not let us defeat this conference report upon which there hang ends and purposes and public utilities infinitely superior in importance to the abuse to which he and I have referred, however great that abuse may be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word, in order to correct the evident misapprehension of the Senator from Mississippi in regard to the provisions of this bill. The three little words which the Senator from Mississippi says have been the cause of discrimination in the making of freight rates against large sections of the country were stricken out of the law in 1910; they are no longer in the law. What he says he will cooperate with the Senator from Nevada in doing was done nine years ago.

I am in entire sympathy with the criticism of the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Mississippi as to the abuses which have been allowed to arise under the fourth section of the interstate commerce act. They arise under the proviso of that act which vests discretion in the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant exceptions to the fourth section of the act, which section prohibited in general terms the charging of a greater rate for the short haul than for the long haul. Sharing the views expressed by the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Nevada, representing the great interior of the South and the great interior of the Southwest, the intermediate points upon railroad lines, I want to say to them that that power vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission out of which these abuses have grown is limited and modified and removed by this bill in three separate particulars.

This bill prohibits the Interstate Commerce Commission from taking into consideration potential water competition, which the Senator from Mississippi has said was the ground upon which discrimination against the Mississippi River had been allowed. That is one improvement over the existing law.

In the second place, this bill provides that in allowing the railroads to charge a lower rate for the long haul than for the short haul over the same line in the same direction for the same class of goods, that lower rate shall be reasonably compensatory. In that respect it is a substantial improvement over existing law, and tends to remove the abuse which the Senators have described, because under the existing practice the Interstate Commerce Commission have allowed a rate based upon what they called the out-of-pocket cost—that is, they have allowed the railroads to charge a rate which merely paid for the transaction itself, with nothing in the way of interest upon their bonds or dividends upon their stock.

I do not know what construction the courts will give to the words "reasonably compensatory" as contained in this bill; but if the courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission give those words the construction which I think they should give them—namely, that there should be a reasonable return upon the investment in the railroad property—those words which are contained in this bill will almost completely remove the abuses to which the Senators have referred.

There is one more improvement over the existing law contained in this bill, and that is as to rail competition. Where a long line and a short line meet at a certain point and compete there for business, under existing practice the long line has been allowed to charge a higher rate to an intermediate point than to the junction point, on the ground that it was necessary for it to make a lower rate at the competitive rail point in order to compete with the short line. This bill limits and modifies that abuse by providing that a higher rate shall not be charged to any intermediate point that is a shorter distance than the length of the short line to the competitive point. So, instead of the Senators serving their constituents and their country, if they should succeed in defeating this bill in the removal of the abuses which have existed under the fourth section of the interstate commerce act, they would defeat the only piece of legislation which it has been possible to bring to the point of being enacted into law that Congress has had before it since 1910, or, in fact, since 1887, when the original interstate commerce act was passed.

I submitted to Congress an absolute rule prohibiting under all circumstances the charging of a larger rate for the short haul than for the long haul. Twenty-five Senators voted for it. It was submitted to the Senate upon full discussion and argument. I have filed a report exhaustively discussing this entire question. It has been twice printed in the RECORD. It was once reported favorably from the Interstate Commerce Committee. I submitted the proposition to the committee, and the committee voted upon it. It was argued in the conference committee, and the conference committee voted upon it; and this legislation as contained in the bill is the best possible improvement over the existing law, as a matter of practical legislation, that it is possible to obtain. The interior country which suffers from these abuses is interested in the enactment of this bill, among other things, in order to secure this amendment of the fourth section of the interstate commerce act.

Just one word as to the parliamentary situation to which the Senator from Mississippi referred—as to the agreement of the conference committee upon this particular section of the act.

The condition was simply this: The House had nothing in the bill on the fourth section of the interstate commerce act. The Senate had an amendment of the fourth section, and the conference committee agreed upon the Senate amendment. That is all there was to it. Of course, it had a right to agree upon it. The House receded from its objection and the conference committee agreed, as they frequently agree upon differences between the two Houses in matters of that kind.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. Taking the statement of the Senator from Washington as correct—and I have the same recollection in regard to it—if the Senate has a section in the bill and the House substitutes an entirely different bill, with no provision with regard to the matter, then, when it comes into conference, it is not a question of adopting the Senate section or the House section, because there is no House section. The question then is whether you will adopt the Senate section or reject the Senate section or modify the Senate section; and you can modify the Senate section in any way that would be agreeable to the House, and it would not be subject to a parliamentary objection.

That is exactly what I contended, and that if the conferees had been earnest in desiring to eliminate this bad practice that the Senator has been discussing they could have done it very easily, and if the bill is returned to conference it will be in their power to do so again.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senate conferees could have adopted a different provision if they had had the votes to do it; but this provision grew out of the defeat in the Senate of the stronger measure, to which the Senator has referred, and it was the best that could be obtained.

Mr. POINDEXTER subsequently said: In connection with my remarks on the long-and-short-haul clause, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks lines 3 to 16, inclusive, on page 67 of the conference report, indicating the amendment which the conference report contains on the long-and-short-haul clause of the interstate commerce act.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

But in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed; and if a circuitous rail line or route is, because of such circuity, granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct line or route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on its line, the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points; and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is mistaken, and I am unwilling that his statement shall go without quoting the RECORD. The Senate did amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act, and it included this proviso in reciting the fourth section:

Provided, however, That upon application to the Interstate Commerce Commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not fairly compensatory for the service performed; and if a circuitous rail line or route is, because of such circuity, granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct line or route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on its line the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points; and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence.

Wherever a carrier by railroad shall in competition with a water route or routes reduce the rates on the carriage of any species of freight to or from competitive points it shall not be permitted to increase such rates unless after hearing by the commission it shall be found that such proposed increase rests upon changed conditions other than the elimination of water competition.

What I want to call the Senator's attention to is the fact that this authority, by virtue of a proviso that is reenacted and restated in this bill, is the very proviso under which all of these discriminatory rates were forced upon his State and upon my State.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a second and I will yield. It is true that when the shipping left the Pacific coast by reason of the war, those discriminatory rates were relieved to a certain extent; but the very minute that shipping goes back to the Pacific coast, the Interstate Commerce Commission, under this very authority, will again return to the full discrimination, and there is no reason to think they will not; and I do not see where the Senator gets any comfort out of the reenactment in this bill of the proviso that in his bill he was attempting to eliminate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr President, I do not know what the Senator means by "the reenactment." It does not have to be reenacted. It is already in existence. It is already the law. If this bill fails to pass, it remains upon the statute books just as it is now, but it remains in full force without the improvements and the modifications and the limitations to which I have already referred; and we can not go back to the old practice, if this bill passes, because of these modifications and amendments.

Mr. PITTMAN. If this bill fails to pass, and the Senator will assist in preventing it from passing, he will have the opportunity to strike out the proviso that he has been so long attempting to strike out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We will have the same opportunity whether the bill passes or not. We are not precluded, by the passage of this bill, from continuing to undertake to secure complete relief under this section.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only difference between the Senator from Washington and myself is that he has been trying, as I have been trying, to eliminate this proviso from the act, but he is willing to wait for an indefinite time to accomplish it, when now the opportunity is offered to him. That is the only distinction.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I had not intended to say a single word upon this conference report, and I shall take but a very few moments; but I want to explain the vote which I am about to cast.

I sympathize with what was said by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I represent a constituency which perhaps suffers as much, if not more, than any other class of people from this unjust discrimination with reference to the long and the short haul, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss that question.

I never have believed in Government ownership, Mr. President. I have at all times advocated the control of public utilities either by the Federal Government or by the States. I have at all times believed that it would be possible for the Congress to enact legislation so as to enable the Federal Government to control these great industries which are public utilities. If that is not possible, Mr. President, then, of course, I shall be glad to revise my opinion.

As to organized labor, I believe I can say that I hold no brief for organized labor. We have, in the State which I in part have the honor to represent, a small number of citizens representing organized labor; but, Mr. President, I can see no reason why I should not be as willing to oppose legislation which in my judgment would do an injustice to organized labor as though I came from a State where organized labor has a greater number of members. I think it is fair to say that we ought to represent not only our States but the entire country.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] this morning—and I always listen to him with a great deal of interest, because I have the greatest respect for his judgment—called attention to the fact that in this bill the Government does not guarantee anything to the railroads. I admit, Mr. President, that in this bill we do not say that any money shall be taken out of the Federal Treasury and paid to the railroads, but we permit the railroads to make a net return of 5½ per cent—upon what? I do not know. I doubt if any Senator knows. Upon what kind of a valuation, I ask you, are they to have a net return of 5½ per cent? If this provision means anything it simply means after paying all the expenses, and we place no limitation upon the expenses here. We do not say anything as to what the maximum earnings shall be. We simply provide that all railroads, whether in the past those railroads have made earnings or lost money, shall have the right to make a net return of 5½ per cent.

Mr. President, I represent a constituency which is peculiarly situated. My people have nothing to say as to the price of their products. Those of you who represent the live-stock industry and the industry of producing crops, has it ever occurred to you that the general public does not necessarily suffer from the increased rates made upon that class of people?

I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with regard to that matter, and I take issue with him, that it does not follow that in every instance the general public bears this burden. In my State we depend absolutely upon live stock and upon crops. If the rates are increased, who suffers that loss? No one but the producer. The producer must necessarily suffer that loss, because the farmer has nothing whatever to say with respect to what the prices of his product shall be; he can not add this extra tax to the price of what he sells. So it is not a fair statement to say that in every instance the general public suffers.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator did not correctly understand me if he thought I made any such statement. I did not. What I did say was that if that were true, it was likewise true of taxes; that is all.

Mr. GRONNA. If I misunderstood the Senator I am sorry, and I certainly do not wish to misquote him, but I wish to call attention to this, that in a State like North Dakota, where we depend absolutely upon the products of the soil and upon the production of live stock, it is possible under the provisions of the bill to make it very burdensome to our people. If the provision means anything at all it means that the railroads have the absolute right to increase rates, so that all the railroad companies of the country have the absolute right to make rates which will bring a return of 5½ per cent regardless of what the expenses may be, and who then suffers from the increased rates? If we were in the same situation that people who represent manufacturing sections are it might be different. I know but little about manufacturing, but I know enough about it to understand that you will add that increased rate to the price of the manufactured goods, and we out in the West will have to pay it. It is different with us. We can not add a single penny, because we have nothing whatever to say with respect to what the prices shall be.

There are many other reasons why I do not favor the bill, but I shall not at this late hour take the time of the Senate to further explain the reasons why I vote against the conference report. When we are undertaking to write a law, not a law which is a temporary measure but a permanent measure, it seems to me it would have been well to exercise the utmost care so as to do justice to labor, to the producer and shipper, and to the railroads, as well as all the people throughout the United States.

For the reasons I have given, I can not vote for the conference report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have just a word to say. I think it is my duty to give my reasons for voting as I shall vote.

I voted against the bill when it was in the Senate because, in my judgment, section 6 and the provisions therein were unconstitutional. Section 6 has been brought forward in the conference report as section 15a. Having voted against the original bill on the ground of its unconstitutionality, I would stultify myself if I voted for the conference report, as the same provisions that were contained in section 6 are contained in the conference report.

I maintained then, and I maintain now, that whenever a reasonable rate is fixed either by Congress or by the Interstate Commerce Commission the earnings from that rate belong to the railroad which operates under that rule. It is the property of the railroad and under the mandate of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which I and you have sworn to support, you can not take the property of one man and give it to another without due process of law, and even for public purposes under that section of the Constitution you can not take it without just compensation. Therefore, believing that that provision is unconstitutional, under the oath I have taken I can not support the conference report.

I maintained also that the consolidation features of the bill were wrong in principle, and I see in the conference report section 407—although it is voluntary—allows every railroad in a State to consolidate and make one railroad.

The conference report says that, notwithstanding the will of the people, notwithstanding the constitution of a State, notwithstanding the laws of a State, it goes into effect, destroying all competition and building up great monopolies in a State contrary to the principles of our institutions and the Constitution of the United States. I read:

> Such consolidation may be effected, in accordance with such order, if all the carriers involved assent thereto, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding—

Even setting aside the decisions of the Supreme Court, the legislation and laws of the States. You cripple the will of the people as though the will of the people amounts to nothing, you establish this great monopoly, and you destroy all competition, which I say is unconstitutional and against the spirit of our laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CUMMINS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD], on account of sickness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and my understanding is that the senior Senator from Texas voted "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when Mr. EDGE's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, on account of illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I am told that if he were present he would vote "yea," and therefore I feel at liberty to cast my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I promised to take care of him during his absence. I find that I can transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. Not knowing how the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] would vote, I make that transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote on this measure, I would vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. If he were present he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. If he were present he would vote "nay." He is paired with my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] on this vote.

Mr. KEYES (when Mr. MOSES's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MOSES] on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business of the Senate. He is with the committee investigating the Mexican situation.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], but I am advised by him that I shall be at liberty to vote on this occasion notwithstanding the pair. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], but I am informed by him that if present he would vote "yea." Therefore I shall cast my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent on account of sickness. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote "yea" on the pending proposition. I therefore consider myself at liberty to vote the same way. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce that my colleage [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is absent on account of illness. I know that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. He has been detained at his home for several days by illness. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT,] the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are necessarily absent.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] if present would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 17, as follows:

So the conference report on House bill 10453, the railroad control bill, was agreed to.

SUITS IN ADMIRALTY (S. DOC. NO. 233)—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes. I ask that the report be printed and lie on the table for action when action has been taken by the House upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will lie on the table and be printed.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That no vessel owned by the United States or by any corporation in which the United States or its representatives shall own the entire outstanding capital stock or in the possession of the United States or of such corporation, or operated by or for the United States or such corporation, and no cargo owned or possessed by the United States or by such corporation shall hereafter, in view of the provision herein made for a libel in personam, be subject to arrest or seizure by judicial process in the United States or its possessions: Provided, That this act shall not apply to the Panama Railroad Co.

"SEC. 2. That in cases where, if such vessel were privately owned or operated, or if such cargo were privately owned and possessed, a proceeding in admiralty could be maintained at the time of the commencement of the action herein provided for, a libel in personam may be brought against the United States or against such corporation, as the case may be: Provided, That such vessel is employed as a merchant vessel or as a tugboat operated by such corporation. Such suits shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the parties so suing, or any of them, reside or have their principal place of business in the United States, or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found. The libelant shall forthwith serve a copy of his libel on the United States attorney for such district and mail a copy thereof by registered mail to the Attorney General of the United States, and shall file a sworn return of such service and mailing. Such service and mailing shall constitute valid service on the United States and such corporation. In case the United States or such corporation shall file a libel in rem or in personam in any district, a cross libel in personam may be filed or a set-off claim against the United States or such corporation with the same force and effect as if the libel had been filed by a private party. Upon application of either party the cause may, in the discretion of the court, be transferred to any other district court of the United States.

"SEC. 3. That such suits shall proceed and shall be heard and determined according to the principles of law and to the rules of practice obtaining in like cases between private parties. A decree against the United States or such corporation may include costs of suit, and when the decree is for a money judgment, interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum until satisfied, or at any higher rate which shall be stipulated in any contract upon which such decree shall be based. Interest shall run as ordered by the court. Decrees shall be subject to appeal and revision as now provided in other cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. If the libelant so elects in his libel the suit may proceed in accordance with the principles of libels in rem wherever it shall appear that had the vessel or cargo been privately owned and possessed a libel in rem might have been maintained. Election so to proceed shall not preclude the libelant in any proper case from seeking relief in personam in the same suit. Neither the United States nor such corporation shall be required to give any bond or admiralty stipulation on any proceeding brought hereunder. Any such bond or stipulation heretofore given in admiralty causes by the United States, the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, shall become void and be surrendered and canceled upon the filing of a suggestion by the Attorney General or other duly authorized law officer that the United States is interested in such cause, and assumes liability to satisfy any decree included within said bond or stipulation, and thereafter any such decree shall be paid as provided in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That if a privately owned vessel not in the possession of the United States or of such corporation is arrested or attached upon any cause of action arising or alleged to have arisen from previous possession, ownership, or operation of such vessel by the United States or by such corporation, such vessel shall be released without bond or stipulation therefor upon the suggestion by the United States, through its Attorney General or other duly authorized law officer, that it is interested in such cause, desires such release, and assumes the liability for the satisfaction of any decree obtained by the libelant in such cause, and thereafter such cause shall proceed against the United States in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. That suits as herein authorized may be brought only on causes of action arising since April 6, 1917, provided that suits based on causes of action arising prior to the taking effect of this act shall be brought within one year after this act goes into effect; and all other suits hereunder shall be brought within two years after the cause of action arises.

"SEC. 6. That the United States or such corporation shall be entitled to the benefits of all exemptions and of all limitations of liability accorded by law to the owners, charterers, operators, or agents of vessels.

"SEC. 7. That if any vessel or cargo within the purview of sections 1 and 4 of this act is arrested, attached, or otherwise seized by process of any court in any country other than the United States, or if any suit is brought therein against the master of any such vessel for any cause of action arising from, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any such vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any such cargo, the Secretary of State of the United States in his discretion, upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States, or any other officer duly authorized by him, may direct the United States consul residing at or nearest the place at which such action may have been commenced to claim such vessel or cargo as immune from such arrest, attachment, or other seizure, and to execute an agreement, undertaking, bond, or stipulation for and on behalf of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or such corporation as by said court required, for the release of such vessel or cargo, and for the prosecution of any appeal; or may, in the event of such suits against the master of any such vessel, direct said United States consul to enter the appearance of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, and to pledge the credit thereof to the payment of any judgment and cost that may be entered in such suit. The Attorney General is hereby vested with power and authority to arrange with any bank, surety company, person, firm, or corporation in the United States, its Territories and possessions, or in any foreign country, to execute any such aforesaid bond or stipulation as surety or stipulator thereon, and to pledge the credit of the United States to the indemnification of such surety or stipulator as may be required to secure the execution of such bond or stipulation. The presentation of a copy of the judgment roll in any such suit, certified by the clerk of the court and authenticated by the certificate and seal of the United States consul claiming such vessel or cargo, or his successor, and by the certificate of the Secretary of State as to the official capacity of such consul, shall be sufficient evidence to the proper accounting officers of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, for the allowance and payment of such judgments: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be held to prejudice or preclude a claim of the immunity of such vessel or cargo from foreign jurisdiction in a proper case.

"SEC. 8. That any final judgment rendered in any suit herein authorized, and any final judgment within the purview of sections 4 and 7 of this act, and any arbitration award or settlement had and agreed to under the provisions of section 9 of this act, shall, upon the presentation of a duly authenticated copy thereof, be paid by the proper accounting officers of the United States out of any appropriation or insurance fund or other fund especially available therefor; otherwise there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay any such judgment or award or settlement.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or the board of trustees of such corporation, having control of the possession or operation of any merchant vessel are, and each hereby is, authorized to arbitrate, compromise, or settle any claim in which suit will lie under the provisions of sections 2, 4, 7, and 10 of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the United States, and the crew of any merchant vessel owned or operated by the United States, or such corporation, shall have the right to collect and sue for salvage services rendered by such vessel and crew, and any moneys recovered therefrom by the United States for its own benefit, and not for the benefit of the crew, shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, having control of the possession or operation of such vessel.

"SEC. 11. That all moneys recovered in any suit brought by the United States on any cause of action arising from, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any merchant vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any cargo, shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such aforesaid corporation, having control of the vessel or cargo with respect to which such cause of action arises, for reimbursement of the appropriation, or insurance fund, or other funds, from which the loss, damage, or compensation for which said judgment was recovered has been or will be paid.

"SEC. 12. That the Attorney General shall report to the Congress at each session thereof the suits under this act in which final judgment shall have been rendered for or against the United States and such aforesaid corporation, and the secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, and the United States Shipping Board, and the board of trustees of any such aforesaid corporation, shall likewise report the arbitration awards or settlements of claims which shall have been agreed to since the previous session, and in which the time to appeal shall have expired or have been waived.

"SEC. 13. That the provisions of all other acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

And the House agree to the same.

SALE OF SHIPS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy for certain information with reference to the sale of ships. The urgency of it is that I understand the sale of these ships is now being carried on.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 312) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

First. The names, tonnage, and age of all ships registered or documented or registered and documented under the laws of the United States which have been sold by the Navy Department during the last five years or which it now contemplates selling.

Second. Whether or not any condition has been or will be attached to the sale of these ships prohibiting their transfer to a foreign flag.

Third. What investigation is made or has been made to ascertain whether or not the bidders for or purchasers of these ships are American citizens and whether or not they intend to keep these ships under the American flag.

Fourth. The sum for which sold or the amount of bids received but not acted upon.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 24, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 23, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Profoundly do we realize, our Father in heaven, the fact that truth is stranger than fiction—illustrated in the lives whom Thou hast raised up, in the world's history, to fulfill Thy behests, especially the life, character, and illustrious deeds of our Washington.

Born a pioneer in the making of a great Republic, by dint of his own efforts he became the greatest American of his age. A warrior, a statesman, a Christian, he lives in the hearts of all true men, and we delight in calling him "The Father of his Country."

Brave in war, gentle in peace, a profound hero, his name lives and will be uttered on the lips of millions to-day. His deeds live an immortal testimony of his mental, moral, and religious conceptions.

God grant that his heroic life, heroic character, and heroic deeds may live so long as the stars shine in the firmament; and to the King eternal, immortal, invisible, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. By special order of the House to-day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] will read Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I think we should have a quorum to hear these special exercises to-day. I make the point or order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. Under the special order of to-day Washington's Farewell Address will be read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]. [Applause.]

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. RODENBERG read as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquillity at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. [Applause.] In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations: they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. The government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.—But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. [Applause.] The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? and let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake [applause]; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. [Applause.] But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests. [Applause.]

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. [Applause.] So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? [Applause.] Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? [Applause.] Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? [Applause.]

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world [applause]; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. [Applause.] There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard. [Applause.]

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided my them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, by proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, preseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES,
17th September, 1796.

[Prolonged applause.]

LAWRENCE WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER. By a special order of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN] is authorized to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, out in the State of Washington, named for the founder of our Nation, running from north to south, paralleling the Pacific, are the awe-inspiring Cascade Mountains, with an average altitude of 6,000 feet. The writer and photographer would fill pages of books, magazines, and histories with descriptions and pictures of them were it not for the fact that in their midst stands mighty Rainier, an extinct volcano, snowcapped and glacier clad, that rises 8,000 feet higher than the surrounding mountains and bares its white fangs to the heavens at an altitude nearly 3 miles above sea level.

Mount Rainier is so gigantic that its base, including foothills, is larger than the State of Rhode Island.

Eleven great glaciers are constantly creeping down her rugged sides, and 14 large rivers find their source in her vastness.

In the Capital City of this Nation stands the monument erected by a loving people to keep green the memory of the founder of this Republic.

It is more than 555 feet high, the most colossal obelisk ever erected by man, and towers above all else in the city, as Washington did above the men of his generation—a man-built structure reverently reared and dedicated to the Nation's father.

In the State of Washington, one of the newest of the Union, stands Rainier, towering 14,408 feet.

Some day I hope the legislature of that splendid young Commonwealth will officially change the name of that mountain from Rainier to Washington, to the end that they will not only honor themselves and their State but will then have the grandest, God-built monument to the memory of the immortal founder of the greatest Government on the globe. [Applause.]

How few of earth's millions have become superlatively great and achieved a name and fame that will grow in brightness and luster with passing centuries!

For nearly all life is made up of little acts and small deeds, and in our limited spheres we may be as useful, as happy, and as good as the greatest of leaders, but when the burdens of life are over we are remembered for one or two generations, and then the waves of oblivion's sea wash the sands of forgetfulness over name and record and we are forgotten forever.

I have been requested by a number of the Virginia delegation to make a few remarks on this natal day of George Washington upon the life of Lawrence Washington, late librarian in charge of the House reading room, who was born at Mount Vernon in 1854, in the same room in which George Washington died.

A younger brother, George, was born at the same place in 1858.

He died several years ago, so that Lawrence Washington was for many years the only Washington living who had been born at Mount Vernon, and his death breaks the final link connecting the Washington family with Mount Vernon.

Lawrence Washington's father, John Augustine Washington, sold Mount Vernon to the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association in 1859.

He was a colonel of Gen. Robert E. Lee's staff in the Confederate Army, and was killed in September, 1861, at Rich Mountain, W. Va., in McClellan's West Virginia campaign.

There is a tradition, which I have been unable to verify, that at the time of his death Col. John Augustine Washington wore the sword of Gen. Washington.

In that battle Gen. J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, later Speaker of this House, was in command of the Federal troops.

The Confederates having retreated, the Federals, under Gen. Keifer, advanced and found Col. Washington mortally wounded, and he died in the arms of Gen. Keifer, who, when he discovered who Washington was, sent his body under flag of truce back to the Confederate lines.

Lawrence Washington was the son of Col. John Augustine Washington and Elenor Love Selden Washington, and was born at Mount Vernon on January 18, 1854, and was about 7 years old when his father was killed.

From 1869 to 1871 he attended the Virginia Military Institute; was with the engineering corps of the Norfolk & Western Railway and the Texas Pacific Railroad for a number of years.

He inherited from the George Washington estate the farm known as "Wave Land," in Fauquier County, Va.; also about 5,000 volumes of the library of George Washington, besides many pamphlets and manuscripts of rare interest and value.

He entered the service of the Library of Congress September 1, 1897, was custodian of the Washington library, custodian of the congressional reference library, and in charge of the reading room of the House of Representatives.

He was unusually well informed in the history of the United States, particularly in connection with Virginia, and possessed an extraordinary knowledge of the history of that State and its public men.

He married Miss Fannie Lackland, and to them were born 12 children—4 daughters and 8 sons—and of the latter 5 were soldiers in the late World War, 4 of them wearing the khaki of the Army and 1 the blue of the Navy. [Applause.]

I first met Lawrence Washington early last June, when, upon his invitation and accompanied by Gov. Montague, of Virginia, Congressman CLEMENT BRUMBAUGH, of Ohio, and Congressman C. E. RANDALL, present senior grand warden of Wisconsin, we motored to Alexandria to attend a reception for the returned soldiers of the late war given by Alexandria Lodge, No. 22, F. A. A. M., the lodge to which Gen. Washington belonged, and of which he was at one time worshipful master.

A delightful evening was spent, in which speech, song, and refreshments intermingled.

The lodge room is filled with relics of the late Father of his Country, which Mr. Lawrence Washington took prideful delight in pointing out and explaining.

STORY OF A KNIFE.

Among others, he called the assembly's attention to a small pearl-handled knife and gave its history.

He said that when Washington was a boy he attempted to enlist in the British Navy without the knowledge of his mother, and had so far succeeded that his clothes had been taken aboard the ship upon which he was to sail.

His mother, learning what was about to be done, went on board the ship and secured his release, he being under age.

Washington, much grieved, showed great disappointment, and his mother, calling attention to his disobedient act and the great pain it had caused her, suddenly turned and presented him with this pearl-handled knife, asking him to promise that whenever again tempted to do an act which he knew would not be approved by her that he would take the knife from his pocket and think of her before deciding.

Washington took the knife and carried it until his death, more than half a century.

The winter he spent with his Army at Valley Forge the American cause was at its lowest ebb.

The American Armies had gone into winter quarters defeated.

There was hunger and privation and great physical suffering, not only in the Army but throughout the land, and the political enemies of the great general were urging that some man other than Washington be given command of the Armies.

Washington called a counsel of his generals, and in that dingy room told them that the burden was more than he could bear, and communicated to them his intention to resign as commander in chief.

One of the officers, surmising that this might happen, just prior to the meeting being called to order borrowed from Washington the knife.

When Washington had finished speaking an intense silence reigned, and finally this officer arose, and with tears in his eyes, after recounting the story of the knife, said, in effect:

"Gen. Washington, your mother has passed into the great unknown, but her spirit is here to-night.

"Your countrymen have selected you to lead the struggling hosts of liberty in this war for existence.

"Be as true to them as you were to the mother who gave you birth, and thus," extending his hand, holding the knife, "obey the orders of your struggling countrymen as you did the request of your sainted mother and fight on."

Washington's eyes moved slowly from one to another of the men gathered at that counsel of war, yet it was evident he did not see them.

His face was tense and white and his eyes had a far-away look as if thinking of some one who was not present.

He was undergoing the acid test.

For a short time he thus stood, then his features began to relax.

Without a word he reached out his hand, took the knife, put it back in his pocket, and Yorktown followed Valley Forge. [Applause.]

The simple, yet dramatic, manner in which Lawrence Washington told this story attracted me to him, and our acquaintance rapidly ripened into the strongest friendship, and it was my custom from then until the date of his death to spend many evenings with him in his office in the library building.

While there are a great many Members of this House who knew him for a much longer period, I do not believe there are many who knew him better.

Lawrence Washington was in his line a great man.

According to Mr. Gaillard Hunt, the historian and author:

He had a good education and was a highly cultured man, especially well versed in American political history.

He was in fact an authority on old and rare books pertaining especially to Virginian history.

He had an open, frank, honest nature, and was a remarkably good conversationalist.

As a librarian he had the essential qualification of being able to understand and sympathize with the viewpoint of the investigators who applied to him for assistance.

Many Members of Congress can testify to the unusual help he gave them in their investigation into public questions.

He was unassuming, modest, courteous, and patient, a gentleman always, loyal to his friends, and fit to wear an honored name.

Of him the present librarian says:

As fine a man as his father, Col. John Washington, must have been, he was no better than his son, and Gen. Washington himself was no more honorable or high minded.

Lawrence Washington was absolutely true to type and tradition.

Lawrence Washington loved his fellow men, and nothing pleased him more than to aid one when help was needed.

His whole life seems to have been guided by the sentiment embodied in a poem written by Sam Walter Foss:

We know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead,
And mountains of wearisome height,
That the road passes on through the long afternoon
And stretches away into night.
Still I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Nor hurl the cynic's ban,
Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
And be a friend of man.

Always cheerful, every ready to extend a helping hand, and ever intelligent in his efforts, he will be greatly missed, not only by the Members of Congress, the city of Washington, and the District of Columbia, but by the State of Virginia as well.

He died at his home in this city on January 28, 1920, after a short illness, and his remains were buried in Charleston, W. Va.

In reviewing his life, aside from his unusual literary attainments, it would seem that his great mission was to shed as much sunshine and bring to others as much happiness as possible, for he was a living embodiment of the beautiful sentiment expressed in the following:

The thing that goes the farthest
Toward making life worth while,
That costs the least does the most,
Is just a pleasant smile.

The smile that bubbles from a heart
That loves its fellow men
Will drive away the cloud of gloom
And coax the sun again.

It's full of worth and kindness, too,
With manly kindness blent;
It's worth a million dollars
And does not cost a cent.

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a very few minutes, say seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks permission to address the House for seven minutes on the same topic. It there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there are many in Virginia and elsewhere—his relatives and friends—who will be deeply grateful for the tribute to the late Mr. Lawrence Washington in the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

During the centuries in which it is traceable, there seems nearly always to have been a Lawrence in the Washington line.

I recall on a perfect summer day visiting in Northamptonshire, which is the county of the Franklins as well as the Wash-ingtons, the village of Little Brington. That was the home of a Lawrence Washington who was five generations back of his descendant of Mount Vernon. There, built flush with the highway and apparently not since altered, is the unpretentious house where that Washington took up his abode the very year the first Jamestown expedition set sail from London. There he lived a part of the very period in which, across the county line in Warwickshire, Shakespeare was weaving his genius into the plays and sonnets that are immortal. Not far from the house stands a stately, ancient church in the midst of a most beautiful country. It is the country where they tell us the Washingtons fought in the fierce civil struggles that from time to time swept over that portion of England. The scene of one of the battles of the War of the Roses is in view, and within a few miles is the memorable Field of Naseby. The day I was there, as far as the eye could reach the golden crops, in the peaceful sunshine, were ripening to the harvest.

Lawrence Washington, the long-ago ancestor of Gen. Washington, is buried in the aisle of the church. The verger removed the outer stone from above the grave, and on the marble slab beneath could be read the name and the dates. Carved upon the slab also are the arms of the Washington family, the escutcheon bearing stars and stripes. There are those who believe that in that device is found the origin of the American flag, the flag of our hearts and hopes, the flag that we trust will never cease to represent the liberties, the ideals, and the institutions the founder of the Republic did so much to establish. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, as we commemorate now the mighty career of the Virginian, who is the greatest man in all the tide of time, it is not unfitting that the final eulogy of this hour should be the deliberate estimate of Washington expressed by an eminent citizen of your own State of Massachusetts, to which Washington was bound by so many impressive ties. I quote the concluding words of the brilliant biography of Washington in the American Statesmen Series by Senator LODGE:

As I bring these volumes to a close I am conscious that they speak, so far as they speak at all, in a tone of almost unbroken praise of the great man they attempt to portray. If this be so, it is because I could come to no other conclusions. For many years I have studied minutely the career of Washington, and with every step the greatness of the man has grown upon me, for analysis has failed to discover the act of his life which, under the conditions of the time, I could unhesitatingly pronounce to have been an error. Such has been my experience, and although my deductions may be wrong, they at least have been carefully and slowly made. I see in Washington a great soldier who fought a trying war to a successful end impossible without him, a great statesman who did more than all other men to lay the foundations of a Republic which has endured in prosperity for more than a century. I find in him a marvelous judgment which was never at fault, a penetrating vision which beheld the future of America when it was dim to other eyes, a great intellectual force, a will of iron, an unyielding grasp of facts, and an unequaled strength of patriotic purpose. I see in him, too, a pure and high-minded gentleman of dauntless courage and stainless honor, simple and stately of manner, kind and generous of heart. Such he was in truth. The historian and the biographer may fail to do him justice, but the instinct of mankind will not fail. The real hero needs not books to give him worshippers. George Washington will always receive the love and reverence of men because they see embodied in him the noblest possibilities of humanity.

[Prolonged applause.]

ABRAHAM LINCOLN ON WASHINGTON.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be read from the Clerk's desk a clipping from the Washington Star of Sunday, February 22, 1920, containing an extract from an address of Abraham Lincoln, delivered in 1842, commemorating the life and public service of the first President of our country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., Feb. 22, 1920.]

EARLY TRIBUTE BY LINCOLN TO WASHINGTON FOUND HERE—"IN SOLEMN AWE PRONOUNCE THE NAME," SAID YOUNG "ABE" OF FIRST PRESIDENT—ELOQUENT EULOGY BURIED 75 YEARS.

(By the Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, February 21.

Seventy-eight years ago to-morrow, in Springfield, Ill., where his tomb is now a shrine before which a Nation bows in reverence, young Abraham Lincoln paid tribute to George Washington. The words he uttered then, perhaps as eloquent as his world-famed Gettysburg Address, have been lost for three-quarters of a century in the pages of a country newspaper hidden away in the files of the Congressional Library. They were brought to light to be given to the world for the first time almost on the eve of another birthday of the first President. Lincoln said:

"This is the one hundred and tenth anniversary of the birthday of Washington. We are met to celebrate this day. Washington is the mightiest name on earth—long since mightiest in the cause of civil liberty; still mightest in moral reformation. On that name an eulogy is expected. It can not be. To add brightness to the sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe pronounce the name, and in its naked, deathless splendor leave it shining on."

The text of this unknown example of Lincoln's eloquence was found in Washington by Lucien Hugh Alexander, of Philadelphia, who gave it to the Associated Press to-day. An account of the ceremony at which Lincoln spoke was contained in the copy of the Sangamon Journal, published at Springfield on February 25, 1842. The tribute to Washington was the final paragraph of an address upon another subject, and the address in full was published in the Journal of March 26. A complete file of the newspaper for that year was found by Mr. Alexander in the Library of Congress.

Mr. Alexander, a student of Lincoln, came upon the unknown address while on historical research work. He declared that in his judgment it is destined in the years to come to be read or recited at virtually every celebration of Washington's birthday the country over.

"Hay and Nicolay, and also Ida Tarbell, missed it," he said, "and so have all of Lincoln's biographers, so far as I can discover. Indeed, I believe this is the only encomium extant by Lincoln upon the 'Father of his Country,' and if so, its importance from a purely historical and sentimental standpoint can not be overestimated. This really wonderful quotation will be sure to link their names together in a most unusual and beautiful way from now on every February 22."

LEGISLATION RELATING TO THOSE WHO SERVED IN THE WORLD WAR.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress all proposed legislation relating to those who served in the World War (other than those of the Regular Establishment) excepting, however, legislation based on and relating to disability incurred in the service, shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Speaker is hereby authorized to make rereference of bills heretofore introduced in accordance with the terms of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARD, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. RAYBURN, and Mr. SABATH reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] reserves the right to object.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the purpose of the resolution to be to transfer all bills respecting the payment of any sums to the soldiers of the World War which have been introduced?

Mr. MONDELL. Except bills that are based on and relate to disability. The bills that ordinarily go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, relating to and providing for disabilities, will go to that committee; but all of the so-called bonus bills and loan bills and land-settlement bills, and all bills of that character, will go to this committee.

Mr. GARD. I suppose there have been probably 50 or more bills on such subjects introduced, have there not?

Mr. MONDELL. There have been many; I presume that many. The major portion of them have gone to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GARD. And what will become of the bills which have gone to the Committee on the Public Lands, of which I believe the gentleman is the author of one?

Mr. MONDELL. There is a bill reported by the Committee on the Public Lands, which bill is on the calendar, and which will not be affected by this resolution; but all similar bills that are now before the committee, or that may be introduced hereafter, will go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GARD. Would the bill which I believe was first suggested by Secretary Lane, and which was introduced by the gentleman now having the floor [Mr. MONDELL], be included in this resolution?

Mr. MONDELL. That particular bill would not, because that bill is on the calendar, as are one or two other bills that have been reported out.

Mr. GARD. I understand the bill has been reported out, but my inquiry was——

Mr. MONDELL. That subject matter would go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GARD. My inquiry was whether it was the gentleman's idea to rerefer his bill back from the calendar to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MONDELL. Bills now pending and bills hereafter introduced which are of that character will go to the Ways and Means Committee. It was not the purpose of this resolution, and I think it would be rather unusual, to take from the calendar bills already reported and rerefer them to a committee. The subject matter, however, goes to this committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] still has the floor.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's bill has been on the calendar for some time?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARD. And we have had no action upon it? Speaking personally, I see no reason why it should not be included with the others.

Mr. MONDELL. A similar bill could be introduced and considered by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GARD. Why not take it from the calendar and rerefer it to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose that might be done, but I do not recall any case where we have taken a bill from the calendar and rereferred it in circumstances like this.

Mr. GARD. The very excellent idea back of this resolution, that of combining all these bills, is to get something done for the benefit of the soldiers of the war?

Mr. MONDELL. The subject matter of that bill and all others of like character will be considered by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming what, under his resolution, would be the status of the bills now pending before the Committee on Education, for instance, with respect to rehabilitation? We have one bill——

Mr. MONDELL. Where they do not relate to men who are suffering from disability they would go to the Committee on Ways and Means. Where they are based on disability they would remain with the Committee on Education.

Mr. BLANTON. One other question. I would like to ask the majority leader what would be the result if all of these bills should go to the Ways and Means Committee as contemplated by the resolution? I understand that since May 19, 1919, the Ways and Means Committee has been, and still is, devoting practically all of its time to what we denominate the tariff measures, the important tariff measures which have taken up so very much of the time of the House during this Sixty-sixth Congress—the pearl-button bill, the surgical-instrument bill, the magnesite bill, the tungsten-ore bill, and bills of that character.

Will the Committee on Ways and Means still give preference to these various very important tariff measures and pigeonhole all these soldier bills, or will they take them up, consider, and act on them?

Mr. MONDELL. It is expected and understood that the Committee on Ways and Means will immediately take up the consideration of the measures that are placed under their jurisdiction by this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. And not devote all of their time to these very important tariff measures, which are now languishing in the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, it is anticipated that they will give immediate and continuous consideration to this legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are going to consider these bills, I shall not object.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question. I quite concur in the spirit of his resolution, but I was wondering if the exception is quite broad enough to cover all that he desires to cover. I do not think the House desires to take away from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the bills that are amendatory of the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. RAYBURN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that many measures may be introduced properly to amend the war-risk insurance act that would not be for disabilities—amendments to the insurance feature of the law.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. We have given a good deal of time to the consideration of this matter, and thought at first that we might properly except the entire jurisdiction of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. But this is true that when you take up a question of insurance, for instance, that affects men who are not disabled, the matter may become so large that it ought to be considered by the committee that is considering the general subject.

That is true not only in regard to insurance that is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but it relates to vocational training which goes to the Committee on Education. The Committee on Education should continue to have jurisdiction of matters of vocational training which are based upon and relate to disability. But when we come to consider the matter of vocational training in a larger way, a way that might involve expenditures as great as that of a bonus, clearly that is a matter that should be considered by the committee which is to have general charge of these matters.

Now, as to the matter of insurance, the gentleman's committee will consider that and all other matters so far as they relate to disability, so far as they are based on disability, so far as they have to do with the man suffering from disability; but if we are to consider insurance and vocational training in a very large way, applying to all men in the service, involving the possibility of very large expenditure, it becomes a question so important, so far-reaching, that it should be brought to the consideration of and be considered by the committee in whose jurisdiction we are now placing all these matters of large moment, matters of very great importance and likely to involve very great expenditure.

I may say to the gentleman that personally and in cooperation and consultation with others we have tried to evolve a plan which would leave to the Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and Education those things upon which they can clearly best bestow that expert knowledge which they have acquired in the consideration of the matters heretofore. But when we reach some of these various things in other and larger phases as relating to all the men in the service rather than those who are disabled we think they all ought to go to one committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me ask the gentleman this question: That is exactly where I think it is going to be impossible. Unless the gentleman excepts amendments to the war-risk insurance act he is going to get into a field where the jurisdiction can not be determined.

Mr. MONDELL. Clearly you could not do that, because it might be suggested that we assume all of the premiums, all of the insurance premiums, of all the service men. That is an amendment to the war-risk act. That is a matter that can be considered by the committee that is taking a general survey of the situation.

Mr. RAYBURN. Suppose a question comes up like this: There are several millions of graduated insurance in which amounts are being paid families who are getting the insurance. Now, there is a propaganda going around that the insurance, instead of being paid $240 monthly——

Mr. MONDELL. That is a matter based on deaths. That would clearly come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce under this resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. I hope the gentleman will let this matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would let this matter go over until to-morrow. I have no objection to it, but we want to get along with the legislative bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose a point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] was pending to paragraph appearing on page 9, lines 15 and 16.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I think it hardly necessary to state the obvious fact that the point of order now pending is an extremely important one, and for that reason justifies that careful consideration which I know the present occupant of the chair will give, and I am sure is giving, to its final decision. The provision in the bill to which the point of order is leveled appears on page 9, lines 15 and 16, and consists simply of this:

Section 1303 of the revenue act of 1918 is repealed on and after July 1, 1920.

That is brought in by the Committee on Appropriations as an integral part of the bill, and it is insisted that it is in order under what is commonly known as the Holman rule. I venture to read this rule in full:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill—

That is, appropriation bill—or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

It will be admitted, I take it, that the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction over the legislation that is proposed, therefore it can not be in order under the proviso of the Holman rule.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is perfectly legitimate to direct attention, as illustrating the importance of the matter now before the Chair, to the effect of a ruling which would overrule the point of order. It would then be in order for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in as an integral part of its bills a provision repealing any law whatsoever which carried a charge upon the Treasury. Not only that, but it would be in order, I fear, for any individual Member to offer on the floor of the House a proposition to repeal any existing law which carries a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the Committee on Appropriations could bring in a provision repealing such law, the jurisdiction of which was under the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. GARRETT. I can see no distinction between that and this proposition. This is a proposition to repeal a law, and if a bill to repeal that law were introduced, it would not be referred to the Committee op Appropriations, but to some other of the committees of the House.

Mr. WALSH. I would ask the gentleman further if the fact that this is the only bill in which an appropriation for this service could be carried does not of itself give jurisdiction of the law creating it to change or alter it in case it reduces the number of employees or retrenches expenditures?

Mr. GARRETT. No more than it would to repeal a law creating a Cabinet officer—Cabinet officers are carried in this bill—no more than it would to repeal a law creating a Federal judge, no more than it would to repeal a law creating a resident commissioner. The test is the germaneness of the legislation proposed to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman contend that this committee in carrying the appropriation for this service could not bring in a provision to the effect that the salary, instead of being $5,000 or whatever it is under the law creating the service, shall hereafter be 1 cent a year?

Mr. GARRETT. I would not so contend. The committee could bring in such a provision under the terms of the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman contend that the proviso of the Holman rule applies to original provisions brought in by the committee?

Mr. GARRETT. I do, if I understand the Chair correctly, if the proviso covers cases of legislation proposed by a committee, and in order to be in order it must come from the committee which has jurisdiction of the legislation. The Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction of this particular legislation. It can not come under the proviso of the Holman rule. If it could possibly be held in order in any way, it must come under the first part and not under the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will pardon the Chair, as the Chair reads the proviso of the Holman rule it does not provide for original propositions, but provides specifically for further amendments.

Mr. GARRETT. That is correct. There is no disagreement between the Chair and myself about that.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair is correct in that view of it, then the proviso of the Holman rule would not apply to this item as originally put in the bill by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT. No; I think not. It, of course, is not in order under the proviso. In other words, the proviso is not involved here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee permit an inquiry?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying. A ruling made by the gentleman on the subject of the Holman rule back in 1916 has been very instructive. With the gentleman's knowledge of precedents and parliamentary procedure, does he think that the proviso in the Holman rule can possibly be construed as a limitation on the first part of the rule?

Mr. GARRETT. I think it is undoubtedly a limitation, if I understand the gentleman correctly.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman's ruling on the 16th of January, 1912, would carry out that view, that the proviso is really a limitation on the first part of the Holman rule.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know whether one would call it a limitation or an extension. To be entirely frank about the matter, possibly the word "extension" would be better. I think the effect of the ruling to which the gentleman has so kindly referred was that the Committee on Appropriations, not having jurisdiction of the subject matter then proposed, which was an integral part of the bill, it was not in order; but I think it is clearly apparent from that ruling, however, though I have not looked at it recently, that if the proposition had been offered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, as I now remember the subject matter of the legislation, it would have been in order, other things being in accordance with the rule.

Mr. HICKS. It would seem to me that the proviso in the Holman rule, instead of a limitation on the preceding section, is in reality an extension of the field by which legislation can be placed in an appropriation bill. It is a separate proposition, and to affirm my view I refer to a ruling made by Mr. CRISP, which would seem to indicate that the Holman rule by the proviso provides an additional method of incorporating legislation on an appropriation bill, which is rather in opposition to the views expressed by my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I think there is nothing inconsistent with the Crisp ruling, as I remember it, in the argument that I am now making. Here is a proposition fundamental in character, which I know the Chair has in mind and which we all should have in mind. There is but one committee of this House which has a power in the matter of initiating legislation under the rules which is not enjoyed by any Member of the House acting as an individual Member from the floor. During the first Congress, as I remember it, when my party was in power, a rule was adopted affecting revenue bills, which does give to the Committee on Ways and Means power to bring in legislation which could not be offered from the floor of the House by way of amendment. I have no hesitation in saying that I believed then, and I believe now, that that principle is wrong as a general proposition. It may be all right in a special rule occasionally, but to insert that as a fundamental part of the general rules of the House in my opinion was wrong then and is wrong now.

It being true that no other committee's authority exceeds that of an individual Member, the situation arises with reference to the legislation proposed here, as I have suggested, namely, if the Committee on Appropriations, which avowedly has no jurisdiction over this legislation, can bring it in as an integral part of its bill, then it would be in order for the gentleman from South Carolina or the gentleman from North Carolina or any other gentleman of the House to arise and from his place on the floor offer an amendment repealing any law which carries a charge upon the Treasury; and I do not believe, sir, that it was ever the intention of the Holman rule to extend that far. The rules of the House of Representatives are the product of a century almost. They have grown up and in their fundamentals they are recognized by all as the result of the experience and the wisdom of more than a century of legislation that has gone before us. Out of all that experience and that wisdom has been crystallized this provision that legislation shall not be in order upon an appropriation bill nor as an amendment thereto. When in the interest of economy there came a time that the Congress decided that an exception should be made and the Holman rule was adopted—and the Chair will find upon examination of the history of the Holman rule that it was in various forms before it reached its present satisfactory working condition—when that was adopted it was carefully guarded; it was carefully framed so as not to open up the whole vista of legislation for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations or to have thrust before the House by way of an amendment, offered by an individual, propositions of repeal never considered by any committee of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what his view is as to what is the subject matter of the appropriations that that committee has jurisdiction of? In this particular instance, what is the subject matter that the Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction of touching the legislative drafting service?

Mr. GARRETT. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations is wholly for making appropriations, not for the purpose of making or unmaking law. The Committee on Appropriations may report a provision reducing to 1 cent, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] directed my attention a moment ago was done in the case of the Commerce Court, but no effort was made to repeal the law. The Appropriations Committee can do that and bring it in as an integral part of the bill. Any individual can offer it from the floor of the House and it is in order, but this is confined to appropriations and this proposal is not an appropriation; this is legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman say it is a reduction in the number of employees and a retrenchment?

Mr. GARRETT. That will be its effect, but it is not germane to this bill, because this is an appropriation bill, and the question of germaneness is the question upon which this turns. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] directs my attention to the fact that the Tariff Commission was cut out by the withholding of an appropriation and not by a repeal of the act. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I would be glad to yield, but let me say that I have a committee sitting now upon which I ought to be in attendance, but feeling the importance of this I have desired to say just the few words that I have said——

Mr. LITTLE. Of course, an amendment of which the gentleman speaks reducing and cutting down the amount would be germane without the Holman rule.

Mr. GARRETT. It would not.

Mr. LITTLE. Not to cut down expenditures?

Mr. GARRETT. Not without the Holman rule, because it changes the existing law.

Mr. LITTLE. And you could not move to reduce the amount?

Mr. GARRETT. Not without the Holman rule. For many years I sat here when we did not have the Holman rule and could not move to reduce appropriations, but under the Holman rule you can, but, Mr. Chairman, when a committee undertakes to legislate—of course these suggestions are no reflection upon the personnel of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman is wrong in this. On a general appropriation bill without the Holman rule you could make a motion to reduce the amount of appropriation but you could not make a motion to reduce a fixed salary appropriated for a specific purpose. You could not make a motion to reduce a fixed salary but on an appropriation for a fixed service you could make a motion by way of an amendment to reduce that. I do not think the gentleman wants to be misunderstood.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, perhaps I was a little too broad in my statement to the gentleman from Kansas, and I will not insist upon it. I will put it this way: It would be in order when the committee had made a reduction to offer to bring it up to the amount of the statutory salary.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. CANNON. It is quite in the power of the Congress to withhold appropriations notwithstanding the law.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course it is, and under the rules of the House that is in order to——

Mr. LITTLE. Now that it is conceded that you could reduce an appropriation without the Holman rule——

Mr. GARRETT. Not in this instance.

Mr. LITTLE. Then what would be germane under the Holman rule? You could make a motion to reduce without the Holman rule.

Mr. GARRETT. It would be germane under the Holman rule to reduce appropriations to pay a salary for these places to 1 cent per annum or $1 per annum. It would be in order to move to strike out the paragraph under the Holman rule. But this I desire to make clear, that this is legislation, this is not an appropriation. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations is confined absolutely to appropriations except by the exercise of the Holman rule they may offer legislation to the House or any Member may offer from the floor legislation which reduces expenditures providing that legislation is germane. Germane to what? To the subject matter of the bill. That is the language of the rule. The subject matter of this bill is an act making appropriations, and so forth. I trust that I have made by contention clear to the Chair and I thank the Chair for his indulgence.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in answer to the gentleman, for whose opinion I have a very high regard.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman, I suppose, intends to conclude the debate on this subject?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I want to conclude it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If yours is to be the last speech on your side I would like to be heard briefly because on last Friday I had not quite concluded what I had to say when the point of no quorum was made.

I wish to point out that should the Chair hold that this particular repealing section is not in order, this ruling will not in any wise cripple the ability of the committee to effect retrenchment. It will not in any wise cripple the ability of the party in power to effect reductions, for the reason already pointed out, that without this repealing section the committee can refuse to make any appropriation in this connection. I desire to call attention further, that to maintain the integrity of the rules in this instance, and to sustain this point of order, will not in any wise affect the ability of the party in power to repeal this particular provision of law if desired. The Committee on Rules can at any time bring in a resolution to make this or any other provision of the bill in order. So it will be no impairment of the ability of the party now in control of this House, to effect any desired change in existing law. That is perfectly clear.

With respect to the question of germaneness I wish to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] brought out clearly by two queries the substance of this particular point of order. His first query, as to jurisdiction, was very suggestive. An item in a bill must be germane by the very terms of the rule itself. To what is this item germane? Look to the item itself. It is purely a repealing item. It is not a paragraph of repeal or quasi repeal coupled with an appropriation. It is an absolute repeal, standing alone and apart. To what is it germane? It can not be germane to anything else in the paragraph, because it is the entire paragraph. It can not be germane to what precedes it, because that is an appropriation. It can not be germane to what succeeds it, because that, too, is an appropriation. It can not be germane to the jurisdiction of the bill, because the jurisdiction of this bill is to make appropriations, and not to legislate. The power of this committee to legislate is restricted, and these restrictions are in rule 21, which provides the circumstances under which the committee can legislate and expressly says that a legislative proposition must be germane.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] pointed out, as I tried to do the other day, that the requirement of germaneness attaches just as well to the committee as it does to a Member on the floor. If this item as reported by the committee is germane, then it would be germane to the bill if it were offered from the floor as an amendment. The Congress did not undertake to repeal the act under which the Commerce Court was established; and yet, if this item is in order, that is precisely what we could have done. If this item is germane to this legislative bill, then a provision in the bill in which the Commerce Court was appropriated for, repealing the act establishing the court would have been in order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask again, what is the function of this committee? The answer is, to appropriate. It is a general appropriation bill. So far as the scope of this bill is concerned, this item under consideration is foreign matter; it is extraneous matter; it is new subject matter under the rulings on germaneness made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] a few days ago. Those rulings discussed what was a new subject matter, and this case falls clearly within the principle of those rulings. This subject matter is different from what precedes it and follows it. It is legislation, while the preceding and subsequent matters are appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose the committee had said nothing about this proposition at all. Would it not be germane to the bill if some Member offered a provision to pay salaries at this point?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. That would have been absolutely germane. Why? Because this is an appropriating bill, and whatever the committee can appropriate for, but declines to appropriate for, can be appropriated for by an amendment from the floor. Such an amendment would be within the jurisdiction of the committee, within the proper functions of the committee.

The question that the Chair asks me suggests another one. Supposing the committee should decline to appropriate for some subject matter for which it has the authority to appropriate, would the Chair hold that it would be in order for some Member on the floor to offer an amendment to repeal the provision of law which gave authority to make the omitted appropriation?

It would certainly be, if this repealing clause, standing single and alone, is held to be germane to the bill and in order. The question which the Chair asked, being answered in the affirmative, by implication requires the query that I propound to be answered in the affirmative. If the first answer is sound, so is the second. The only way to escape the difficulty suggested in the second query is, I submit, to hold that this is not a germane amendment under Rule XXI.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's contention that under the Holman rule the committee could report legislation amending the original law by changing the salary of this officer in this bill, but could not report any legislation which would tend to eliminate the office?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There are one or two decisions that would answer in the affirmative the question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I have admitted that heretofore. But the question with which the Chair is now concerned is the one presented by this repealing section that stands single and alone and apart from and unrelated to the jurisdiction of the committee or to any other item in the bill. Now, I do not know——

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to-day to a very logical presentation by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], as we have listened before, but which we will be deprived of hearing in the future. All of us know and feel with pleasure, and also with regret, that the gentleman from Virginia is soon to sever his connection with this House in order to take his place as a judge of the supreme court of his native State. I know he will ornament the bench by the profound, just, and enlightened decisions he will render, as he has ornamented this House by his usefulness as a legislator, by his deep knowledge of legislative procedure, and by his clear and fair interpretation of the canons of parliamentary law. [Applause.] While he goes from us and we grieve at his leaving, we also rejoice that he is called to higher usefulness in the great State which he has so ably represented here these many years. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia, and I feel I reflect the sentiment of my colleagues, that he takes from this body the esteem, the affection, and the respect of every Member, and that he goes to his new duty with the best wishes and Godspeed of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the very handsome remarks of my friend from New York [Mr. HICKS] are certainly in the highest degree appreciated by me. I desire to say in this connection that it is with positive regret that I sever the associations that I have formed and part with the friends that I have made during my years of service in this body. My relations with the Members on both sides of the Chamber have been uniformly so agreeable that this expression of regard on my part is not perfunctory, but very real and sincere. On the occasions when I have occupied the chair I met with such consideration and support on the part of the Members that the duties of presiding were not a task, but a pleasure and a delight.

I realize to the very fullest extent that I am now serving my last week in this great legislative body, this history-making body. During my service here I have taken part in much legislative action of the utmost importance to this country and some of it to the world, since it related to and concerned the world relations of the United States. I regret that I am leaving at a time when so much of constructive legislation is ahead of us, needing to be enacted, either at this or the next session of this body. In this connection I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that while my party is not now in power, I have such confidence in the intelligence and patriotism of the representatives of the party now in control and holding in its hands the legislative destinies of this country, that I am assured that they will as patriots, and 100 per cent Americans, approach the heavy tasks which confront them, and seek by their action to advance the glory, the liberties, and the prosperity of the Republic. [Applause.]

I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, more than words can say the kindly utterances of my friend from New York in his personal tribute to my work in this body. I can not but feel that in what he has said concerning me he has been my partial friend. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the tribute was paid to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. I know that the gentleman from Virginia will adorn the bench with the same ability that has been characteristic of many others of the illustrious sons of Virginia, and when he goes to that bench he will cease to be a partisan; he will be a jurist, bent at all times on administering justice according to the well-established rules and precedents, which he will gather as few are able to gather them; and, in accord with those established principles and precedents and his innate knowledge of justice, even-handed justice will be administered; and when he does that he will assume the same high plane that he assumed when he rendered his decision upon the Holman rule, which is conclusive of the point now before this body, and to which I will advert in a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important time in the consideration of this measure. The decision of the Chair in this matter is important not only in regard to the particular point now under consideration but of vastly more importance in connection with a great many more items that will arise during the further consideration of this bill, and it is especially important as a rule for our guidance in the future.

I wish that there could be no dispute or difference of opinion about this rule. If it were not for this Holman rule, this country would have to expend yearly millions and millions of dollars that are saved to it by reason of the beneficent action of this rule, and in these times we are very much interested in having this rule enforced for the purposes for which it was created. It has been repeatedly said that for the purpose of carrying out the intention of this rule, if there is ever a doubt in the mind of the Chair, it should be solved in favor of the rule. Why? Because thereby no one can be hurt; there is ample opportunity to correct a mistake by amendment or otherwise; but that it should be given the benefit of that doubt for the protection that it gives to the Treasury of the United States and the taxpayers of the Union.

Now, let us consider briefly the purpose of this rule, which is section 21, part 2. As originally created it had no reference at all to what we now know as the Holman rule. It provided absolutely that there could be no legislation upon an appropriation bill. By reason of the abuses that grew out of that language, by reason of the extravagances to which it led, it became perfectly apparent to the Members of this House at that time that some check should be had upon it, and in order that a check might be had this rule was invoked.

Now, as I say, the first portion of this rule provides that there shall be no legislation upon an appropriation bill. Now begins the Holman part of it:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

That is the first part of it. The next is:

> Or by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that we might as well come in here and attempt to repeal the law creating a Cabinet member for the purpose of reducing expenditures. So far as its germaneness is concerned, I will agree that that thing can be done. But it would be a ridiculous proposition, and I dare say this body would not submit to it. They would defeat it, as they have a right to defeat the present proposal upon a vote. But it would be germane. Why? What is the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations? What is the purpose of this Holman rule?

If you carry to its logical conclusion the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, there could be no application of the Holman rule, for the enforcement of the Holman rule means changing legislation. It brings new legislation into the bill, for if it were not so there could be no excuse for it at all. Whenever we reduce the salary of an officer we change the legislation, and the gentleman admits that that would be germane and would be in order under the Holman rule.

If, perchance, we can take and change the legislation reducing the salaries, why can we not exterminate the office entirely? In order to do that we must introduce new legislation upon the appropriation bill. That is done with every appropriation bill.

And at this juncture I wish to invite the attention of the Chair to the measure which we now have in hand. What is it? It is not a general law providing for some usage of the people. It is not for the benefit of the public at large. It is for the purpose of creating a convenience; and the subject of the measure itself is what? Not any organic law for the benefit of the public, but for the creation of an office and defining the duties that are incumbent upon that office, which are mere incidents to the creation of the office. The Chair has read the measure. And where did it come from? Not from a committee of this House that had jurisdiction over that subject matter. It was legislation. Where? Upon a finance bill coming from the Committee on Ways and Means, and all that there is involved in it is the office itself.

It has been admitted here by the gentleman that under the Holman rule we could reduce the amount of the salary of this officer to 1 cent or refuse to appropriate for it at all, and the gentleman must consistently admit that, if we could do that, we could repeal that portion of the law which creates the office. Suppose, then, we did that and wiped out the office. If we repealed the office, what would be left of the law? The rules of this House, like the rules of law, are to be based upon common sense and not to be made ridiculous by technical construction.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Chair first to a decision in Volume IV, Hinds' Precedents, section 3887, that I think is conclusive as to the position we are taking here, and not only refutes absolutely the position taken by the gentleman from Virginia now, but sustains the position occupied by him when he rendered the decision with reference to the Subtreasury.

The matter under consideration was a series of amendments to an appropriation bill providing for the transfer of the Bureau of Pensions from the Interior Department to the War Department. I wish the Chair to mark that this was a very material change of the law, vital, if you please, to one of these departments, changing the Pension Bureau from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, taking it clear out of one department and putting it in another, absolutely repealing the law which applied to the Interior Department and creating new law which applied to the War Department.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I should like to point out that a statute doing that, if introduced as an original bill, would have gone to that committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Suppose that instead of this legislation being embodied in this appropriation bill an independent bill had been brought in here for the purpose of repealing this statute or the law creating this draft board. What committee would have had jurisdiction?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The Committee on Ways and Means, or some other committee, not the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Committee on Ways and Means would have had no jurisdiction over it. If it went to the proper committee it would go to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not say it would have gone to the Committee on Ways and Means. I say it would have gone to that or some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The case to which I am now calling the attention of the Chair arose on the legislative appropriation bill, the very bill that we are now considering here. The purpose of it was, as I have stated, to take out of the Department of the Interior the whole Pension Bureau, with all its machinery, curtailing some expenses incident thereto, perhaps as a mere excuse for the legislation. Yet it was held to be germane and in order under the Holman rule. It changed existing law. It repealed existing law, created new law and new rules of action for the conduct of the business of the Pension Bureau. What is said in that case? After the preliminary statement the Chairman, Mr. William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, said:

Fortunately for the Chair, the rule allowing amendments to appropriation bills was the subject of a very thorough debate in the first Congress which adopted it—the Forty-fourth—a debate participated in by such men as Mr. Garfield, Mr. Randall, Mr. McCrary, of Iowa, Mr. Seeley, of Massachusetts, and others, and of a careful construction by the Speaker of that Congress, Mr. Kerr, who was universally recognized as an able and learned parliamentarian. Speaker Kerr held that the rule should have a liberal construction in the interest of retrenchment—

That was the purpose of its creation—

"The purpose of the rule is most beneficent and proper, and the Chair, under any circumstances not attended with extreme doubt, would hold it to be his duty to enforce the rule."

By which I understand he meant to admit an amendment.

The second clause of Rule XXI provides that no amendment to an appropriation bill changing existing law shall be in order unless it be germane to the subject matter of the bill and retrenches expenditures in one of three modes prescribed in that rule. The rule upon which Speaker Kerr made his decision was in the same language, except that the modes of retrenching expenditures had not then been specified.

The first question that the Chair is called upon to decide is whether the first amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations is germane to the subject matter of this bill and, if germane, whether it retrenches expenditures in any of the modes required by the rules. It was argued with great force by the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Dingley, that it was not germane to the subject matter of the bill, because this is a bill making appropriations—

The same objection that is now being made—for the payment of invalid and other pensions under existing laws, whereas the amendment refers to the administration of the Pension Bureau itself—

Changing the organic law, if you please, Mr. Chairman—and it has been the practice of the House to appropriate for the salaries of the officers of the Pension Bureau in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There is much force in the argument—

The Chairman said—

But it must be observed, when we come to examine the subject matter of the bill, that it not only makes appropriations for the payment of pensions, but deals with a part of the machinery or official staff through which these appropriations are to be administered. Can it be held that to such a bill, carrying, as does the present, appropriations of more than $166,000,000, an amendment which merely prescribes or deals with the administrative machinery through which those appropriations are to reach their beneficiaries is not germane?

So can it be held that this legislation, which has to do not only with the appropriation asked for with reference to this item but that has to do with appropriations for all the departments except the Department of Agriculture, is not germane?

The Chair thinks not—

Said the Chairman—

and he accordingly rules that the amendment under consideration is germane to the subject matter of this bill.

Now, when the rule was attempted to be invoked in so important a matter as that, where it meant the change of the policy of this Government, the changing of the law, the taking of this bureau entirely out of the body of one of the great departments of the Government and placing it into the body of another great department, involving an annual expenditure of $166,000,000, I dare say that the utmost consideration was given to this matter then because of that extreme importance.

Yet the Chair held that it was germane and in order and he accordingly ruled that the amendment under consideration was germane to the subject of this bill.

Continuing, the Chairman said:

The question next arises, Does it retrench expenditures in any of the modes prescribed by the rule? And here the Chair finds himself greatly relieved by decisions heretofore had in a similar case, or in one so nearly alike to that now before this committee as to furnish a good precedent.

Speaker Kerr laid down the rule that in considering the question whether an amendment operates to retrench expenditures the Chair can look only to what is properly of record before him—that is, the pending bill—the specific section under consideration, the law of the land, so far as it is applicable, and the parliamentary rules and practice of the House, and beyond these he is not permitted to go in deciding the question.

When the general legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was pending in the House in the Forty-fourth Congress an amendment was offered transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, and upon the point of order made against that amendment Speaker Kerr's decision was given. He held, in substance, that as the amendment operated to reduce the number and the salaries of officers paid out of the Treasury of the United States it would have been in order if it had been in itself a perfect and complete piece of legislation, but that on the face of the amendment it was clear that it would have to be perfected by further and additional legislation and it was not possible for the Chair to determine whether this necessary additional legislation would operate to retrench or to increase expenditures. He based his decision in favor of the point of order strictly upon that ground.

In another case, where they were taking the Indian Department away from the Interior Department and placing it in the War Department, repealing a law with reference to the Interior Department, making a new law for its establishment in the War Department, it was held to be germane, and if it had appeared on its face that it would retrench the expenditures of the Government it would have been in order. It is admitted in this case that it is a complete piece of legislation, so complete that gentlemen are complaining of its completeness and the extinction of this bureau. So that objection can not be raised, and, taking the authority of the Indian case, it is not only germane, but absolutely in order.

When the Indian appropriation bill came before the House a few days later the amendment making the transfer was again offered, and it was then a complete piece of legislation.

The Chair could see by an examination of it that it would operate, of its own force, to effect this transfer and to abolish certain offices and then bring about a retrenchment of expenditures; and Mr. Springer, of Illinois, then occupying the Chair, delivered a careful and elaborate opinion, which had been submitted to and concurred in by Speaker Kerr, holding the amendment to be in order. In accordance with these precedents, the Chair holds that the first amendment proposed to this bill by the Committee on Appropriations is in order and overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Dingley].

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a more recent case, of which it may not be said, if you please, this might have been the rule away back in Randall's time and back in Garfield's time, but we have advanced beyond it. But the decision to which I now refer has not only been confirmed by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], but by his contemporaries, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and all within the memory of most of us here present, holding absolutely in accord with the Kerr proposition.

I could not help but think the other day, while listening to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], and reflecting on my having listened to the splendid decision delivered by him some two years ago, founded, as he stated, upon precedents well established, overruling at that time all the authorities upon which he now depends, that now how can he in such a short space of time make such a change of opinion, and how can he now defend the authorities he then overruled, and is now overruling all the authorities he then depended upon in his splendid decision?

The Chair will remember that an effort was made by Mr. Borland with reference to the extension of the hours of labor of those engaged in the departmental service, and the question of order was raised, with Mr. CRISP in the chair. Mr. CRISP, because of the importance of this matter, because of the influence it would not only have on that legislation, but as a precedent and rule to be followed in all the years to come, was bound not only by his desire to do his duty but by reason of the fact of the importance that depended upon it to give the subject very serious consideration, and consequently he reviewed all the authorities and arrived at this conclusion:

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Borland] offers an amendment to be known as section 6 of the bill, the amendment providing:

"That the number of persons in the classified service authorized to be employed in the several executive departments and other executive establishments and the government of the District of Columbia shall be reduced by one-tenth on or before the 30th day of June, 1917, and in order that such reduction may be made without loss of service to the Government, and to equalize the hours of work required of those in the classified employments of the United States, it is made the duty of heads of the several executive departments and other executive establishments and the government of the District of Columbia to hereafter require, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1899, approved March 15, 1898, not less than eight hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the classified employees of those branches of the public service in which such employees are now required to work eight hours a day."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is now quoting from a decision by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In that same connection the gentlemen will note that there is another ruling by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and that those two rulings are in conflict with each other.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have not discovered that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman will find both of those rulings in the Manual.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am beginning to com to the conclusion, from what the gentleman has done himself and the testimony that he now adduces as to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has done, that these gentlemen have not always been actuated by the utmost desire to establish a precedent that shall be as firm as the rock of ages, but that they have been actuated sometimes by expediency. It might have been that it was expedient then for these gentlemen to retrench, when giving utterance to these splendid decisions. If so, is it not equally expedient now, when someone else is charged with the economic administration of the affairs of this Government, when someone else is responsible and for which responsibility the public will hold them, to see to it that a lot of these useless and needless offices are dispensed with and their occupants sent adrift—is it not equally expedient now to attempt to hold the decisions to which I have referred in strict accord with the Holman rule? If it was correct expediency then, why should it be incorrect now?

To continue from the ruling by Mr. CRISP:

To the amendment the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] makes the point of order that it is legislation, that it changes existing law, and therefore is not in order on an appropriation bill.

While it is true, under the general rules of the House, that legislation is not in order on an appropriation bill, under the rules of the present House there is an exception to that general rule, the exception being that an individual Member of this House can offer amendments providing for legislation on an appropriation bill if such amendments are germane to the bill and retrench expenditures of the Government in either of the following three methods: By the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, or by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill. The individual Member, and nonlegislating committees on all fours with individual Members can propose germane legislation to an appropriation bill if it falls within either of those three excepted classes.

The Holman rule provides an additional method of legislating on an appropriation bill. The proviso to clause 2 of Rule XXI provides that legislation the natural consequences of which is to retrench expenditures is in order if it is proposed by a committee of the House having jurisdiction of the legislative subject of the amendment or by a joint commission, or the House Members of a joint commission authorized to deal with that legislative subject.

The proponent of the amendment in question contends that while it is legislation it is in order, because he contends that it falls within one of the excepted classes permitting an individual Member of the House to offer germane legislation. The proponent of the amendment contends that it reduces the number of officers whose salaries are paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The question, therefore, for the Chair to pass upon is to determine, first, if the amendment is germane; second, if it comes within one of the excepted classes; and, third, if the legislative part of the amendment is connected up with the proposition to reduce the number of salaries or officers paid out of the Treasury of the United States under which it is claimed the legislation is in order.

The bill before the House is the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, dealing generally with the salaries of officers and employees of the United States Government. The Chair is cognizant of the fact that there are some exceptions to that, notably the Agricultural Department, but in the main it is the appropriation bill which carries the salaries for the officers and employees of the Government. The amendment seeks to deal with a certain number of the employees of the Government, and the Chair thinks the amendment proposing a new section dealing with a certain class of Government employees is germane to the bill.

Now, the question arises whether the amendment of itself does reduce the number of officers paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment must show on its face that it does perform one of the functions required under the rule to make it in order. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the language of the amendment using the word "shall" makes it mandatory upon the heads of the departments on or before June 30, 1917, to reduce the number of employees in their departments one-tenth unless they are relieved of that duty by the proviso of the amendment. The amendment clearly reduces the salaries to be paid out of the United States Treasury, one of the exceptions under the rule authorizing legislation on an appropriation bill.

The Chair then cites at great length the authorities from start to finish upon this wonderful rule, known as the Holman rule.

Mr. Chairman, I think these two decisions, the one that I have read from the somewhat misty past, and the last one enunciated on this proposition, after a full and careful consideration, even at a later date than that rendered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], clearly establish that we have a right to bring in new law, provided the purpose is to retrench expenditures of the Government, providing for the discharge of officers of the United States, or in any way saving to the Treasury of the United States any amount of money.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, precedents are very misleading. You can find them on either side. Let us adhere to principle for a moment. It is conceded, of course, that this committee can decline to appropriate any money under this law or any other law, and let it go by. That suspends the application of the law for a year. The committee can suspend the law perpetually by doing the same thing every year. It would be curious if with that power the committee could not get rid of the whole thing at one fell swoop and save all of that trouble. That is the reason the Holman rule was made. If you will consider it a little aside from precedents and on principle, I think you would see in a moment that this contention is very clear.

The Chair suggested the meat of the whole controversy when he said if the committee had not appropriated for this matter, could anybody have offered an amendment to appropriate? Of course, it is conceded he could. Why? Because the subject matter of this whole legislative reference is germane to the bill. That is why. The Chair got the idea. If the subject matter of legislative reference were not germane, the committee could not appropriate for it at all. If this subject matter of legislative reference were not germane to the bill, you could not amend the appropriation bill by adding an appropriation if the committee neglected it, because unless it is germane you could not appropriate for it by amendment. Now, what is germane to this bill? Look at the title. It is a bill appropriating for "legislative, executive, and judicial expenses." Anything about "legislative, executive, and judicial expenses" is germane, of course. There can be nothing in this bill except what the law provides may be appropriated for in reference to legislative, executive, and judicial expenses. The gentlemen can hardly be serious in the claim that this subject matter of legislative reference is not germane. If that were true, an appropriation for it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Let me make my statement. I prefer not to be interrupted until then, and I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Now, this legislative, executive, and judicial subject has nothing about irrigation. If we should undertake to discuss or offer some appropriation for irrigation here it could not be done, because the subject is not germane to this bill. If we should undertake to repeal the law authorizing an appropriation for irrigation, it could not be done in this bill because the subject is not germane to this bill, but we can repeal anything about any law that is germane to this bill that arranges for an appropriation in this bill because it is germane to this bill. If this were not true, you would have no appropriation. Now, if that is not true the Holman rule does not mean anything and the Holman rule has no sense, application, force, or power. If it does not mean that, you had just as well have let it stand.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], when I asked him, said you could not cut down any appropriation without the Holman rule. If that were true, he would have had me. but unfortunately his memory had slipped a cog. You could cut down any appropriation before. And what was this made for? For the very simple purpose of just such an instance as this. It has not any other purpose, and nobody has suggested any other reason for having such a rule. This is put in, not to cut down an appropriation—you can do that at any time—but to get rid of them forever. You could cut it out, but you could not add to it. It is germane to the bill, because everything in this bill is founded upon some law, and every law that founds an appropriation is germane to it, and, as I said before, if it does not mean that it does not mean anything.

The gentleman from Virginia has suggested that if it would not be germane enough to be added to the bill how could you amend it out? That is the only proposition I have heard advanced here that appeals to me as entitled to an answer. But there is a fallacy in it, as I will show you in a second. It is true that if it is not germane enough to this bill so that you could move an amendment to put it in it would seem that it is not germane to the bill to put it out. But there is where the fallacy is.

If there were no such law and you should undertake to put it in there, there is nothing to make it germane, and you might just as well bring in a law to appropriate money to carry on war or just as well bring in a law to enforce prohibition, neither of which would have any connection with this appropriation, and therefore there would be something new tacked onto it. But the trouble with the argument of the gentleman from Virginia was, though it appeared forceful for the moment, that this was germane before anybody undertook to put it out. They made this law germane to this bill by making it the foundation of the bill. If it is not germane to this bill, we could not appropriate for it. The subject matter of the bill is appropriations under laws authorizing the appropriations, and everything connected with that is germane, and that is the reason why I can move to strike it out but can not move to put it in. The Chair pointed that out when he couched the question which brought the confession that if this was not appropriated here they could still move to put it in because it was germane. That is all there is to it. It is a very simple matter. I do not care to take up the time of the Chair, but if the Chair will go back to the principle and remember and follow the fact that every appropriation here is founded upon some law, that all of the subject matter of this bill is to appropriate under laws authorizing the appropriation, the Chair will have solved the entire difficulty; and it follows as night follows the day that you have got to hold that the subject matter of this bill, which is "legislative, executive, and judicial appropriations," is all germane, and everything connected with it, the laws authorizing the appropriations are germane, and therefore they had the power to go ahead and repeal the law. If that is not a correct analysis of it, there was never any occasion for enacting the law at all. When the law the committee seeks to repeal was made it became so germane to this bill that the bill could not exist but for it and similar bills. If it were not germane, the bill could not carry an appropriation for this bureau, and such appropriation would be out of order. If the gentlemen who urge this appropriation are right and the law authorizing it is not germane to the appropriation, then their desired appropriation would be out of order and impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The question for the Chair to determine arises under a point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] to the item carried in the bill repealing section 1303 of the revenue law. The gentleman from Virginia contends that this is a change of existing law and does not come under the Holman rule. The gentleman from Indiana admits that it is a change of existing law but contends that it does come under the Holman rule. The Chair realizes that this is a question of some considerable importance, not only as to how his ruling may affect this particular item, but as to how it may affect other items of this bill and of other appropriation measures which may come before the House. The Chair is glad that he has had opportunity, owing to the adjournment of the committee on last Friday, to give this matter some considerable investigation. He has examined the precedents submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, as well as a number of other precedents, and it must be confessed that the more one investigates the decisions under the Holman rule the more one's mind becomes confused and perplexed rather than clarified, for they are many and various and in some cases as far apart as the poles. Under the circumstances the Chair conceives it to be his duty to avoid technicalities in so far as possible, and to interpret as best he can the real purpose and intent of the rule. The Chair is inclined to think that this great diversity of ruling on the Holman rule comes from a misapprehension of just what it really means and particularly from a confusion between the proviso and the main part of the rule, which runs as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

So far that is the original Holman rule. It was subsequently amended by adding this proviso:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

The Chair thinks that these provisions must be construed separately and apart. Under the proviso, to qualify under the Holman rule it is necessary that the committee submitting the item should have jurisdiction of the original subject matter. Under the first part of the Holman rule there is no such provision. The only thing necessary to qualify under the main part of the Holman rule when you seek to change existing law either by committee or individual action is to show first that your provision is germane and that it necessarily and indubitably effects a reduction of expenses.

As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has stated, the present occupant of the chair has on a number of occasions, both in the chair and on the floor, said that he thought that the Holman rule should be construed strictly. That is true, but the Chair had particular reference in that statement to the proposition that a saving of expenditure must appear beyond all cavil. There must be no doubt about that, nor, in the opinion of the Chair, can there be any doubt in this particular case. The section which the item under consideration repeals creates a commission of two men, providing for their salaries and giving them the power to appoint assistants and fix their salaries, and carries an appropriation therefor. If this House intends to continue the legislative drafting bureau, how can it provide for it? In what bill should any provision for it be carried? Obviously in this particular bill. And where should it be carried? Obviously in the particular place where it is carried in this bill.

The Committee on Appropriations is of the opinion that this commission is unnecessary and proposes to abolish it. Nobody will contend that the committee would not have had the power and at this particular point to have brought in a change of existing law providing for the reduction of the number of officers and of the amount carried. Nobody will contend that the committee might not have brought in a provision at this point reducing the number of this commission to one and appropriating 1 cent to pay for its continuance, thus nullifying the law. But the committee preferred to abolish the commission altogether by repealing the law.

Some distinction has been sought to be made between the question of repealing a law and changing it. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] admits that you may change the law, but he questions whether you may repeal the law through any means except by a report of a committee which originally had jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Now, the Chair is unable to follow that line of reasoning. The Chair thinks that a repeal of a law is a change of existing law in contemplation of the Holman rule. It necessarily must be a change of existing law, and the Holman rule very clearly provides that you may change existing law provided you reduce the number of officers and the amount of money to be expended. The Chair does not see how the proviso of the Holman rule modifies the main proposition in this respect.

Under the circumstances, while the Chair realizes that such a ruling may afford considerable opportunity for committees to repeal laws and for Members of the House to offer amendments which repeal laws, he feels compelled to hold, under the Holman rule, that such propositions are in order if they are germane to the bill and necessarily reduce expenditures.

The Chair, therefore, feels constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 9, strike out lines 15 and 16, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "For salaries and expenses of maintenance of the legislative drafting service, as authorized by section 1303 of the revenue act of 1918, $40,000, one-half of such amount to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas might as well make it now if he wants to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to see the amendment first.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, while this point of order that has just been discussed is of great importance, the merits of the proposition which are involved, while only a small amount of money is concerned, are to my mind of very much more importance. And I have offered an amendment which would restore this drafting service. This service came into existence by a provision in the revenue law of 1918, so called, although, in fact, it did not go into force until the latter part of February, 1919. The original provision was for two drafting clerks and other assistants, and the appropriation was made of $25,000 for the purpose of paying the expenses of the drafting bureau or drafting service.

In the deficiency act of July 7, 1919, appropriating for the fiscal year 1920, there was an unexpended balance made available of this $25,000 to which I have just referred, amounting to $18,000 and odd. That was made available, and a further appropriation of $20,000, or a total of a little over $36,000, was made.

The drafting bureau has asked for $40,000 for this year. The original law that created this drafting service provided for the appointment of two drafting clerks, one for the House and one for the Senate, and it was further provided that these appointments should be made by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate solely on the basis of fitness for the service. I can say, and I think every Member of the House who is familiar with the service of the man appointed by the House will agree with me, that there is no question that this appointment was so made upon fitness for the service alone; made after the man had been tried and tested; made after it had been found that he was an expert in that line of work, and made after a trial which proved to Republicans and Democrats alike—I do not care which—of all the various committees that have had the service of this drafting clerk that in certain cases they found his services were practically indispensable.

Now, what is the nature of the service that this man performs? Some Members opposed to the creation of this bureau supposed that he has nothing to do except to put in a few punctuation marks that had been overlooked, or to correct the grammar in the language which perhaps had been inadvertently used. But this is not what he is wanted for. We want him for service which requires ability of a very much higher order, in preparing these bills which are of such a technical nature, such as the revenue bill, the railroad bill, bills such as those which have been reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, in order to be sure that the legislation will be harmonious with itself, that it will carry out the purposes of the committee that devised it and accomplish what they intended, no more and no less, and not conflict either with its own provisions or with any previous laws enacted by Congress. It requires ability of the very highest order in order to do this.

But gentlemen say, "Nearly all these committees have lawyers upon them, and why could not some of them perform this service?" I answer, they could but for one thing: In preparing these bills, which are of such high importance to the country, where it is necessary that every part of the bill should be accurate and in harmony not only with itself but with existing law, it is of the greatest importance that the policy of the bill should first be right and then that the expression of the bill should be right. The members of the committee, in preparing these bills, find themselves entirely absorbed at times with questions as to the policy which shall be adopted. The discussions in the committee almost invariably turn upon questions of policy. Great policies are often involved that may have an untold effect on the destinies of the Nation as they are carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more, although I may not use it all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And the members of the committee find themselves in the position where——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that when this drafting provision came into effect, through its creation on an appropriation bill, the first expenditure was $20,000. was it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was $25,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Twenty thousand dollars, was it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; $25,000 from the latter part of February to the 1st of July.

Mr. BLANTON. And now the distinguished economist from Iowa asks for $40,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And next year, probably, on the insistence of these gentlemen, he will ask for $80,000, and the year after that for $160,000, and so on?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to aid him a little in his arithmetic? Twenty-five thousand dollars for less than six months is a higher rate than $40,000 for a whole year, so that they are asking less.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that economy?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is of the highest economy, and I will explain to my friend from Texas why. Time and time again bills have gone through this House and gone to the Senate, and after they have gotten out to the people the Supreme Court has decided that they did not mean what Congress intended.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has been a distinguished jurist in his State—in Iowa. Does not the gentleman believe that with all the precedents to which we have access, the Representative of the people who is not able properly to draw a bill with the help of his committee, composed mostly of experts, ought not to be seated in this House, and ought to go back to his farm or his place of business?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very true, what my friend from Texas says, if that were all a Representative had to do. If all he had to do was to frame the expression of these bills and pass upon the language; if he was not concerned with the policy of the bill, if he did not have to make up his mind and lie awake nights often to determine whether or not a certain policy should be carried into effect, it would be easy enough for him to frame these bills; it would be easy enough on the part of Members of Congress to do that if we had only the framing of these bills to do. But Members have other things to do. They have to attend to the wants of their constituents, and to consider all the legislation that is before the House, and during that time they do no find the opportunity to attend to every detail of expression in a bill or look into the particular manner in which it ought to be framed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that this service is available to every committee that has important legislation under consideration?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unfortunately, it is not. My friend from Texas would restrict it, I suppose.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I would throw it on the scrap heap.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think it would be much cheaper if we should give to each of these committees another clerk to take care of that work, rather than tax the whole country for the benefit of two or three committees only?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the matter could not be arranged in that way. The duties of the draftsman are very different from those of a clerk to a committee.

Mr. LITTLE. What are you going to do with the $40,000?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that an ordinary committee clerk is an expert on the draftmanship of legislation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He is not ordinarily, although some of the clerks, by reason of long service, have become such.

Answering the question of the gentleman from Kansas, I would say that the man who is at the head of the drafting division for the House has to prepare in advance for these bills. He has to look up all the previous legislation so as to make sure that whatever the committee are going to do will be in harmony with what has been done. He has to have assistance for the clerical part of it, and it is necessary that he should have clerks. How much clerical help he shall have is left for the Clerk of the House to decide.

Now, I confess that so far as the lump-sum part of this appropriation is concerned, if the Committee on Appropriations had gone into this as I think they should have gone into it and had reported it out in detail, I would have been better satisfied; but that is the only way we can get at it at this time.

I do not know the politics of this gentleman who has been rendering service to the Members of the House, and I do not care what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I have two minutes more? It is not often that I ask for such an extension.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not care what his politics is. I do not think any member of the committee that he has served care anything about it, because he has never intruded his opinion upon questions of policy. What he has sought to do and what he has so successfully done on a number of these bills in the preparation of which he has aided has been to ascertain what were the views of the committee and the policy of the committee, and he has sought to carry that out and express it in appropriate language.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman what committees of the House are entitled to the services of this drafting board.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. All of them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All of them.

Mr. BEE. I understood from the inquiries of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that not all of them were.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The only trouble is that the services of this bureau are so much in demand that it is impossible to comply with all the requests which are made.

Mr. BEE. I am on the Committee on the Census, which has never met, and on the Committee on Claims, which certainly does not call upon this drafting division, and I just wanted to know what committees received its services.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Who has the assignment of the time and services of this expert?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will permit me, the Committee on the Library.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Committee on the Library determines the assignments.

Mr. LITTLE. The man regulates it himself, as a matter of fact.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I doubt that very much.

Mr. LITTLE. I know that is the way it is done.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope my friend will not interrupt me. I will get through a great deal quicker.

I consider this one of the most important measures that we have before the House, and I do not know any place where the House would get more useful service or more for the money than by sustaining this appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. The gentleman's proposal to spend $40,000 a year to employ somebody to draw up bills for Congressmen and Senators reminds me of an advertisement I heard of the other day. A hod carrier who was getting $12 a day advertised for some one to carry the hod for him and proposed to pay $4 a day for the service, leaving him, of course, $8 a day net profit. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], who is a distinguished economist (?) here in the House, believes that the people of the United States ought to pay Congressmen $7,500 apiece and Senators at the other end of the Capitol $7,500 apiece, and then ought to pay somebody else $40,000 a year to perform part of the duties of the Congressmen and Senators. Why, one of the main duties of a representative of the people is to prepare proper legislation for introduction in the House and Senate, which is referred to committees for proper consideration. If he is not able to do it, with all of the precedents to which we have access, with all of the help we may at all times have from the older and more experienced members of the various committees, and the help of the committee clerk, drawing from $2,500 to $4,000, he ought to quit and go back home and let a more competent man come here and take his place. An aspirant claiming to be competent is always anxious and ready to come. No admission of inability and incompetency is ever made on the hustings.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not right now. Of course, if he wanted to draw a bill to repeal the Volstead Act, then he would need some help, because he could not do it by himself and no other man could that would pass this Congress.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, yes, I could; and I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois could not draft a bill that would pass this Congress seeking the repeal of the Volstead law. He would need some help. [Laughter.] But if he wanted to prepare measures for the benefit of the people of the United States, if he has the proper ability to entitle him to draw $7,500 a year from the people, he ought to be able to transact the business that the people sent him here to transact. I want to tell you, when I am not able to draw a bill providing for any legislation that I want to see pass, if I can not find the proper precedents that will guide and direct me, I will quit and let somebody else take my place.

I will not be asking the people to pay me $7,500 a year and then asking for $40,000, $20,000 to pay a man for the House and $20,000 to pay a man for the Senate, to do work we were sent here and paid to perform. I know there are some Members of Congress who need this kind of help. I know that men who stay at home, who stay in these big cities about nine-tenths of the time and come here only when they have a daylight-saving bill to pass, or a liquor bill or a railroad bill, or a bill that Mr. Gompers tells them to come here to vote against or to pass, that kind of a Representative, who never appears here unless there is something special on, needs a man at $20,000 a year to draw his legislation for him. We are getting too much in the habit of passing the buck and employing others to do our work for us. Some Members could not draw the simplest little bridge bill, some could not draw the simplest little pension bill, some could not draw the simplest little private claims bill to take the people's money out of the Treasury. There are some of our colleagues who certainly do need special expert help to attend to all of their legislative duties, especially when they are somewhere else, busily engaged otherwise, and mostly otherwise. In making this argmuent I realize that I am making a target of myself, but I can stand the ridicule such argument for economy and strict attention to business may provoke. I know that it will be argued that experts can better do the work. But we are all supposed to be experts, and we were employed to do this work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. I could not refuse my friend from Michigan. I hope I am not treading on the gentleman's toes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, no, not at all. The gentleman from Texas can not hurt me. I was wondering if the story was true that the gentleman from Texas absented himself from the Chamber last Saturday afternoon because he was afraid of Sam Gompers.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. Quite the contrary. And I want to tell you something.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my good friend from Michigan, the distinguished economist (?) on the Agricultural Committee, who provided 754 messengers for one department and who provided 76 watchmen for one office in this District—I will say to my distinguished friend from Michigan that I must have been a little bit afraid (?) of Samuel Gompers, because I was not here Saturday afternoon; but I was paired with a distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY], he against the railroad bill and I in favor of its passage, to return the railroads to their lawful owners; and if Mr. Gompers only knew what I did to his dictatorship last Saturday, and on what mission I was engaged that evening, he would much rather have preferred to have me here, because in my campaign against anarchy and for law and order in the great State of Massachusetts last Saturday night I spoke to a fine audience of loyal business men of this Nation, who said they were tired of the dictation of Samuel Gompers and his control of legislation in this Nation, and I was assured that every man who comes here from the State of Massachusetts following the next election will come here with the backbone of a JOE WALSH—God bless him—who will stand up and vote for the benefit and the interest of the people. I gave them some first-hand information concerning the vicious activities of Mr. Samuel Gompers and some of his associated anarchistic leaders of unions, and they are going to help me wake up the business men of this Nation and block Mr. Gompers's game of electing a Congress of weaklings and a Congress of serfs. They are with me in my fight against anarchy and for law and order, and against a labor autocracy. They are not going to send any weaklings here from that State. [Laughter.] Mr. Gompers would have a touch of meningitis if he had heard the expressions from these American citizens in the great State of Massachusetts.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was not there objection made to the continuance of the gentleman from Texas?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear any objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I did not go into the gentleman's district in Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I do not think we should be compelled to listen to such expressions as "jacklegs" by the gentleman from Texas. It is most improper.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that. I withdraw it, for it was improper. I will say that the great majority of the people from Massachusetts have backbone enough to stand up for what they think is right, because they are led by a brave, loyal, law-and-order governor of the State of Massachusetts who was fortunately not elected by Mr. Gompers and his police-striking Plumb-plan bunch.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Texas would not have us understand that he has deserted labor and gone over to the capitalists? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Not at all. I hold no brief for capitalists. Honest labor has no better friend in this House than I am. I want to say that this association of loyal business men of Massachusetts that I addressed last Saturday have the interests and welfare at heart of every laboring man of the land, and I am here to tell you that they have more at heart the real interests of the laboring man than has Mr. Gompers and his Plumb-plan bunch, who are now exploiting laborers out of millions of dollars.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman give the name of the organization that he addressed?

Mr. BLANTON. It was not the one of which the gentleman is president.

Mr. WINSLOW. May I ask if it was not the Manufacturers Association of Massachusetts?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, it was one association of manufacturers.

Mr. WINSLOW. Friends of the people.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, they are friends of the people. Without them the people could not exist.

Mr. WINSLOW. I want that to go in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. The bunch of loyal men whom I addressed last Saturday night in Massachusetts in my efforts to rid this country of anarchy are friends of the people, and if Mr. Gompers will let them alone they would have no trouble with their employees. If Mr. Gompers would keep his trouble makers in Washington, not keep sending henchmen in there to disturb industrial relations, we would have more production instead of the present awful state of affairs now existing, when men idle most of the time are paid not according to production and efficiency, but on union scales. We would get back to maximum production and efficiency where efficiency brought the goods. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] had pursued the study of the virtue of men from Massachusetts somewhat further, he would have discovered that they are not convinced of their omniscience to the degree that they are satisfied, as he is, that any member of a legislative body is qualified to write a law. The writing of a law is the most difficult task that ever confronts the human intellect. It is a matter of congratulation that the lawmakers of the United States are now finding out that they may well profit by the experience of England in this matter. Fifty-one years ago Mr. Lowe, then chancellor of the exchequer, reorganized the situation there and secured the creation of a parliamentary council to the treasury. The result of that action was a great improvement in the laws passed by Parliament. The chief counsel there receives $12,500 a year, against the paltry $5,000 that the far wealthier United States of America sees fit to allow for an expert. His assistant receives $10,000 a year, and ample funds for expenses are furnished. Sir Henry Maine, one of the great authorities on such matters, has said that four-fifths of the enactments in Parliament are due to the work of this office. The example set by England was followed by New York in 1893. It has since then been followed by California, Illinois, Indiana, and in nearly every progressive legislature in the land.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will yield.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Simply to reinforce the gentleman's list, I want to say that my own little Commonwealth of Vermont has had that system in effect for 12 or 15 years, and has had all the experience which has resulted in economy as well as the wise character of the laws, and we could not be hired to depart from it to-day.

Mr. LUCE. I think that would be the testimony from all legislatures where this has been fairly tried. Congress, as usual, followed behind the progressive States, reaching this reform only a year or two ago. The error it has made has not been in the appropriation of $25,000 a year, but in failing to appropriate enough money so that every man in Congress might feel perfectly free to make use of its experts. The difficulty has been that the pressure on their time by the important committees has been so great that they have not dared to offer their services so widely as they should be offered. I wish that instead of this motion being for $40,000 it were $80,000. Sir, it would be impossible to take too much care to make our laws accurate. It is not because of the importance of English, it is not because of the importance of rhetoric, it is not for any esthetic purpose whatever; it is that men may know what are their rights. What is the great criticism to-day? You can not understand the law. Is not a great part of the work of the Supreme Court of the United States concerned with trying to make out what lawmakers meant? The volumes of reports of our National and State courts contain attempts by the score and the hundred to interpret slovenly, poorly written statutes.

This reform is intended to lessen the labors of the supreme courts, to make clear the rights of the people, to save money to the whole Nation.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not the gentleman of opinion that if every important law passed by the Congress or a legislature were supervised by legislative expert draftsmen it would save many times the cost of the service?

Mr. LUCE. That has been the custom in my State for so many years that it goes beyond my memory. Of one expert who served the Massachusetts Senate, who died not long ago, it was said that during his long term of office, 20 or 30 years, not one law was passed by the Massachusetts Legislature and approved by his judgment which the supreme court afterwards declared to be unconstitutional. Such has been the result of that sort of work in my own State. May the day be long postponed when men will rise in legislative bodies and say they are unwilling to use the help of experts! [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] says that if he could not draw any bill, and I presume he means by that competently draw any bill, he cared to introduce he would resign from this body. All of us are not so fortunately endowed intellectually as our friend from Texas. I have been in this work of statute making in this body and in another legislative body for something like 30 years, and I am frank to say, with respect to the gentlemen provided for by this amendment, that I and other members of the committee of which I am a member have received very valuable assistance from them in the preparation of various important bills. These gentlemen, or one of them, to my knowledge have very materially aided committees of this House in the preparation of three great bills, to wit, the recent railroad bill, certainly one of the revenue acts, and the shipping act.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. KITCHIN. He assisted the committee in the preparation of the 1916 income tax act, the 1917 first excess-profits tax bill, the 1917 general revenue act, and the 1918 revenue act, and we thought his services were indispensable.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I happen to have been associated with Mr. Beaman in the preparation of the shipping act, and I wish to say concerning that act that I have always considered that it was in the matter of form and composition, structurally speaking so to say, perhaps the most perfect act passed by this body within my knowledge. I am entirely familiar with every detail of that act, and every stage of its preparation. The full committee and subcommittee in succession prepared, I think, four drafts of the bill. This first bill was cut to pieces in the full committee.

The second draft was then referred to a subcommittee, which sat in conference with Mr. Beaman. I was a member of that subcommittee. The bill considered by the subcommittee was so modified and amended that another draft was made, and this draft was considered in the subcommittee. The final draft was considered, amended, and reported by the full committee. Mr. Beaman was with us during all of these sessions. He did not undertake to make any suggestions with respect to the policy or scope of the act. All questions of this character were decided by the members of the committee. He confined his suggestions to the phrasing of the bill, to the simplification and classification of its meaning. In this respect he was of the very greatest assistance to the committee. Democrats and Republicans alike on the committee testify to the value of Mr. Beaman's services as an expert adviser in the task of preparing a bill that in the shortest compass would express the meaning of the committee with the utmost clarity.

The result of our work, first in the full committee, then in two subcommittees, and finally in the full committee, was that the committee reported a bill which I undertake to say, having in mind its scope and magnitude, was less amended in this body and in the Senate than any piece of legislation enacted within the last 50 years. The members of the committee deserve much credit in that connection. They did splendid work, but none the less they were materially aided by the suggestions and advice of our expert adviser.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that if the jurisdiction of the various legislative matters of the House were distributed among a number of different committees rather than being in the hands of two or three important committees the Members of the House might become qualified and have more time—in fact, plenty of time—in which to properly draft legislation?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. The limitations on the time of the Members, the interruptions of our work, are such that it is a matter of the greatest importance that the experts provided by this amendment should be associated with us in the work of constructing a bill after the scope and policy of the bill has been determined by the committee.

The work of this House is not done by any two or three committees. There are 20 or 30 great committees reporting bills, and every one of these committees, admittedly composed of competent men, can be aided, and materially aided, in preparing the framework and phrasing of their bills. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries does not hesitate to acknowledge its indebtedness to Mr. Beaman.

Mr. LITTLE. How many committees have been helped by this board?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not know; the members of other committees can rise and speak for themselves. I know that the Merchant Marine Committee, the Ways and Means Committee, and the Interstate Commerce Committee have had Mr. Beaman's assistance, and have been materially aided.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This drafting service has also served the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That makes four of the larger committees.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That makes five.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And the Immigration Committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That makes six.

Mr. RUBEY. And I want to say to the gentleman that this drafting board aided the Agricultural Committee in the drafting of the rent act.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That makes seven.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is no appropriation for the selfish purposes of one or two committees. Every committee of this body has the right to call upon the services of Mr. Beaman and his associates. If their services are valuable, if they have been so valuable that a few of the major committees engaged in great constructive work have monopolized those services, then that fact would indicate that the number of these experts should be enlarged so that all of the committees requiring assistance of this character would be supplied with experts of the same qualifications and proved efficiency as Mr. Beaman and his present associate or associates.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. VAILE. I was called out for the moment and I did not hear, but did the gentleman give the name of the Immigration Committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That will make eight committees aided by Mr. Beaman and his coadjutors.

Mr. VAILE. And may I say that a member of that staff has rendered very valuable service to that committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is not a single committee of which I am aware and which has had this help that is not willing to testify to the value of the assistance that these gentlemen have afforded in the structural make-up and clarification of meaning of the bills finally reported.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any committee of the House where any Member of Congress has been of aid to them?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; often, and of very great aid. Sometimes Members of Congress are of aid on the floor in the way of amendments which they offer; sometimes they are not. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that this agency can also be put at the disposal of individual Members and help in the preparation of their own bills or to be put on notice as to what rights they may have in the matter of the preparation of legislation?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. The work of a Member of Congress is of necessity of so manifold a character and so distracting that he can not devote all of his time to the structural preparation of his bills. There are many men in this body as competent as you will find anywhere in the United States, but these are the very men who admit the value of the assistance which Mr. Beaman has rendered. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I was the man who strongly advised the members of the Ways and Means Committee to secure his assistance in the preparation of their war-revenue bills. This recommendation was due to the high opinion I formed of him during our association in the work of preparing the shipping bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. May I suggest also to the gentleman that long before this legislative drafting board was created this gentleman was down here employed by Columbia University and paid a salary to demonstrate to the Congress the value of the services of such an expert.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes, that is true. Now, Mr. Chairman, I know that there are members of other committees who will bear willing testimony to the value of Mr. Beaman's services as an expert adviser in the construction and preparation of bills. I insist that it is no reflection upon our capacity, as lawmakers, to admit our indebtedness to him in this respect. There are such limitations upon our time, as I have said, that we need assistance in this work of polishing up and recasting a bill after we have agreed upon its scope and policy. This assistance these gentlemen can afford.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it not a fact that the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, has bills blocked out for years and years and does not really need the services of this bureau as much as the other committees of the House—committees having legislation in charge?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The Committee on Appropriations follows ancient forms, and appropriates for purposes authorized by existing law.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. ESCH. Is it not also true in connection with the Committee on Appropriations that they have followed the custom of retaining their clerks for many, many years who have become absolute experts in that particular line of work?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is true, too. When the chairman of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and his associates undertook to prepare that comprehensive bill which we passed on Saturday last, they were confronted with quite a different task from that which confronts the Committee on Appropriations when it sets out to bring in a bill. The Committee on Appropriations uses as a foundation an ancient and well-established form.

I wish to say in conclusion that to strike out this little appropriation providing for this board of experts in statute making is not economy. It is the reverse of economy. In its essence it is extravagance, the same sort of extravagance that it would be to seek to stamp out epidemic disease without the aid of medical experts. The proposal of the committee to strike out the Subtreasuries is a suggestion of real economy and will command my support.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order and I think it has been discussed sufficiently, and I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, that it is new legislation and is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that I am very glad that the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has taken occasion to visit the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, because I appreciate the fact that there exists there, as undoubtedly there exists elsewhere throughout our country, a very keen curiosity to hear and see the gentleman who has expressed himself so often upon various matters with such vigor and courage, and I trust that he will gratify the curiosity of other communities [laughter and applause], visit them, and let them have an opportunity to hear him discuss the issues which he so valiantly espouses. Mr. Chairman, in reference to this item, when it was first put into the bill I was not enthusiastically for it. It was brought in on a revenue bill and I made a point of order against it. It was stricken out of the bill, but because of the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee at that time, I later withdrew the point of order, and some changes were made in the authorization for that service, and it was put back in the bill by unanimous consent. Now, I happen to be a member of a committee which had the benefit of this gentleman's services before legislation was enacted. I think, although I am not positive, that the gentleman assisted the committee in the drafting of the so-called national prohibition act, although I am aware that certain other distinguished gentlemen and citizens of the country not having any official connection with this Congress, or any legislative body, exerted quite a potent influence in fixing and shaping the phraseology of that law. It is needless to say that it was perfected in such a manner that I did not vote for it. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that while the provision has been brought in by the committee for repeal of the measure, we ought to be satisfied before we dispense with this service that some good reasons exist for discontinuing it. My criticism, if it might be taken as a criticism, is that this service must necessarily be restricted to very few committees. It can not be availed of by very many committees which report important legislation. Now, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Ways and Means, Immigration and Naturalization, and the Judiciary are now the only committees, I think——

Mr. SABATH. And Agriculture.

Mr. WALSH. And Agriculture—that have had the benefit of this service, and in the case of the Committee on Agriculture it was in drafting a bill for which it had absolutely no jurisdiction providing for a rent commission in the District of Columbia, and of course when the Committee on Agriculture seeks to legislate upon anything like that it is very needful that it should have somebody who is competent to draft such legislation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. RUBEY. That is the reason we needed them that much worse. It is because we did not know anything about the subject.

Mr. WALSH. That may be. But I do not think that can be set forth as an argument in favor of this, because if you do you will find a lot of these committees going far afield in matters of legislation simply because they can avail themselves of the services of an expert. But I do think some provision should be made whereby committees could avail themselves of expert services in drafting pharseology.

Now, another thing which I think can be considered as a great benefit, is that it will result in uniformity of system in drafting legislation. For instance, we have revenue bills brought in on the same plan and following the same general scheme from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me to pay myself a trade-last, I think probably that I have drafted more bills which have become laws than any other Member of the House, and probably I have drafted more amendments to bills, which were adopted, than any other Member of the House. If I would undertake to say that any Member of the House were an expert in drafting bills, I might claim the credit to myself. But no member of a legislative body will ever become a real expert in drafting legislation as compared with an outside person who devotes himself to that business. The outside person frequently and generally would not be competent to determine what was to go into a bill or what was to become a law, but the drafting of bills is largely a matter of experience in writing plain terms in the English language and understanding their meaning.

I believe that the committees of Congress ought to have, as they always have had and always will have, any expert services in the preparation of their bills. Take the Committee on Appropriations, for instance, which reported the item in this bill to abolish the legislative drafting bureau. I am making no criticism of that committee or in any way taking away from the high respect with which we all consider it and its members when I say that the members of that committee do not draw and never have drawn an appropriation bill which they reported. No members of it, probably—though I would not be certain about that as to a single item like this—even drafted the provision of this bill to abolish the legislative drafting service. The items in an appropriation bill, at least most of them, are originally prepared by the department, modified by the committee, and when the committee wants to insert something in a bill they have an expert to prepare it for them. In the days of Mr. Courts he did it, and he was an expert in the preparation of items for a bill. The present committee clerk is an expert in the drafting of propositions in a bill. The Ways and Means Committee for years had expert clerks in the drafting of revenue legislation. But every committee of the House, so far as it is possible, ought to have the privilege, when it has complicated propositions before it, to call in an expert to help them in drafting a bill—first, in order that they may get the bill in proper form; second, that it may correlate with existing law which may be upon the statute books; third, that it may be so intelligible that it can be understood and read not only by the Supreme Court but by a Member of the House. [Laughter.] I do not know the men connected with the legislative drafting service. I never had occasion to make use of them. I have not been on a committee that needed their services. I did not ask them to draw the one bill of any importance which I reported to the House and which passed. Plenty of experts had worked on that before my day. But the service is the correct idea. Whether the present occupants of that service are correct or not I do not know, but the theory of Congress to have an expert to help it in the drafting of legislation that is vital to the interests of the people of the country is the correct theory. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to take issue with the gentleman from Illinois when he says that the theory of having some one on the outside to draw these bills is the correct idea. I think it is absolutely weakening, that it absolutely takes away from the individual Member his initiative, his constructive ability, and leaves him in a measure helpless when he is called upon to present the value of the measure he is supposed to be responsible for. You might as well say to some one that to use his right arm for you and let your right arm remain idle by your side would add strength to your arm. I want to say that the best laws we have in this country, that are the best constructed and the easiest to understand, are the ones into which the originators or the committee themselves delved for their information, weighing the value of each word in relation to each other word. When that is done somebody knows what the bill means. We had much better do our own thinking and quit employing some one else to do it for us.

These gentlemen may be all that they are claimed to be. I will admit, for the sake of argument, that they are experts in their line, but I contend that this very expertness is what brings about the reliance of these committees, not on their own judgment, not upon their own ability, but on the ability and judgment of the bureau to furnish thought and policies to the American people that we were sent here to furnish.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Has the gentleman ever sat upon a committee to help perfect a bill with the assistance of one of these experts?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I never have. I did not even know that there was such a bureau in existence until the matter was brought before the Appropriations Committee, and there were not many on that committee that did. I have no objection to them as individuals, but it is to this practice to which I object.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I want to say to the gentleman that the method of the work is to have this committee confer with the expert and talk over the matter with him. He helps you in various and sundry ways, but you do not for one moment forget that you are responsible for the substance of that bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I admit that is true. There is no doubt about it. But why do you do it? You do it because of the fact that you are relying upon him for his expert service in matters that do not require any more of an expert than should be found in your committee membership. I would hate to think that we have a House here of weaklings, with no Member able to draft our laws. For more than 150 years Congress has gotten along without these experts and has enacted some of the greatest laws the world has ever looked upon.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not altogether likely that the gentleman does not see the importance of the employment of these expert drafting men because of the fact that he has service on a committee that has an expert draftsman of its own?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I have never had any experience with these gentlemen. I had experience with one gentleman who graduated from one of these schools. Columbia College is conducting one of these schools, and a number of other colleges are conducting these schools and are sending out their graduates to the different States for employment. We had one of them in Indiana. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] alluded to that. We had more trouble with him than we ever had before, and dearly did we pay for our experiment in that regard. The legislature next to the last abolished him, and they are getting along better without him now than they did when they had him.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman's committee utilize the expert service of the man who acts as clerk to the committee?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We do; and I want to ask the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, whether you use the expert on your committee?

Mr. MADDEN. No; we would be glad to, but we have not had a chance.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You are depending upon somebody else. I do not think the committees of the House would be left helpless if perchance it should happen that the service of this bureau was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Permit me to ask the gentleman just a question there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When the average married couple set out to build their first house, they finally decide on the plans and make rough pencil sketches as to where the rooms shall be, and all that sort of thing; and when they finally get round to the building of the house, do they frame the plans and specifications themselves or do they employ an architect?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the young man is an architect himself, he draws his own plans. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Answer the question, or tell me you do not want to. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the young gentleman has no experience, he calls upon some one to help him.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He makes up the general policy and plans, but the details that are impossible of execution by him he gets some one to do for him.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman from Vermont who are supposed to be the architects of the laws of the United States but the Representatives in Congress? We are supposed to be sent here as the law architects. We are supposed to have ability enough to write our bills. I know that some Members come from business employments and perhaps do not understand the technicalities of law on which these bills are drawn, but it is known that the vast majority of the membership of this House is composed of lawyers, and every one of them will admit that he is a good lawyer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman how many Democrats and how many Republicans this year on the hustings will put in their platforms the fact that they favor employing some one else at $40,000 a year to perform their duty here for them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know how many.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There is one right here.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Every man who votes for the appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That may be true; but I still insist, gentlemen, that if we continue to parcel out the duties incumbent upon individual Members to various bureaus and various departments there will not be anything left for Members of this House to do but to draw their salaries and get something into the RECORD for use on the hustings.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Supposing that we are experts as suggested, why is it, when we have investigating committees, that we employ lawyers and counsel to ask questions for us?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is useless. I think it is a waste of money.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But you are doing it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I know we are doing it. It is by such processes as this, it seems, we are lying awake nights trying to find out how to rid ourselves of labor and responsibility and get some one to do it for us. We are doing it to our detriment, and we are doing it to the detriment of the people of the United States, and to the detriment of good law and good order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is the use, in the gentleman's opinion, of clerks to a committee?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the very purpose, as I understand it. We are paying extraordinarily high salaries to clerks on every important committee of this House. Why?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Except one.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why? Because of the statement and understanding that experts are needed in the preparation of each one of these bills. If that is not so, why pay them $2,500 or $3,000 or $4,000 if it is just simply clerks that you want? You can get mere clerks much cheaper.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understood the gentleman to say that a Member of Congress himself ought to do the work. In that case, what is the necessity for a committee having a clerk?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. These gentlemen are more than clerks. They are experts and their service is desired to do the things that Representatives themselves are expected to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or a Member having a secretary?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; or why should a Member have a secretary?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To do a secretary's work and not the work we are supposed to do. An item will come up in this bill which indicates that we have even got the Supreme Court of the United States into the notion that they have got to have some one to help them write their decisions, and they are asking that there be put into this bill an appropriation for a law clerk for each judge. What for? Not for the purpose of doing a clerk's duty but for the purpose of getting material ready out of which the judges are to write their decisions. The people of the country suppose that the judges write their own decisions. They have expert information necessary. The expert on the side of the defendant briefs his case and gives the best he has in his shop. The man on the side of the plaintiff does likewise, and they bring all their authorities down to the latest date and submit them to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is the same way with these departments. Every one of these departments, including the Treasurer's Office, and the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, have experts to help frame these revenue bills and other bills of interest to their respective departments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that practically every supreme judge of a State supreme court in the United States has assigned to him a clerk to assist him in the accumulation of the decisions and the laws he may want to use in the preparation of a decision?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not the kind of clerk they have asked for in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I regret I can not yield to anybody.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I refuse to yield. I want to make one or two observations myself, and then I am through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So far as I am individually concerned, it does not matter whether this amendment is voted up or voted down, but I believe we would be derelict in our duty if we did not call the attention of the House and of the public to this constant growing practice that we have here of "letting George do it," of providing some way to escape responsibility ourselves that we were sent here to assume and to discharge. I want to call attention here to what we are doing now. The clerical expense of the membership of this Congress is $1,408,000. In addition to that we are expending $185,000 for these committee clerks, these experts, these men who throughout all the years heretofore until two years ago were amply sufficient to do the work that now it seems we can not do. Speaking with reference to the work that these gentlemen are doing, reference is made to the revenue bill, and the statement was made that they needed somebody to make the revenue bill plain, so that everybody could understand it. But if there is any man under the sun who can understand any of these revenue bills, I would like to see him. [Laughter.] And if the revenue bill is a sample of the plain English and the plain meaning that they are conveying to the people, the sooner we get rid of them the better. Abe Martin says that the United States Government is going to make him rich, for the reason that it is offering a reward for the most complicated revenue bill possible, and that he has it.

Now, gentlemen, it occurs to me that the committees of this House can get along without these experts. If we are to have them, why not have them for all of the committees? And where will that lead to? This thing began, as all these things do, in a small way, and, like a rolling snowball, gathering as it goes; last year, $20,000; this year, $40,000; the next year, $80,000, until by and by it will be one of the great expensive bureaus of this Government. They all start in that way. It occurs to me that we are not doing a duty to ourselves when we acknowledge here that we are not capable of drawing the laws that the people of this Government send us here to draw and to enact.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I take it in common sense that no teacher is equal to experience, and I find that every member of every committee who has used these experts has found them well worth and far more than worth the salary at which they are employed. I believe I make no mistake in saying that the most progressive States in the Union and the most progressive legislatures have long since adopted the policy of using expert draftsmen in connection with their legislation. As a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as Judge SAUNDERS of Virginia has said, I believe the most perfect piece of jointure in legislative enactment that had ever been presented to this House up to that time was the bill establishing the shipping law. As to the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that committees using those experts would rely on them altogether and thereby lose their own efficiency, let me say that every member of the subcommittee that framed the shipping act, and reported it to the full committee, sat around the table and considered carefully the meaning of every paragraph, and after that the full committee did the same thing, and we went over the bill not once but many times. Yet we wanted to use, and we did use, and found valuable the services and assistance of this drafting expert.

Without knowing the facts, when I read the railroad bill that was presented here the other day I said to a friend: "The drafting experts have had to do with that piece of legislation, for it, too, is a piece of construction unexcelled in its clearness of meaning and style." And while I voted against that bill, I recognized the perfection of the composition and construction of that piece of legislation. I take this opportunity to say that the Hon. JAMES R. MANN is the peer of any man I ever knew in his capacity to frame laws, and yet he says this service is very essential, if not indispensable. And I think for a great legislative body to deal in loosely drawn laws, which are to be the subjects of litigation for years, is a piece of penny wisdom and pound foolishness; and the little, petty appropriation for this bureau is not big enough to be worth fighting over in comparison with the importance of the work that this bureau does and ought to do. Every important piece of legislation framed by a committee of this House ought to be gone over by a real expert draftsman for the purpose of assisting in putting into form the meaning and intent of the committee that reports the bill. And I want to say by way of tribute that the committee on which I served in the drafting of the shipping act and other important laws had on its membership some of the greatest lawmakers ever sitting in this body, like Judge SAUNDERS, of Virginia, Judge Alexander, of Missouri, men experts themselves. Yet each one of them would bear ready testimony to the fact that this particular expert, Mr. Beaman, was of immeasurable assistance in knowing the law that was to be amended, and referring to it by descriptive terms that left no possibility of mistake, and in helping us to use words and phrases that were clear and unequivocal. When we had agreed on the principle we wished to express, the purpose we sought to accomplish, he never once suggested what that purpose should be, but simply aided us in putting into proper words the purpose of the committee.

Now, every man who has had that experience reaches the same conclusion. It is not strange to find that Members who have not had that experience, confident in their own self-sufficiency, think they do not need it; but if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] will ever avail himself of the assistance of a real expert draftsman in the construction of a law, he will no more say that the services of these experts are not needed. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate on this amendment is closed.

Mr. SISSON. I desire to say a word on this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the committee's recommendation in this matter. I do not agree with gentlemen that you can absolutely substitute the other man's legislative mind for yours, or yours for his. The influence of men over each other is a rather mysterious thing, and a strong man claiming to be an expert will, unconsciously perhaps, and sometimes consciously, influence the mind of a man who does not himself realize that he is influenced.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I should like to ask him if that committee ever used the intelligence, experience, and knowledge of the clerk of the Appropriations Committee in drafting the legislative provisions on an appropriation bill?

Mr. SISSON. Where it is a mere matter of drafting the proposition, which involves absolutely no difficulty, we often direct the clerk of the committee to prepare it; but if the gentleman himself has had experience in drafting difficult statutes, he will realize what I mean. I mean that where a man has in his own mind a peculiar shade of legislation with a particular meaning that he wants to give to it, it is most difficult to transfer that shade of meaning to somebody else.

In addition to that, gentlemen of the House, when this matter is proposed now, after nearly two years it has been in existence, it has only served five of the committees. In order that you may have expert help to draw bills, which you are willing to rely upon, the next thing you hear is going to be that the $5,000 salary you pay these men is ridiculous. You heard the gentleman from Massachusetts say that in England, where they have an entirely different system of government than they have here, they pay $12,000 and the men connected with them $10,000. I say these gentlemen who are doing this work now will, after they shall have gotten enough influence, not only get the $5,000 they are now getting, but just as certain as can be they will get an infinitely larger sum, because they enjoy the confidence of the Members, coming in contact with them, and are going to get it. You ought to know what you are going into. It does not mean a $40,000 appropriation; it does not mean a $100,000 appropriation. When these committees get to drafting bills at the same time, one committee has just as much right to these experts as another committee, and when the committees begin to have dozens of pieces of legislation for drafting you have got to have a dozen experts or else play favorites with some committee. I do not want to give my assent to the proposition that when you have one expert in the House and one in the Senate, the one who can get the ear of the Committee on the Library is going to get the help of that man. If you gentlemen who are willing to go into this field and deal fairly with every committee, be honest and say to the country that you want every committee that drafts legislation to have an expert—why not be frank and say so?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks that his time may be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we have been considering this item nearly all day, and it seems to me that we must make some progress on the bill.

Mr. SISSON. I am sorry the gentleman interjected his remarks here. I am as anxious to get along with the bill as anyone.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall not object to an extension of time for a few minutes, but it seems to me that we ought to make more progress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I had in my mind a point I wanted to make in connection with what I was saying, but, to be perfectly frank, I have lost the connection. I think I ought to have had one of these experts. [Laughter.]

But your committee, realizing what this meant, that when the camel gets his nose under the tent the whole body comes in, did not indorse this; but if you, by your votes, want this service rendered to you, if you are willing to go to the country—and many of you gentlemen say you are—with the idea, I have no objection. But when your committee considered the matter we did feel that it was the beginning of a great extravagance, and we felt it to be our duty to take the action we did, and we did take it and were sustained by the committee.

For more than a century this Congress has done its business without these luxuries. It now seems that everyone in public office wants the office and when elected wants the people to pay some one else to do the work they told their constituents that they were qualified to do and that they say they want to do. When elected they then employ some one else to perform the service and thus the people pay two men instead of one. Every officer in high place now seems to want office for the salary and honor there is in it and wants some one else to do the work. Now, this House can turn this committee down on this item. You have the power. When you do, then prepare in all the departments to employ some one to do the work for the officials. Such conduct is indefensible. I can not consent to it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto now close.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making it 5 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, if anybody is going to get time, let us all have time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McARTHUR) there were 126 ayes and 9 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment to the gentleman's motion to close debate in 5 minutes. My motion was not put.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make a motion of that kind. The Chair regrets it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. McARTHUR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 120 ayes and 11 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GREEN of Iowa having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) authorizing the Department of Commerce to participate in the National Marine Exposition to be held in New York in April, 1920, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9023) to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior years, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from Territories, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, $3,304,500.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I sought to get time to discuss the amendment which has just passed. I do not ask often for time of the House, but I did want to submit a few remarks in connection with that amendment. I concede that the use of experts is probably necessary under the present system of legislation in this House, where most of the important legislation is conducted by a few committees, and where most of the committees have nothing to do. There are 435 Members of this House and more than 50 committees. If the jurisdiction of the legislation that comes before the House were distributed among all of these committees then the particular committee having in charge a bill in which it was proposed to change legislation could have time to consider that legislation, and I do not believe the assistance of experts would be necessary. As it is at the present time there are some four or five committees that do most of the legislating for this House.

Consequently there is an effort upon the part of every experienced Member to get on one of those committees. The result is that those committees become overworked and they have not the time to devote to the individual items or sentences or provisions of the various measures that come before them. Perhaps under such circumstances the advice of an expert is necessary. If you would distribute the legislation throughout the different committees, 40 or 50 of them, each with some legislation to consider, then we could spend weeks investigating and thoroughly considering any important measure. I believe if this change were made that among the 435 Members of the House there are plenty of men who would have ability to properly draft the legislation and consider it.

On Saturday last a measure was presented to this House. I have nothing to say against the committee which presented it. I think some of the best Members of the House are on that committee, and some of the best work done in the House is done by that committee. I suppose there is hardly a Member in the House who would not like to be a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. But there was practically no debate upon the bill and practically no debate upon the conference report, largely because the committee was overworked and was unable to get the bill in here until the last moment. If that committee had been broken up into three or four committees, or its jurisdiction had been more limited, they could have gone to work upon the railroad bill exclusively last spring, and had it in here three or four months ago, when there could have been thorough discussion and consideration, and I think that would have been far better.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming rise?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not discussing any matter before the committee. He can make his apologies for his vote on Saturday last at any time, but he ought not to take up the time of the House in the consideration of this bill in doing it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I resent the gentleman's suggestion that I have any apology to make for my vote of Saturday. I have no apology, as I voted right.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has been making it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. We are away ahead of the Senate with our work of legislation, and I do not see why the distinguished leader of the majority wants to take the position that we can not discuss these matters, for they are important matters. It is true the pending amendment has already been agreed to, but it will be voted on again when it is reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object. We have been all day on one paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming would hear something good if he would not object.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, the item now before the committee is one that deals with the salaries of Members of Congress. I regret exceedingly that it is not possible in this measure to increase the compensation of Members. I realize that it is not, because legislation along that line is not in order under the rules of the House. There are many men in this body who, if they devoted the same amount of time and energy to their professions and busipess in which they were engaged before they came here, would make a great deal more money than they do now. A condition has grown up here, particularly since the war, and the consequent high cost of living, that makes it almost impossible for a man to serve in either branch of Congress unless he has an independent income outside of his salary. I challenge any man within the sound of my voice to dispute that proposition.

Our $7,500 is not a very large salary for an office of the importance of a Member of Congress, and I would like to see the salary raised at least to a decent living wage. The cost of living here in Washington is very high—higher than it is in most of our home cities. I submit, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, that the present salary of a Member of Congress is not sufficient for the office which he fills, and I would like to see that salary increased to $10,000, and I am not afraid to be one of those to go on record in favor of that proposition. [Applause.]

We have raised the salaries of about all other Government employees and we should not hesitate to raise our own if the existing prices of the necessities of life are to continue. With the decreased purchasing power of the dollar, we are not as well off as a man with a $3,500 position five years ago. We have lost a lot of capable men who have left Congress simply because they could not make both ends meet on the salary of a Congressman, and we are likely to lose more such men. These losses are unfortunate, both to Congress and the country.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chaplain: For Chaplain, $1,200, and $600 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago, realizing and having the right to believe that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] had no love for the laboring people of this country, I thought that he had some consideration for the farmers of the country, and I did desire to ask him a question at that time, if he had yielded, whether he did not believe that it would be of benefit——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That the gentleman is not in order; that he is not discussing the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman would let him ask me a few questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana make the point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman must discuss the paragraph in the bill under consideration.

Mr. SABATH. Which paragraph in the bill had the Clerk concluded? Was it not mileage, $175,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. It is page 10, line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had concluded reading the paragraph providing for the salary of the Chaplain, so clearly the gentleman was not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be permitted to proceed out of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the last word of that paragraph is "incumbent." Well, I am going to speak about "incumbent" and that would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman going to talk about? I have no objection, if——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to speak to the paragraph just read.

Mr. WALSH. Then that would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. SABATH. That will be the order from now on that we will have to have a quorum here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. KING. Well, if there is no objection, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes out of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not use a great deal of time. It is only once in a while that I am obliged to ask for a few minutes. I dislike to delay the proceedings of the House, but in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas I was under the impression that he was friendly and interested in the farmers; and I desired to ask him whether he believed that a farmer, it matters not how capable, well meaning, and honest, has the knowledge, ability, and experience to draft a bill or resolution of importance, and whether the legislative drafting bureau would not be of benefit to him?

That was the question I desired to ask the gentleman. But it seems to me that he is fearful of the fact of giving the farmers any aid or assistance, and that he believes that only a lawyer should be elected to Congress from his State or from his district. I appreciate the gentleman's ability and I know he is a very capable and efficient man, because he has introduced more bills for appropriations for his district than any other gentleman from that section, and if I should compile the amount of his bills in which he has asked appropriations, including one of $1,000,000, I venture to say that those appropriations would amount to perhaps $1,500,000, and that notwithstanding the fact that he is preaching economy.

Now, I do not blame any Member for securing all the appropriations that he can. But what effort has the gentleman made to secure the appropriations for his district, outside of introducing these bills? How many bills did he pass in the House in the interest of his district that he introduced? Just a minute ago we passed a paragraph which provides an appropriation of $175,000 for mileage. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has introduced a bill against the allowance of the amount now authorized by law. The very question came up a minute ago, but did the gentleman raise his voice in opposition to the appropriation of the $175,000?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I have not the time. I wish I had.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to answer the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to some of these things that he may not like to hear. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has plenty of assistance from the prohibition bureau and lobbyists to draft his prohibition bill, and I know that the special interests are ready to furnish him all the aid and assistance he needs to draft any bill that will protect their interests; but the masses and laboring people have no one here to aid or assist the Members to draft bills that would be to their and the country's interest, and therefore I am satisfied that the legislative drafting bureau was and is of great assistance to the membership and to the committees of this House. As to myself, I am pleased to say that I will not need the aid of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in drafting any bill or resolution I wish to introduce. I am glad that the committee in its wisdom saw fit to adopt the amendment providing for the bureau, because I know it will be of great assistance to the Members of the House that do not possess the extra-extraordinary ability that the gentleman from Texas possesses. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to make a statement in reference to an insinuation that was made a while ago.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Do I understand that there is a pro forma amendment before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was proceeding under unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say a word in reference to the insinuation that was uttered here on the floor of this House a while ago that I did not vote my convictions on a certain measure. I have a right to my free opinion, and I would like to see any man take it away from me.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is not discussing anything that is before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

The Chair proceeded to count.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEE. Does not the Chair think that having been here long enough on Washington's Birthday so that the Chair can not count a quorum, that we could adjourn?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK: Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for use of the Clerk's office, $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary; chief clerk, $4,500; journal clerk and 2 reading clerks, at $4,000 each; disbursing clerk, $3,400; tally clerk, $3,300; file clerk, $3,250; enrolling clerk, $3,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; chief bill clerk, $3,000; assistant to chief clerk, and assistant enrolling clerk, at $2,500 each; assistant to disbursing clerk, $2,400; stationery clerk, $2,200; librarian, $2,100; assistant librarian, $2,100; assistant file clerk, $1,900; assistant librarian, messenger and assistant Journal clerk, at $1,800 each; clerks—1, $1,800, 3 at $1,680 each; bookkeeper, and assistant in disbursing office, at $1,600 each; 4 assistants to chief bill clerk, at $1,500 each; stenographer to Clerk, $1,400; locksmith, who shall be skilled in his trade, $1,300; messenger and typewriter repairer in Chief Clerk's office, and assistant in stationery room, at $1,200 each; messenger in file room, messenger in disbursing office, and assistant in House library, at $1,100 each; stenographer to Journal clerk, $1,000; 9 telephone operators, at $900 each; 3 session telephone operators, at $75 per month each from December 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921; substitute telephone operator when required, at $2.50 per day, $500; 2 laborers in bathroom, at $900 each; 6 laborers, at $720 each; page in enrolling room, $720; 2 janitors, at $720 each; allowance to chief clerk for stenographic and typewriter services, $1,000; for labor, tools, and machinery for furniture repair shop, $10,000; in all $114,670.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$114,670," on line 12, of page 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 11, line 12, strike out the sum of "$114,670."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] would have the uninformed believe that I am not in favor of economy. I believe that I have made more motions to strike out sums of money, such as this one, and have offered more amendments to decrease useless appropriations and thereby save the people money during the present Congress than any other man on the floor of the House. The gentleman certainly has not been staying here where the business of the people is being transacted. If he had been on the floor of the House during the Sixth-sixth Congress thus far he would know something about the efforts I have made in behalf of economy for the benefit of the people of the United States. The gentleman would indicate by his statement that——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is not talking about anything that is now before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I am. I am moving to strike out "$114,670." I am arguing that question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is not talking about anything in the Clerk's office. He is simply moving to strike out something.

Mr. BLANTON. I am trying to help the chairman save that much money.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. On the question of economy, Mr. Chairman, which involves the striking out or leaving in a bill large sums of money, the gentleman from Illinois insinuated that I must in some way be allied with the special interests of the country. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois and to my colleagues that since I have been a Member of Congress and during my whole life I have never yet been on the pay roll of any corporation or any special interest's pay roll, except years ago, before I went on the bench, I was employed to represent a bank in my home town. The gentleman from Illinois may tell his people whether or not that is true in his case, and I want him to say——

Mr. SABATH. I will say that is true in my case.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I will also say to the gentleman from Illinois and to my colleagues that throughout my political career, from the time I first ran for office to this moment, not a single dollar has ever been contributed to any of my campaigns, and neither myself, nor my friends assisting me in various campaigns, have been paid a single dollar by anybody or from any private source or private interest. Every dollar of my campaign expenses has come out of my own pocket. Has the gentleman from Illinois been able to keep his skirts as clear as that in his political relations with the people? I am not alarmed about my own reelection. I have an abiding faith and confidence in my people. I am concerned about Mr. Gompers's threat to elect a Congress of serfs, and I am making a campaign to prevent him from doing it. And the good business men of Massachusetts and other places I have addressed are helping me to spike Mr. Gompers's political cannon.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman spoke of my introducing a bill to reduce the mileage. I introduced such a bill. I wish that it would pass. He criticized me a moment ago for allowing that item to be passed without taking it up here on the floor of the House. I never waste my time by butting my head against a brick wall when I know that there is no chance for obtaining any relief for the people. But I have tried to save money here during the Republican régime. I knew that with my Republican friends on this side in the ascendency, controlling legislation, there was no chance on God's green earth to reduce the 20 cents a mile that we receive as mileage. I knew it, and therefore I did not waste my time or your time in offering amendments to which some one would make a point of order and have it sustained.

I want to say that I will vote right now to reduce the mileage to the actual expense, and the gentleman from Illinois, I am sure, would have pleasure either in standing up with me or sitting down when that question came up for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. IRELAND. Is it too late to make a point of order on the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma motion by consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will withdraw his pro forma motion.

There was no objection.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of line 11, on page 11, after the figures "$1,000," and all of line 12 up to and including the figures "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. IRELAND: Page 11, line 11, after the figures "$1,000" strike out the words and figures "for labor, tools, and machinery for furniture repair shop, $10,000."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if this amendment is agreed to I wish to say that I will offer an amendment later replacing this same amount in the contingent fund where it properly belongs.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why does the gentleman want to strike it out and then reinsert it?

Mr. IRELAND. Because I think it should be in the contingent fund rather than under the jurisdiction of the Clerk.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me to explain the reason for this item, I think he will conclude that it is better to have it in the hands of the Clerk.

Mr. IRELAND. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The testimony before the committee with reference to this item discloses the fact that we are expending many thousands of dollars a year in letting by contract the repairs of furniture and property belonging to the Congress. It has been demonstrated that this work can be done much more cheaply by having some one in our employ do it without the profit that the person must have who is running an independent establishment. That has not only been demonstrated with reference to the House, but it has been demonstrated with reference to very nearly all the departments, and it has been the policy of the committee, for the purpose of saving money, to permit them to employ a carpenter to do their carpentering rather than to send out and hire a carpenter on the outside; for in each instance the reports of the heads of these bureaus show that there is a saving of thousands of dollars. And I am of the opinion, by virtue of the fact that the property is under the supervision of the Clerk, that he is the man who should have the disposition of it.

Mr. IRELAND. I agree with everything the chairman has said, and he is absolutely correct, but these expenses so incurred should be O. K'd and vouched for by the Committee on Accounts, who are charged with responsibility for the contingent fund. It is a piece of bad business to place it entirely in the hands of a single officer. In the case of the present incumbent of the office it is entirely safe to do so, but it is a dangerous piece of legislation for the future.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. It is not so much a question as an observation. When the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs was recently fixed up we had these men who are employed under the clerk repolish and reupholster our furniture, go over the tables, and so forth, and it was most satisfactory. I believe it was a great saving to the Government to have it done in that way.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Now, whether or not these accounts should be checked up by the Committee on Accounts or by the clerk I do not know, but I believe it is a great saving to have this sort of work done under Government supervision and not outside.

Mr. IRELAND. Absolutely; and I will venture to say that they did a very good job of it.

Mr. HICKS. Unquestionably they did a splendid job.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In my opinion, we have now a double check on this expenditure. It is checked by the Clerk, who is responsible for seeing that vouchers are furnished for the expenditure, and it will be submitted to the Committee on Accounts for their approval.

Mr. IRELAND. That would be entirely satisfactory if universely followed. Now, you force me to say something that I did not want to say.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not want to be guilty of forcing anybody.

Mr. IRELAND. If the gentleman will agree to this amendment, I assure him that I shall move to reinsert it under contingent expenses on page 18, and it will still be under the charge of the Clerk.

Mr. CANNON. What is the difference?

Mr. IRELAND. To use the gentleman's own trite expression, it is a distinction without a difference, but it is essential.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IRELAND) there were 9 ayes and 30 noes.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-eight Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely.

To Mr. LONERGAN, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'CONNELL, until further notice, on account of serious illness of his wife.

To Mr. CLARK of Missouri (at the request of Mr. IGOE), for the day, on account of illness.

To Mr. COOPER, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

SUFFRAGE FOR WOMEN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of New Jersey announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 148. Joint resolution authorizing the Department of Commerce to participate in the National Marine Exposition, to be held in New York in April, 1920; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES IN ADMIRALTY (S. DOC. NO. 233).

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, one of the managers on the part of the House, presented a conference report on the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not reserve points of order on a conference report when offered for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The time to make the point of order on a conference report is after the report has been read.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the legislative draft section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject that I addressed the committee on this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12046, the deficiency appropriation bill, disagree to all Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12046, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 24, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting the annual report of the board to Congress (H. Doc. No. 660), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7833) for the relief of M. M. Wallace, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 12706) authorizing examination, survey, and report by the War Department as a preliminary to the improvement, construction, and maintenance of a national system of motor-truck defense and military highways and post roads, with laterals, in the States of Washington, Oregon, and California, adapted to heavy transporting and to protect the Pacific coast of the United States from invasion by any alien enemy, and for commercial and for other purposes in time of transportation emergency; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12707) to create a national department of highways and a national highway commission therein, to promote and organize a national system of highways, to increase the economy and efficiency of transportation, to assist industry and commerce, to improve the facilities for postal service, and to provide additional means for national defense; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MAPES (by request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia): A bill (H. R. 12708) to fix the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 12709) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Clarion, Iowa, one German cannon or fieldpiece, to be placed in the courthouse park in said city; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 12710) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PHELAN: A bill (H. R. 12711) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PLATT: A bill (H. R. 12721) to abolish the Subtreasuries and to provide for the transfer of the coin, currency, and bullion, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolution (H. Res. 469) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to make an investigation regarding the price of sugar; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MONDELL: Resolution (H. Res. 470) providing that all legislation relating to those who served in the World War (other than those of the Regular Establishment) be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and authorizing the Speaker to rerefer the bills heretofore introduced; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 12712) granting an increase of pension to Garry O. Hill; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12713) granting an increase of pension to Adam Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 12714) for the relief of E. W. Vance, H. E. Vance, F. C. Schmidt, and E. H. McCloud; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 12715) granting a pension to Marcellus L. Durnell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FAIRFIELD: A bill (H. R. 12716) granting a pension to Clara B. Partridge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 12717) authorizing the allowance of additional homestead application of Edward E. Voedisch; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MANN of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12718) granting an increase of pension to Nellie M. Budlong; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 12719) granting a pension to Millie Kennedy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 12720) granting an increase of pension to George E. Scott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

1824. Also, petition of the American Freedom Foundation, of Chicago, Ill., relative to the Davey bill, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1825. By Mr. WATSON. Petition of the Falls Monthly Meeting of Friends, held at Fallsington, Pa., opposing universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1826. Also, petition of various members of the Mennonite Church, against universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come in this sacred moment of a new day to lift our hearts to Thee. In Thy presence all the conflicting interests of men have their adjustment, and the forces that seem to oppose each other are calmed and brought into harmony in Thy presence. So we start out upon the duties of the day from the presence of God, and pray that the influence of Thy Spirit may be with us through the labor of the day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. NELSON and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina managers at the conference on the part of the House.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Knox	Sheppard
Beckham	Gay	Lenroot	Simmons
Brandegee	Gronna	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Colt	Henderson	Nelson	Sterling
Culberson	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Trammell
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Kellogg	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Kendrick	Phipps	Warren
Fernald	Kenyon	Pittman	Watson
Fletcher	Keyes	Pomerene	Williams
France	King	Ransdell	Wolcott

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is absent on account of illness. I will let this notice continue for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness.

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 3654) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, ratifying the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution, extending the right of suffrage to women, which will be filed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD conferees on the part of the Senate.

RAILROAD CONTROL—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to say that, although I was paired in favor of the railroad bill, I regret very much I was not able to be present and cast my vote on the adoption of the conference report on that bill. For personal reasons I found it imperative to leave the Chamber before the late hour at which the vote was taken on yesterday afternoon.

TREATY-MAKING POWER.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I have a very brief article by Mr. Gist Blair, which discusses some constitutional questions raised in the League of Nations. It is a very timely and instructive article, it seems to me, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"The fathers of the Constitution believed the small States would hesitate over aiding in a dissolution of the Union, because of their fear of being absorbed into the big States. New York's control over her port enabled her to levy any kind of duties on the imports and exports of New Jersey and Delaware, and they knew that the power to tax included the power to destroy before it was said by Chief Justice Marshall.

"The fathers protected and believed in the small States, as the yeomen of the country and guardians of its liberties, and when they transferred to the General Government national power they tried to so check and balance it as to prevent individual localities, both large and small, from being wronged without their consent. This is one of the jewels of the Constitution, although it had another and a brighter one in that they intended to create and created a nation.

GAVE POWER TO THE SENATE.

"When the convention met one of its first actions was to select a committee on detail, which undoubtedly considered the subject of this article, since its recommendations included that of a change in old Articles of the Confederation under which the States had existed; they recommended that the appointment of ambassadors and power to make treaties be transferred to the Senate instead of being given to the Congress.

"But the question of treaty making attracted little if any attention, and in the voluminous records surprisingly little is found concerning it, and no further action was taken until late in August and shortly before the convention was about to adjourn, when another committee was appointed, apparently to clean up unfinished business. This committee reported from time to time, but its interest and principal work related to the selection of the President, which, as well as in the way the committee itself was selected and the debates that occurred, show the small States were equally jealous and active. (Framing of the Constitution, by Ferrand, pp. 131, 166.)

CLAUSE REMAINS UNCHANGED.

"This committee reported for the first time the clause of the Constitution as it appears to-day, and by which the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints ambassadors and is to make treaties. (U. S. Const., Art. II; Framing of the Constitution, by Ferrand, p. 165.)

"Its recommendations that the President be chosen by electors equal to the number of Senators and Members of Congress from each State, and when no choice was made by the electors the Senate shall elect the President from the five candidates having the highest number of votes on the list constitutes most of the report, and the assumption of the convention, as a member in the debate alleged, that in 'nineteen times in twenty,' after Gen. Washington had served his term, the Senate would select the President, all shows the leading thought was to protect the small States. (Records of Federal Convention, by Ferrand, vol. 2, pp. 167, 500.)

"It is a knowledge of this that helps us to understand the treaty-making clause reported by the same committee at the same time. They intended it to protect the localities as represented by States, large or small, from adverse governmental action, and as these States or localities were far apart, with many diverse and conflicting interests, they required that treaties be ratified by at least two-thirds of the Members of the Senate present—and each State, large and small, had two and only two Senators.

DELAWARE FOR SAFEGUARDS.

"Delaware was so afraid that she even prohibited her delegates in their credentials to the convention from changing the principle of the confederation of each State having an equal vote. (Rec. of Fed. Conv., by Ferrand, p. 56.)

"The committee's first report of this clause made one exception in the treaty clause in the interest of peace, which exception was urged by no less prominent a member than James Madison, of Virginia, and by it the President would have been authorized to make a treaty of peace alone, without requiring its ratification by two-thirds of the Senate. (Rec. Fed. Conv., vol. 2, p. 495, Ferrand.) Nevertheless the convention removed the exception when it adopted the clause. (See an interesting pamphlet by Charles H. Burr, proceedings of American Phil. Society, records for August–September, 1912, pp. 277, 278, 279.)

"This could not have been done to prevent making peace. It was done to limit the powers of the President, otherwise so vast and full under the treaty clause that it was controlled only by the requirement that treaties negotiated by the President must be ratified by two-thirds of the Members of the Senate present. (Cooley Const. Law, p. 106, note 4, case cit.)

PLENARY POWER FOR PRESIDENT.

"The plenary power granted the President and Senate to make treaties was apparently without any defined limit; the customs or statutes of the States, or even prior statutes of the National Government itself, were to be controlled by it, and this great power was immediately recognized by the courts as having been given. (Ware v. Hilton, 3 Dallas U. S., 199; 1796.) An undefined power was vested by this clause of the Constitution and treaties as the supreme law of the land. It has even been questioned whether treaties are subject to any of the fundamental limitations declared in the Constitution of the United States, or to any of the amendments. (Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S., 258, 1900; in re Ross, 140 U. S., 1891; cf., Hawaii v. Maukichi, 190 U. S., 197, 1903. (See Kent's Commentaries, p. 166; 9 Moore's Digest of International Law; 2 Butler's Treaty-Making Power, sec. 467.)

"And inasmuch as it is possible to do by treaty what Congress itself can not do by law, is it surprising that treaty making must be ratified as it is? Land and land ownership was within the local control still in 1800, when the United States provided by a treaty with France that land inherited by French subjects should pass to them without other requirement, and its provisions conflicted with the laws of Maryland, where it was provided such lands were to be forfeited to the State unless such French owners settled in Maryland or became citizens within a prescribed time, the terms of the treaty were sustained. (Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat. U. S., 259, 1917.)

TREATY RELATIVE TO BIRDS.

"In the attempt to preserve our wild migratory birds (article published in Harvard Law Review, December, 1919) the law enacted by Congress March 4, 1913, to protect them was held to be unconstitutional May 25, 1914. (U. S. v. Shauver.) But the treaty entered into by Great Britain, representing Canada, and the United States for their protection in 1916 resulted in an act July 3, 1918, of practically the same import as the law declared unconstitutional, passed in pursuance of the treaty, and it is no doubt a constitutional law. (U. S. v. Thompson, 258 Fed., 257, 1919; U. S. v. Samples, 258 Fed., 479, 1919; U. S. v. Selkirk, 258 Fed., 775, 1919.)

"The treaty clause in the Constitution is a great charter to protect all the States, and a change in it may yet affect New York and Pennsylvania, who may suffer at the wish of Nebraska and South Carolina and Nevada: Do Senators from these States who unreservedly follow the new thought think of the future? May they not in time need the protection of this great clause of the Constitution, which should not ever be partisan?

"Republicans have not always approved of this clause. No name stands higher in the history of America as a diplomat and a statesman than that of John Hay, the great Secretary of State under President McKinley.

HAY EXPRESSED OPINION.

"Nevertheless, he perhaps failed to appreciate the value of the treaty-making clause in the Constitution, even as President Woodrow Wilson may fail to appreciate it now when he seeks a ratification of his League of Nations treaty. Mr. Hay expressed some strong opinions of the Senate's action about treaties in connection with the treaty negotiated by President McKinley and submitted to the Senate to amend the Clayton-Bulwer treaty so as to enable the Panama Canal to be built.

"Mr. Hay sympathized with a natural anxiety to get to work on the canal rather than with those in the Senate who opposed the treaty, and in a letter to Mr. Joseph H. Choate, dated August 18, 1899, he refers to these treaty-making constitutional powers in no ambiguous terms, saying: 'Now, the irreparable mistake of our Constitution puts it into the power of one-third and one of the Senate to meet with a categorical veto any treaty negotiated by the President, even though it may have the approval of nine-tenths of the people of the Nation.' (Life of John Hay, William Roscoe Thayer, vol. 2, p. 219.)

"As no greater statesman exists in the annals of American history than this charming intellectual, yet we see how he felt over this restriction; and perhaps no one lives who would not trust Mr. John Hay's conscientiousness, yet the remarks quoted show he failed to grasp the value and significance of the treaty-making clause in our Constitution. But we are a Government of laws and not of men, and is it wise that we shall trust absolutely to any man?

RESIGNED MARCH 13, 1900.

"On March 13, 1900, Mr. Hay felt so aggrieved over the Senate's action in refusing to ratify the treaty which he had negotiated that he sent in his resignation as Secretary of State, as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"WASHINGTON, D. C.,
"March 13, 1900.

"DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The action of the Senate indicates views so widely divergent from mine in matters affecting, as I think, the national welfare and honor that I fear my power to serve you in business requiring the concurrence of that body is at an end. I can not help fearing also that the newspaper attacks upon the State Department, which have so strongly influenced the Senate, may be an injury to you if I remain in the Cabinet.

"I therefore hand you my resignation as Secretary of State.

"I need not say with what profound regret I shall sever our official relations. I shall carry into private life the deepest sense of obligation, not only for all your personal kindness but for the confidence and the powerful support you have given to all efforts to improve the service, to extend the influence and the commerce of the country, and to promote in every way its prosperity.

"Yours, faithfully,

"JOHN HAY.

M'KINLEY REFUSED RESIGNATION.

"To which the President replied:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION,
"Washington, March 13, 1900.

"DEAR MR. SECRETARY HAY: I return your resignation. Had I known the contents of the letter which you handed me this morning I would have declined to receive or consider it.

"Nothing could be more unfortunate than to have you retire from the Cabinet. The personal loss would be great, but the public loss even greater.

"Your administration of the State Department has had my warm approval. As in all matters you have taken my counsel, I will cheerfully bear whatever criticism or condemnation may come. Your record constitutes one of the most important and interesting pages of our diplomatic history. We must bear the atmosphere of the hour. It will pass away. We must continue working on the lines of duty and honor. Conscious of high purpose and honorable effort, we can not yield our posts however the storm may rage.

"With hearty assurance of appreciation and confidence, I am,

"Yours, devotedly,

"WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

SHOULDN'T CRITICIZE SENATORS.

"President McKinley understood the value of the Constitution and the usefulness of Mr. Hay, and we can appreciate Mr. McKinley's reasonableness when the Senate refused the treaty he wished, and can compare it with the attitude of President Wilson.

"Senators should not be criticized because they do what is within their rights under the Constitution. It is interesting to note also that Mr. John Hay accepted the opinion of his great chief, withdrew his resignation, and continued as Secretary of State and his labors for the American Government without further murmur or complaint.

"President McKinley understood not only the value of the Constitution, but the wonderful usefulness of John Hay to the country, and no more touching, magnificent testimonial to this quality was ever penned than this letter to John Hay.

Both of these Republican patriots accepted the constitutional powers of the Senate without public comment or attack.

"Is it not worthy of comment at times like these to make comparison and note what a Democratic President is now doing under somewhat similar conditions? Is it an unfair conclusion to suggest that one had a greater appreciation of the Constitution than the other? Both instances, however, have their value in directing attention to the necessity of the magnificent Constitution we love even when it hinders some people from making treaties just as they wish them.

"It stands like an intellectual giant to protect the people and the States. It has a purpose. It was constructed to protect and preserve human rights from an autocratic government.

NOT TO BE FOLLOWED BLINDLY.

"President Wilson is not to be followed outside of the Constitution and its wise provisions, nor should we change at his request its even distribution of powers any quicker than if Gen. Washington himself were here and did he seek to try to overthrow these noble laws.

"They are the work of many minds and many years. They have been tested and tried by American experience. Let us retain and uphold them even when it hurts us to do so.

"GIST BLAIR."

BETTER PAY FOR TEACHERS.

Mr. STERLING. I hold in my hand a copy of McCall's Magazine for September, 1919. There is an article in it entitled "What about teacher's pay envelope," by Mary Badger Wilson. The question of the schools of the District is now before the Senate. I have read the article, and I believe it is entitled to a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is reasonable in its terms, makes enlightening comparisons between teachers' underpayment and the pay of other employees in occupations requiring more or less mental training, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT ABOUT TEACHER'S PAY ENVELOPE?

[By Mary Badger Wilson.]

"Americans have so long and so cheerfully recognized the fact that Mary Pickford's uncontrolled curls and Charlie Chaplin's irresistible legs have fourteen times the earning capacity of the President's brains that a salary scale has to be pretty startling to attract our attention. It has to stand on its head and wave its feet violently in the air. In spite of our topsy-turvy system of values, however, few of us are prepared to accept the theory of the old paradox—the cabin boy should earn a larger salary than the captain of the ship. The cabin boy's job is so much less interesting, it is argued, that he must be compensated for his boredom by a large income. It still appears to most of us that the captain should be compensated for his years of training and experience and for the responsibility he accepts.

"But in 1918 the Bureau of Education reported the average salary paid teachers in this country to be $630.64. This is $243 less a year than the average wage paid to scrub women in a United States navy yard. Of course, the scrub woman's work is hard and, like the work of the cabin boy, it undoubtedly has moments—nay, hours—of boredom. But there is this to be urged in behalf of the teacher, that while the scrub woman, like Topsy, 'just growed,' the making of a teacher is a long and expensive process. Frequently a teacher has to borrow several thousand dollars to pay for the specialized training and education necessary before he or she can be a teacher at all; and this money must be paid back out of future earnings. Also, there is a considerable difference in the responsibility involved in the two jobs. The scrub woman has very little responsibility and, too, she has a definite job and definite hours; as a rule, she scrubs along a beaten path. The teacher, on the other hand, has to find and make her path and lead ever so many little children along it.

"During the past two years, when manual labor has commanded 'war prices' and teachers' salaries have remained on their low prewar basis, many of the profession have had very amusing tales to relate. In Chicago a teacher hired a man to clean her little apartment, shake out the rugs, varnish the floors, and put up the curtains. At the end of the day, when she came to pay him, she found that his charge was just twice what she had earned for her day's work! In Washington the school authorities encountered considerable difficulty in getting janitors for the schools. One good-natured negro in refusing the position said cheerfully, ''Deed, an' you can't get no janitors for what you pay teachers. Naw, suh.' At an experience meeting held during a teachers' convention one normal-school teacher claimed that the little Greek who blacked her shoes once a week actually earned more money than she did!

"Perhaps a reason for the persistence of the low-salary scale in the teaching profession is the fact that since the Civil War it has been practically a woman's profession. With few exceptions it has been the only professional door that stood wide open to women. But in 1917, when the war temporarily opened an amazing number of occupations to women, there was a most significant rush of teachers into other work. The Professional Division of the United States Employment Service received literally thousands of letters from women who held positions as teachers, but who were eager to get some other opening—'any other opening,' they frequently said. The United States Employment Service finally had to draft a form letter to send these applicants, reminding them that it was their patriotic duty to stick by their jobs. One recipient of such a letter remarked: 'Why can not I be patriotic at a munition factory for a thousand dollars a year just as well as at this schoolhouse for $600 a year? I had rather be a volunteer patriot than a conscript.'

"That she was not alone in this preference may be seen from the following cases taken at random from a report of the situation in the center of the Philadelphia shipbuilding district. A fifth-grade teacher, who had had 10 years' experience and was earning a salary of $682.50 a year, accepted a clerical position in a shipbuilding establishment at $1,144 a year. A special teacher of drawing in the intermediate grades, whose annual salary was $682.50 and who had been teaching for 15 years, secured a position in a shipbuilding establishment, where she took charge of the pay rolls. Her entrance salary was $900 a year, and she was promised quick promotion. Preparation for her work as a teacher had required years of specialized study. Her only preparation for her business career was a brief course in a business school and two summers spent as a bookkeeper at a summer hotel.

"A supervisor of drawing, of nine years' teaching experience and earning a salary of $1,050 a year, secured a position with a large chemical concern at a salary of $1,250 a year, with an annual increase of $200 promised her.

"Another woman, who possessed the qualifications not only of a teacher but also of a social worker, had taught for 10 years in the Italian section of the city where she was greatly beloved by the children and parents. Devoted to her work, ambitious, she attended the summer session of a normal school at her own expense for two years to secure a higher certificate. Although anxious to continue teaching, she found it impossible to live on her salary of $577.50, and very reluctantly accepted a position in the office of a shipbuilding concern at an entrance salary of $1,040 a year. Her duties are lighter in the new work, and she is under no strain or responsibility comparable to that of a schoolroom in a crowded foreign section of a manufacturing town.

"These instances were duplicated over and over again in all localities where war work was in progress. They were duplicated in all railroad centers. Some railroads even sent registration blanks to teachers, asking about their qualifications for railroad clerical work, and also asking 'If satisfied, will you remain in the service of the company?'

"Perhaps the most startling conditions were found in Washington, where large numbers of teachers entered the Government service to do clerical work. They passed easily the civil-service examinations, which gave them the guaranty of permanent employment and jumped them overnight from salaries of $500 to $1,000.

"Such desertions from the teaching profession were multiplied by the hundred thousand, so that now the shortage of teachers in the United States is variously estimated at one-sixth to one-third of the number employed before the war.

"In thousands of schools throughout the country important subjects have had to be dropped from the curriculum because teachers simply could not be obtained; in others, these subjects have been retained at the sacrifice of employing inferior teachers.

"The teaching force has aptly been termed 'our army of future defense,' and now in the hour of perhaps out greatest need we see that army break ranks and lose at least 100,000 privates. Why? Because we pay starvation wages, and an army fights on its stomach.

"Many of the men and women who have left the teaching profession have left it for all time. In most cases they have made good in their new positions. Their training makes them especially desirable; they are better educated than the average employee; they do not expect to maintain excessively high standards of living; they are dependable and accustomed to accept responsibility. So far as possible, their new employers will keep them on.

"But the salary question is not the only consideration that will prevent the return of these 'prodigal' sons and daughters. Even if we kill the fatted calf and serve enticing salaries by way of welcoming them back, many, many of them will still turn away sorrowing. For they have other just grievances.

"Our teachers are overworked. They are really tired. And doctors are beginning to consider fatigue as one of the most dangerous of our modern diseases. Dr. Herbert J. Hall, in a series of lectures at the Boston School of Occupational Therapy, stated: 'Mental fatigue in its milder forms apparently does no harm. Mix worry, discouragement, and fear, together with some unknown factors of poor resistance, and you have the ingredients of serious nervous breakdown in which fatigue and the sense of fatigue may figure largely.'

"Thanks to the large classes in modern schools and the long hours of 'pupil pressure,' as it has been so vividly called, teachers suffer from basic fatigue. Then, 'worry, discouragement, and fear!' Those are the ingredients which teachers have to mix with their mental fatigue. Worry is amply supplied by the daily problem of keeping up a good appearance on a totally inadequate salary.

"Fear is furnished by the 'uncertainty of tenure' which the majority of our teachers have to face. In most of our cities and country districts a teacher's appointment is for the school session only; at its close she is automatically dismissed. Her reappointment may be held up by objection from members of the board of education. Such objections are not necessarily based on a teacher's record; they may be purely personal. In many States the teacher may be dismissed without presentation of charges and without a hearing. As membership on a board of education is usually a matter of political appointment, the dangers of such a system are self-evident.

"An arbitrary system of this kind will often destroy itself by some very manifest act of injustice. In June, 1917, on the last day of the school session in Chicago, the board of education summarily dropped 68 teachers—teachers who had efficiency ratings of good, excellent, and superior. The president of the board took the position that it was unnecssary to give reasons for the dismissal of teachers; it was sufficient that it was his decision. But such wholesale injustice was bound to cause a definite reaction. Public opinion was so deeply aroused that the board of education was dismissed, a new board installed, the teachers reinstated, and a law enacted by the Illinois Legislature granting to the teachers of Chicago permanent tenure after three years' probation. During the same year a similar law was enacted by the New York State Legislature. But most States in the Union have no protective laws of this nature.

"Discouragement, the third ingredient of dangerous mental fatigue, is a familiar spirit of the teacher, through the very nature of her task. Dr. Hill, writing on mental fatigue, cites the case of an old shoemaker whom he knows, to illustrate the value of joy in one's work. This man is one of the few survivors of the old system of making the whole shoe from the start to finish. He works a great many hours a day in his little shop, but he works calmly, leisurely, and is expert enough to talk as he works. He has real joy in it. The delight of planning, the excitement of success, the pride of the finished product, all combine to make his long hours fly. Dr. Hall also cites the case of a girl in the same town, who recently went to work in a great shoe factory. She worked at a machine in a crowded, noisy room, fewer hours than the old shoemaker, and for more money than he had ever earned; but at the end of the year she was down with a severe case of nervous exhaustion. She had no joy in her work.

"Love of their work is especially characteristic of what we call the 'professional classes,' because it is peculiarly their privilege to create, to develop, to save. Teaching has always been classed as a 'profession,' and yet a 'fan' in the teaching world is a rare sight. The question naturally arises, 'Why is this? If the doctor is eager and enthusiastic to save little Johnny from the measles, why isn't the teacher equally eager and enthusiastic to rescue him from ignorance?'

"The answer is that teaching is really not a profession. Lawyers, architects, artists—nearly all professional workers—can control the hours and conditions under which they work, the amount of their fees, and the direction their work shall take. Teachers have almost no control over these conditions. The acid test of professionalism is freedom in one's work, and that is just what the teacher lacks. There is always one little rule which, though variously worded, is substantially this: There must be no discussion in the schools of controversial subjects. That is the rule which removes the teacher from the professional class. It is not that the teacher is forbidden to teach a partisan viewpoint on controversial subjects—the wisdom of such a rule as that would be beyond dispute. But she is forbidden to touch on questions which have two sides.

"This limits her work to the instruction of pupils in dead facts, without relating them to living problems.

"An instance of the practical working of this rule, which has recently gained nation-wide publicity, was the case of Miss W., a high-school teacher in Washington, who was suspended, without pay, for a week because she answered certain questions of her pupils on current topics. After her suspension, teachers of English in the Washington schools were verbally warned that they must not 'touch on' the proposed League of Nations in their current-topics class.

"At the informal conference, which was the only hearing granted Miss W., two serious charges were brought against her. She had taught that a dog might have a soul. This charge was based on the fact that she had assigned her English class Matthew Arnold's poem on the death of one of his dogs, as a lesson. The second charge was that she had said, 'Conscience is the final guide.' Shades of our Puritan ancestors! One objection brought against this good old doctrine of the Mayflower was that it might teach children to approach new and untried ideas with an open mind.

"The Washington Board of Education, which has successfully protected its charges from the dangers of following their consciences, reading about the League of Nations and studying Matthew Arnold's poems, is much like other boards of education. Its membership includes no representative of the teaching force. Bank officials, presidents of street car lines, and men of similar position compose the board, which is appointed by the District Supreme Court, as Washington has not a mayor and is not under the jurisdiction of any State officials. But the results are quite the same as those in other cities where the board is appointed politically.

"A general demand is growing in the country for democratic and representative boards of education. One practical plan put forward calls for the division of each board of education into two bodies—one to be composed of representatives of the teaching force, chosen by the teachers themselves, the other to be composed of representatives of the citizens of the community, elected by those citizens. Any question of a community's educational policy would then have to pass both these divisions of the board, just as a question of political policy has to pass both houses of a legislature. The teacher's point of view and that of the parents would both be expressed, and in case of a difference of opinion, compromise would have to be evolved. The adoption of this plan or of some similar plan would make our educational system really democratic.

"As Mr. Charles B. Stillman, president of the American Federation of Teachers, puts it: 'It is useless to fight for democracy, it is useless to legislate for democracy, unless you also educate for democracy.' He believes that we can turn our schools into factories of democracy just as Germany turned her schools into factories of imperialism and militarism. But the first step necessary to accomplish this is to put the schools themselves on a democratic basis, to give the teachers and the parents of the school children a voice in the formation of educational policies.

"During the past few years a very highly organized movement has grown up among the teachers, with two objects—to help themselves and to improve the educational system. This organization is the American Federation of Teachers, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Teacher has joined the union! She has laid aside her professionalism and doubtless has packed it away with the lavender of 'might have been.'

"A recent bulletin of the National Education Association comments on the remarkable rapidity with which unionization of teachers is proceeding, especially in the smaller towns and rural communities, where its growth was expected to be slow.

"Here are some of the demands of the American Federation of Teachers:

"Better salaries.

"Secure tenure of positions during efficiency.

"Smaller classes, permitting greater personal attention for each child.

"Abandonment of the effort to skim over a great variety of subjects under the guidance of a teacher who is equipped to teach only a fraction of them.

"Development of vocational education in both urban and rural communities.

"The vigorous and effective teaching of the privileges and obligations of intelligent citizenship.

"The teaching of unemasculated history.

"The establishment of a Federal department of education, which will establish a genuinely national educational system.

"Teachers are not only asking for better salaries and better working conditions for themselves, they are also asking for the opportunity to make their work a real and vital service to the community.

"An amusing story is told of a little boy who had the small boy's habit of asking 'Why?' His father became so irritated at the persistent questions of his offspring that he finally bought him a book containing 10,000 questions and answers. The next evening little Eddie was ready with a new 'Why?'

"'For the love o' Mike, why don't you read the book I got you?' growled his father. 'I did,' said Eddie, 'but, father, I just don't want to know any of those questions.' Most parents do not purchase books of 10,000 question and answers for their children. But they expect the school-teacher to be a human edition of such a book.

"The teacher now asks to be something a great deal better. Instead of cramming the child's mind with thousands of facts, she wants to teach him how to use facts. She wants first of all to give him a vocational education—to teach him to earn his living, and then to teach him the art and habit of thinking.

"Better salaries, better working conditions, better education, better teachers, better children, better America. They are all related."

ADDRESS OF SENATOR CALDER.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the very excellent speech delivered yesterday by the junior Senator from New York, WILLIAM M. CALDER, before the students of George Washington University.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR WILLIAM M. CALDER TO THE STUDENTS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY, FEBRUARY 23, 1920.

THE DUTIES AND OPPORTUNITIES OF THE HOUR.

"Wherever we turn confusion is evident, and no matter what human activity is observed a divergence from the normal is apparent.

"More than a year has elapsed since the signing of the armistice and we are looking forward to the future with much concern.

"We do well, however, to seek assurance that the Nation's future has for its citizenship established justice, insured domestic tranquillity, maintained the common defense, and secured the blessings of liberty. The fathers declared that these were the objects demanding the creation of this Government, and if no competent cause for the destruction of these objects of government is to be seen, let us take courage and go forward with the tasks of to-day.

"A nation, no more than a man, can come from terrific struggle and titanic expenditure of energy, justly hoping to resume immediately the even tenor of its life. Strong and vigorous men attacked by disease spend months in finding again the strength that was theirs. Likewise the nation, plagued by war and compelled to meet the plague with every ounce of national energy, must go through the days of convalescence which seem at times unending. As a Nation we can not escape the aftermath of complete organic disturbance. The national mind will not in a moment lose the fiery fever brought by war, but confusion of thought will diminish and cease in time if the consequences of war are accepted as burdens to be borne by the body politic before it can function normally.

"However, the cessation of confusion will be hastened if the Nation remembers its former strength and its recovery from past national conflicts. Greater by far were the riches of our products of farm and factory and mine when we entered this war than were they at the beginning of any previous war. American initiative and ingenuity had struggled with nature and made a wilderness a place of happy homes and contented people long before 1917. But the material wealth of our people had increased and the blessings of the Union had become more obvious. The justification of the fathers in laying the foundation of this Government was manifest in the unobstructed exercise of free speech, the toleration of diverse religious beliefs, and the unmistakable signs that the road to opportunity was an open highway.

"With a unity of material resources unequaled in any former day we entered the war with Germany. Not only did we enter, but we emerged from that war with material resources less diminished than in bygone struggles. We have no ruined villages and cities to rebuild. We have no invaded farms to replant. We have no destroyed mines to reopen. But a fraction of our national wealth has been annihilated, and the machinery for its replenishment has been displaced for only a little while. It is true we have increased indebtedness to face, but that indebtedness is a challenge to the productive powers of the Nation less to be feared than that which came to us when the War between the States was ended. The energy and industry and skill of prewar days bid us be assured that fear for the future is not justified by the material burdens placed upon us by this war.

"But national strength among us has had other standards than those counted by dollars and weights and measures. Is it possible that the voices of the few prophets of national decay and destruction will be heard above the united pledge of allegiance which greeted the Nation's cry for help not three years ago? Then in every direction of the compass were seen the stars of service flags. Four million of them brightened the windows of American homes, and millions more waited only for their hour to add to the brightness. They bore witness to the world that love of liberty had here a new birth and devotion to the Nation was unconfined, either by station or place or age. Men who fear for the future of this Republic are like men who, blinded by the light of the sun, deny its existence. The brilliancy of the service of Americans of yesterday makes the fearful deny that an unsullied national service will be rendered by Americans of to-morrow. Whatever the clamorer for governmental overthrow may now cry aloud, the events of recent days demonstrated that the people of this Nation believed its Government is of them, for them, and by them. The appeal of Lincoln on the field of Gettysburg for the dedication of the Nation to the preservation of that Government was answered by the people of his day, and each succeeding generation of Americans has gladly responded to his appeal, but no more whole-hearted dedication of life and of all has been made than that of the generation of which the dead of this war were a part. A clearer and stronger call to succeeding generations for the preservation of this Government will go forth than that which went to any heretofore, for added to the appeal of the founders and fathers and preservers of the Nation is the appeal of those who carried the message of human freedom and hope across the sea. Into the future 4,000,000 of our youth will carry love of land, hallowed by those 'mystic chords of memory' stretching out to the graves of all or valiant dead.

"With material wealth scarcely touched and with moral wealth mightily enriched, through the confusing conditions of to-day we can see a well-ordered to-morrow. Surely no national inheritance has been so much to be desired as that which comes to you young men and women of this generation. A multitude of opportunities are urging you to seek them. Every young man and woman who comes to the close of college life has a laudable desire to do big things or to partake in great movements or undertakings. No matter what calling they may select as their life's work, they hope for and dream of the days when they shall be able to serve their fellow men in a noble way. Indeed, the most tragic hour of ones life is that in which is lost the ambition to render big service to society. Scarcely anyone hopes for wealth simply to possess it or to gain position simply to occupy it. His hope is built on a desire to use both for the good of others.

"For a generation and more industry and commerce have called the best brains of our country to their service. We have been passing through a period of industrial and commercial expansion and development. Men who desired place and power among their fellow men have found in these pursuits the gratification of their ambition. The railroads, banks, and great industries have demanded and have received the undivided attention of many of the master minds of America.

"It would not be true to say that during that period of industrial and commercial expansion the affairs of state have been neglected by men of ability, but it is true that men of large brain power have striven in greater numbers for place in the commercial and industrial rather than in the political life of the Nation.

"To-day, however, in the sphere of governmental operations, greater and more extensive opportunities are offered to the man and woman of brain than can be found in private pursuits. No railroad manager or magnate ever dreamed of securing for himself such a place to exercise his knowledge of our transit problems as is offered through membership on the great transportation commission of the Government. Consolidations of systems prohibited to the individual of the past are now to be made possible under the guidance of servants of the public. It is not inconceivable that Harriman and Huntington, the great railroad builders of the last generation, had they lived, might have coveted the opportunity to serve the Nation in solving the transportation problems of to-morrow.

"In the Consular and Diplomatic Service of America men and women with vision can find a life's task. When one compares our international scope of the days when John Jay and Franklin were our foreign representatives with the scope of to-day, how vastly have grown the opportunities for the exercise of skill and tact and judgment in the conduct of the international affairs of our Republic. If the peace of the world is to be preserved, the moral power of America must be justly and judiciously exercised and representatives of American thought must be found to stand in foreign fields prepared to speak for America when the occasion demands.

"It is difficult to imagine a place more to be coveted as a field for human endeavor than that offered in the Diplomatic and Consular Service of this Nation as we enter upon this period of world readjustment.

"Where can minds inclined to figures and finance find a task more stupendous than that which confronts the men who must formulate and direct the financial system made essential by the war just closed? Hamilton well deserved the tribute paid by Webster for the manner of his meeting the Nation's financial needs in its infancy. For some future Webster is reserved the expression of a tribute equally well deserved for the men who will preserve the national peace while our people pay the cost of this greatest of conflicts.

"These are but a few of the activities of the Government calling for trained men and women. Countless others could be named, for much as it may be regretted, the trend is toward centralization of power in the Federal Government. That trend is not always for the public good. It needs direction and the agencies for its direction are the men and women now leaving our schools and colleges. On them an imperative duty is laid to get ready to be participants in the solution of great problems. Indeed, it would sometimes seem as if commercial and industrial development had almost reached their high point and that governmental development was about to open up a field of endeavor the limits of which can not be clearly foretold, but the proper guidance of which means much for the welfare of all the citizenship of this land.

"We are not fearful for the future. Its tasks will be tremendous, but within itself America will find master workmen upon whose handicraft she can depend."

SOUTHERN PACIFIC OIL CASE.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two letters from the National Conservation Association, signed by Gifford Pinchot.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[A letter to the President of the United States by Gifford Pinchot, concerning the Southern Pacific oil case, on behalf of the National Conservation Association.]

FEBRUARY 3, 1920.

The PRESIDENT,
White House, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The failure of a Cabinet officer to safeguard the public interest is a sufficient reason, even at this time, to appeal to the President. Attorney General Palmer's failure and refusal to do his clear duty in a matter of large importance to the American people not only justify recourse to you but make it unavoidable.

On December 5, 1919, Mr. Palmer announced that he would not appeal from the decision, adverse to the Government, of the district court at Los Angeles, rendered August 29, 1919, in a suit to recover from the Southern Pacific 160,000 acres of oil lands said to be worth $500,000,000. The next morning, in the first 10 minutes of trading in Wall Street, Southern Pacific stock jumped 14 points.

The land grant to the Southern Pacific excluded oil land. The so-called Elk Hills case against the Southern Pacific, previously decided against the Government in the lower courts, was decided in favor of the Government in the Supreme Court on November 17, 1919. The district judge in the decision of the case now being dropped by Mr. Palmer said that it was parallel to the Elk Hills case. These and other facts led the informed public to believe that the 160,000-acre case would be appealed and won in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Palmer alleges that the case is weak and if appealed can not be won. Whether right or wrong, his opinion is of little import and beside the point. In a matter of so much moment to the public interest it is his obvious duty to appeal the case and never to admit defeat until the Supreme Court has spoken. The Supreme Court, which alone has final authority, is the only tribunal whose decision against the Government can rightly be accepted and allowed to stand.

What good can come from dropping this case except to private interests which will thus secure without further contest what the law specifically provided they should never get? What can be lost by appealing the case? If the Supreme Court should be obliged to decide against the public we shall be in a position no whit worse than that in which Mr. Palmer would put us by his refusal to appeal. But if the Supreme Court should reverse the lower courts, as it did in the Elk Hills case, the people will have saved hundreds of millions in value, and the Navy a petroleum reserve so important that Secretary Daniels has said of it that "some day it might turn the tide of war."

Mr. Palmer's course is clearly unfaithful to his public duty. If persisted in until the time for an appeal expires, it might readily become suspicious in the view of those who will recall that he has been an active attorney for large oil interests; that as Attorney General he came into a position of unique power in the matter of the discontinuance and dismissal of oil-land suits; that immediately upon his appointment he dispensed with the Assistant Attorney General then in charge of the Public Lands Division of the Department of Justice, who had been noted for his activities in suits to recover oil lands; and that not only has he dropped this momentous Southern Pacific suit but, if I am correctly informed, he is proceeding actively to dismiss other oil suits in the mid-continent fields.

Mr. Palmer has no power except as it is derived from you. His action, unless you change it, will become your own. I urge it upon you as a matter of the clearest public obligation and the highest public importance that you cause your Attorney General to appeal the 160,000-acre suit against the Southern Pacific, and to see to it that the other oil cases shall not be dropped but vigorously prosecuted.

Mr. Palmer originally had six months within which to perfect his appeal. By his dereliction only four weeks remain. On January 9 I wrote him, urging him to do his duty. Having received no reply, I turn to you. Every moment is precious if a good fight for the public interest is still to be made.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) GIFFORD PINCHOT.

JANUARY 9, 1920.

Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER,
United States Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As president of the National Conservation Association I enter a formal protest against your abandonment of 160,000 acres of oil lands in California to the Southern Pacific Railway Co. without carrying the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The lands in question have been estimated to be worth $500,000,000. The value of your action to the Southern Pacific interests, when it became known on the morning of December 6 last, was reflected by a jump of 14 points in Southern Pacific stock in one of the most violent flurries seen in the stock market for years. The New York Sun estimated that the total gain due to your action would more than double the market value of the entire stock of the road.

The grant to the Southern Pacific specifically excluded lands containing oil. When it became known that the Southern Pacific had obtained this valuable oil land in spite of the law, and especially when its claim was seen to endanger the Navy's petroleum reserves in California, your predecessor, Attorney General Gregory, with the earnest support and assistance of Secretary Daniels, came vigorously to the defense of the public interest.

In his effort to enforce the law, protect the Navy, and save the Nation's property, Mr. Gregory was bitterly opposed by great oil interests, such as those for which you yourself have been employed as an active attorney before the Government departments. But in spite of opposition not only from these oil men but also from persons of great influence within the Government, Mr. Gregory stuck to his guns, appealed an adverse decision to the Supreme Court of the United States, and won.

This decision against the Southern Pacific (the so-called Elk Hills case) on November 17, 1919, was a clear-cut victory for the Government. It applied to only about 6,000 acres of land, but it was widely accepted, even by Southern Pacific attorneys, as presaging another victory for the Government as to the much more extensive and valuable lands which you have since abandoned to the railroad.

I am informed that this momentous action on your part was taken without consulting Secretary Daniels, who had said of the naval petroleum reserves, which your action would seriously impair or destroy, that some day they "might turn the tide of war," and even without notifying him of your intention. You have given, as your defense for abandoning these enormously valuable oil lands, your belief that you could not win the appeal, and that you were not justified, therefore, in consuming the time of officials of your department or of the court itself in the preparation and trial of the case.

I have neither the desire nor the qualifications to argue with the Attorney General of the United States the legal subtleties of this or any other case. But of one thing I am convinced; that nothing less than the decision of the Supreme Court should be allowed to give to the Southern Pacific Railroad public property worth in the neighborhood of $500,000,000, which it was the clear intention of the law should never come into its possession.

Your judgment can be no more than the judgment of one man, however learned in the law. It may be right or wrong. You may or may not be sound in your opinion that on appeal you would lose the case. But you are undoubtedly derelict in your duty if you fail to use every effort which you and your department can put forth to save for the people of the United States and for their Navy the colossal values which are here at stake. It is no disgrace to be beaten in a good cause, but what shall be said of the public servant who, in a public issue so great as this, refuses to fight at all?

The reasons why you should fight this case through, as they have been stated to me, after careful examination, by counsel of unsurpassed experience and tested judgment in the laws relating to public lands, are too weighty to be ignored. They are briefly as follows:

The land turned over to the railroad by your action is admittedly oil land, yet the grant to the Southern Pacific clearly and specifically excepted and withheld oil land from the kinds of public land the railroad could take. It is of immense value.

About 18,000 acres are within the petroleum reserves set aside for the protection of our Navy against the possible exhaustion of commercial oil, and as Secretary Daniels has repeatedly declared, these reserves are absolutely essential to its future security. England is spending large sums to secure to her Navy in various parts of the world precisely what you at home are refusing even to defend.

The larger part of the lands you have abandoned lie outside the Navy's reserves. If it were saved and operated under the oil-leasing bill now in conference before Congress, it would not only bring large revenues to the Government but would be a powerful means of limiting and controlling monopoly in oil, and to that extent would help to hold down the high cost of living.

The decision of Judge Bledsoe in the case which I am urging you to appeal was made in view of and undoubtedly influenced by the previous decision of the lower court in the Elk Hills case, which the Supreme Court has since unanimously reversed. Judge Bledsoe, in his opinion, which is based in part on the theory that the Southern Pacific was above and beyond the suspicion of such fraud as the Supreme Court officially condemns it for in the Elk Hills case, specifically refers to the latter as a parallel case.

The date of patent of, and other facts as to, a part at least of the lands in dispute, worth so many millions of dollars, appear to be closely similar to those of the lands in the Elk Hills case, and this fact alone is abundantly sufficient to justify an appeal.

Finally, the case is of such vast importance that none, least of all the Supreme Court, could accuse you of prosecuting vexatious litigation, while all men of good will would applaud action on your part leaving no stone unturned in a matter which so deeply concerns the welfare of all the people of the United States.

There are still nearly two months in which you can take an appeal. Once again I urge you, who are the attorney of the American people, charged with the protection of their interests, to reverse your decision to abandon these lands and to carry this issue to the Supreme Court with all the energy and skill at your command. Whether you win or lose you will then have done your duty. Most of your fellow countrymen will, I think, be inclined to agree with me that your duty is obvious and inescapable. Case after case within my own experience has been won for the people against the lukewarmness or even opposition of Government attorneys on what seemed in advance a more slender hope than this.

Very respectfully, yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, on February 20, at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], there was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial from Wallace's Farmer. In view of some statements made in the editorial I took the matter up with Mr. Hoover, and this morning I received a letter from Mr. Hoover, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the communication.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1920.

Hon. CHAS. B. HENDERSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your inquiry as to the accuracy of the statements that Senator GORE read into the RECORD on February 20. One statement is absurd on its face; the other, relating to hogs, can easily be demonstrated inaccurate by the actual documents. It is unjust to the men who comprised the meat division of the Food Administration and the live-stock committee (14 active, prominent farmers, from all parts of the country) of the agricultural advisory board.

The facts are:

(1) In November, 1917, in order to secure production, an assurance was given that, so far as the Food Administration could effect foreign buying of pork products, it would endeavor to maintain a 13 to 1 ratio to the price of corn, as had been recommended by various producers' representatives. (Doc. No. 1.)

(2) The approach of the armistice and a sharp fall in forward prices of corn caused the plan to break down, because farmers naturally interpreted the falling corn to mean ultimate falling hogs, and a panic in marketing started. The live-stock committee of farmers was summoned to a meeting in Washington to consider the whole situation on October 25, 1918. (Doc. No. 2.)

(3) The committee recommended the abandonment of the 13 to 1 plan, as it could under the new conditions only work out to the disadvantage of the farmers, and recommended the substitution of a minimum price of $17.50 per 100 pounds for hogs. The minutes of this meeting are given herewith and were published at the time. (Doc. No. 3.)

(4) In January, following the armistice, the allied countries abandoned the American market for cheaper fats elsewhere, and again the plan threatened to fail, but measures taken by the administration again in cooperation with the live-stock committee of farmers held the situation together. The live-stock committee recorded its great appreciation and satisfaction with the results in formal resolutions in the month of March or April, copies of which will be supplied to you.

(5) Finally, it can also be noted that the average price of hogs at Chicago for the year October 1, 1918, to October 1, 1919, was very close to $19 per 100 pounds, and it represents the full ratio in all the predominant hog and corn States. The farmer realized fully $2.50 per hundred more than he has realized this season in an unassured market. Under the plan used the packers' and distributors' profits were held to definite margins, and the consumers' costs were less a year ago on higher hogs than they are to-day.

That the stimulation was successful and important results effected for the war is shown by the following increase in exports of pork products during the fiscal year while the arrangement was in effect (fall 1918 to fall 1919) compared with that previously:

Fiscal year:	Export pounds.
1917–18	1,737,103,220
1918–19	2,944,308,936

Yours, faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

The documents, subsequently ordered to be printed in the RECORD, are as follows:

[Document No. 1.]

"UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
"MEAT DIVISION,
"Chicago, November 3, 1917.

"Joseph P. Cotton, chief of the United States Food Administration meat division, to-day issued the following statement relative to the price of hogs:

"'The main purposes of the Food Administration as to hogs are four: To see that the producer at all times can count on a fair price for his hogs so that it will be profitable to him, to see that the farmer increases the number of hogs bred, to limit the profit of the packer and the middleman, and to eliminate speculation.

"'All these purposes are necessary because we must have more hogs, so that the ultimate consumer shall at all times get an adequate supply of hogs at the lowest feasible price.

"'We shall establish rigid control of the packer. Fair prices to the farmer for his hogs, we believe, will be brought about by the full control which the Food Administration has over the buying of the Allies, our Army and Navy, the Red Cross, the Belgian relief, and the neutrals, which together constitute a considerable factor in the market.

"'The first step is to stop the sudden break in prices paid for hogs at the central markets. These prices must become stable, so that the farmer knows where he stands, and will feel justified in increasing hogs for next winter. The prices so far as we can affect them will not go below a minimum of about $15.50 per hundredweight for the average of the packers' droves on the Chicago market until further notice.

"'We have had, and shall have, the advice of a board composed of practical hog growers and experts. That board advises that the best yardstick to measure the cost of production of the hog is the cost of corn. That board advises that the ratio of corn price to hog price, on the average, over a series of years has been about 12 to 1 (or a little less). In the past, when the ratio has gone lower than 12 to 1, the stock of hogs in the country has decreased. When it was higher than 12, the hogs have increased. That board has given its judgment that to bring the stock of hogs back to normal under present conditions the ratio should be about 13. Therefore, as to the hogs farrowed next spring, we will try to stabilize the price so that the farmer can count on getting for each 100 pounds of hog ready for market thirteen times the average cost per bushel of the corn fed into the hogs.

"'Let there be no misunderstanding of this statement. It is not a guaranty backed by money. It is not a promise by the packers. It is a statement of the intention and policy of the Food Administration, which means to do justice to the farmer.'"

"UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
"Washington, D. C., October 24, 1918.

"DEAR GOV. STUART: I have asked that we should have a meeting to consider the present situation in the hog market, and for the board to join in the negotiations for placing the controlled orders for export pork products for the month of November.

"You will recollect that at our meeting a month ago methods were outlined by your board that were then felt would apply in a practical way the formula for a price of 100-pound hogs, based on the average farm value of 13 bushels of corn, and that by the application of this arrangement from month to month stability and assurance could be given to the market and a stimulative return could be given to the swine growers of the country during the heavy marketing season. The October contracts for export shipments were let to the 50 different participating packing firms by the Food Administration for 130,000,000 pounds of pork products on a basis reflecting the recommendation of the board, and these packers undertook, in writing, to support the price of hogs on this general basis during the month of October.

"We all believed that these arrangements would work out to stabilize the price up to a fair level to give a just return to the farmer, and would give effect to the announced policies of the Food Administration in his protection.

"Since our meeting very serious difficulties have arisen from causes that could not be foreseen, and these difficulties give me the most extreme anxiety. They arise from the following causes:

"The current peace negotiations have alarmed the holders of corn and there has been a fall of from 30 cents to 40 cents per bushel in the price. The large accumulations of very low-priced corn in the Argentine and South Africa would, upon peace and liberated shipping, become available to the European and even the American market, and in consequence there has been a good deal of natural alarm. This fall in corn has created the fear with many hog growers that a similar fall was impending in hogs as well as corn with the advent of peace. Moreover, this lower range of corn prices, when incorporated in an average of the previous five months settled upon as a basis for calculating hogs, prophecies a continuously falling price of hogs. As a result, producers are apparently in a panic at this possible indication of lower ranges and have been overshipping to the market. The receipt of hogs is running apparently somewhere near 30 per cent more than the receipts last year, while the increased production in the country appears to average but about 15 per cent. In addition there has been an undue marketing of heavy sows, which are not adapted for export. The result has been a great embarrassment to the packing houses to take care of the receipts. Many of the packers have actually paid over the price at which hogs were offered in an endeavor to maintain their obligation. The action taken by the board and the Food Administration at the last meeting has, fortunately, prevented a slump in hogs comparable to corn.

"While I do not advance the notion that we may have immediate peace, my own view of its effect, if it should be realized, is that no matter what the result might be in corn there will be an even larger demand for pork products with peace than during the war, because of the enormous fat shortage in the central empires, which would be an additional demand upon the top of the present heavy demands for the Allies. So far as is humanly possible to interpret these facts, I believe we should have an even stronger demand for pork products after peace than before, and that therefore the alarm of hog producers is unwarranted.

"I am extremely troubled at the situation, for, as the board is well aware, the one desire of the Food Administration is to do justice to the producer in the United States and to secure him a proper return for his large exertions in providing the world with larger food supplies. The whole plan as put into action a month ago was designed purely for this purpose. There can be no doubt that from overmarketing the plan may become any moment unmanageable. I am therefore anxious that you should consider the problem anew and all its aspects.

"To indicate our intention to proceed in this matter in absolute good faith, I may say that we have in hand orders for 170,000,000 pounds of pork products for the month of November, which may be slightly increased during the month. The Food Administration is prepared to place these orders on the basis of the 13 to 1 ratio applied to the month of November. I do not, however, feel that if the producers continue to flood the market this will assure any stability to price. This undertaking on our part should indicate our desire to carry out the plan absolutely as laid down.

"As stated above, the hogs in the country indicate a 15 per cent increase, and the increased export orders for the last five months of this year compared with last year are as follows:

	1917	1918
July	43,400,000	268,600,000
August	67,800,000	178,900,000
September	77,600,000	114,900,000
October	52,200,000	130,000,000
November	98,100,000	170,000,000
December	90,000,000	[1] 200,000,000
Total	429,100,000	1,062,400,000

[1] Estimated.

"It will be seen by the above that the demand has greatly increased, and I believe we could handle the situation were it not for the panic among producers and if the hogs were being shipped normally to the market in proportion to their natural increase over last year.

"Faithfully, yours,

"HERBERT HOOVER.

"The Hon. H. C. STUART,
"Chairman Agricultural Advisory Board,
"Washington, D. C."

[Document No. 3.]

"UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
"Washington, D. C., October 26, 1918.

"The conference between the live-stock subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, including special members representing the swine industry and of the Food Administration, held on October 23–25, has, after consideration of the present situation of the pork and hog market, reached the following conclusions:

"The entire marketing situation has so changed since the September joint conference as to necessitate an entire alteration in the plans of price stabilization. The current peace talk has alarmed the holders of corn, and there has been a price decline of from 25 cents to 40 cents per bushel. The fact that the accumulations of low-priced corn in the Argentine and South Africa would, upon the advent of peace and liberated shipping, become available to the European market, has created a great deal of apprehension on the part of corn holders. This decline has spread fear among swine growers that a similar reduction in the prices of hogs would naturally follow. Moreover, the lower range of corn prices would, if incorporated in a 13 to 1 ratio obviously result in a continuously falling price for live hogs. In view of these changed conditions many swine producers anticipated lower prices, and as a result rushed their hogs to market in large numbers, and this overshipment has added to and aggravated the decline.

"The information of the Department of Agriculture indicates that the supply of hogs has increased about 8 per cent, while the highest unofficial estimate does not exceed 15 per cent increased production over last year. On the other hand, the arrival of hogs during the last three weeks in the seven great markets has been 27 per cent more than last year during the corresponding period, demonstrating the unusually heavy marketing of the available supply. In the face of the excessive receipts some packers have not maintained the price agreed last month. On the other hand, many of the packers have paid over the price offered to them in an endeavor to maintain the agreed price. The result, in any event, has been a failure to maintain the October price basis determined upon the September conference and undertaken by the packers. Another factor contributing to the break in prices during the month has been the influenza epidemic; it has sharply curtailed consumption of pork products and temporarily decreased the labor staff of the packers about 25 per cent.

"The exports of 130,000,000 pounds of pork products for October compared with about 52,000,000 pounds in October a year ago, and the export orders placeable by the Food Administration for November amount to 170,000,000 contrasted with the lesser exports of 98,000,000 for November, 1917. The increased demands of the Allies are continuing, and are in themselves proof of the necessity for the large production for which the Food Administration asked. The increase in export demands appears to be amply sufficient to take up the increase in hog production, but unfavorable market conditions existing in October afford no fair index of the aggregate supply and demand.

"It must be evident that the enormous shortage in fats in the Central Empires and neutral countries would immediately upon peace result in additional demands for pork products, which, on top of the heavy shipments to the Allies, would tend materially to increase the American exports inasmuch as no considerable reservoir of supplies exists outside of the United States. It seems probable that the present prospective supplies would be inadequate to meet this world demand with the return to peace. So far as it is possible to interpret this fact it appears that there should be even a stronger demand for pork products after the war, and therefore any alarm of hog producers as to the effect of peace is unwarranted by the outlook.

"In the light of these circumstances, it is the conclusion of the conference that attempts to hold the price of hogs to the price of corn may work out to the disadvantage of pork producers. It is the conclusion that any interpretation of the formula should be a broad-gauged policy applied over a long period. It is the opinion of the conference that in substitution of the previous plans of stabilization, the live-stock subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, together with the specially invited swine representatives, should accept the invitation of the Food Administration to join with the administration and the packers in determining the prices at which controlled export orders are to be placed. This will be regularly done. The influence of these orders will be directed to the maintenance of the common object, namely, the stabilization of the price of live hogs so as to secure as far as it is possible fair returns to the producer and the insurance of an adequate future supply.

"These foreign orders are placed upon the basis of cost of hogs to the packers.

"As the result of long negotiations between this body and the packers' committee, representing the 45 or 50 packers participating in foreign orders, together with the allied buyers, all under the chairmanship of the Food Administration, the following undertaking has been given by the packers:

"In view of the undertakings on the part of the Food Administration with regard to the coordinated purchases of pork products, covered in the attached, it is agreed that the packers participating in these orders will undertake not to purchase hogs for less than the following agreed minimums for the month of November; that is, a daily minimum of $17.50 per hundred pounds on average of packers' droves, excluding throw outs. 'Throw outs' to be defined as pigs under 130 pounds—stags, boars, thin sows, and skips. Further, that no hogs of any kind shall be bought, except throw outs, at less than $16.50 per hundred pounds. The average of packers' droves to be construed as the average of the total sales in the market of all hogs for a given day. All the above to be based on Chicago.

"We agree that a committee shall be appointed by the Food Administration to check the daily operations in the various markets with a view to supervision and demonstration of the carrying out of the above.

"The ability of the packers to carry out this arrangement will depend on there being a normal marketing of hogs based upon the proportionate increase over the receipts of last year. The increase in production appears to be a maximum of about 15 per cent, and we can handle such an increase.

"If the producers of hogs should, as they have in the past few weeks, prematurely market hogs at such increasing numbers over the above it is entirely beyond the ability of the packers to maintain these minimums, and therefore we must have the cooperation of the producer himself to maintain these results. It is a physical impossibility for the capacity of the packing houses to handle a similar overflood of hogs and to find a market for the output. The packers are anxious to cooperate with the producers in maintaining a stabilization of price and to see that producers receive a fair price for their products.

"THOS. E. WILSON,
"Chairman Packers' Committee.

"The plan embodied above was adopted by the conference.

"The Food Administrator has appointed a committee comprising Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, chairman of the packers' committee; Mr. Everett Brown, president of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange; Maj. Roy, of the Food Administration; Mr. Louis D. Hall, of the Bureau of Markets, to undertake the supervision of the execution of the plan in the various markets. Commission men are asked to cooperate in carrying out the plan embodied in the packers' agreement. It must be evident that offers by commission men to sell hogs below the minimum established above is not fair, either to the producer or the participating packers. Mr. Brown has undertaken, on behalf of the commission men in the United States, that they will loyally support the plan.

"It is believed by the conference that this new plan, based as it is upon a positive minimum basis, will bring better results to the producer than average prices for the month. It does not limit top prices and should narrow the margins necessary to country buyers in more variable markets. It is believed that the plan should work out close to $18 average.

"Swine producers of the country will contribute to their own interest by not flooding the market, for it must be evident that if an excessive overpercentage of hogs is marketed in any one month price stabilization and control can not succeed; and it is certain that producers themselves can contribute materially to the efforts of the conferences if they will do their marketing in as normal a way as possible.

"The whole situation as existing at present demands a frank and explicit assurance from the conferees represented, namely, that every possible effort will be made to maintain a live-hog price commensurate with swine-production costs and reasonable selling values in execution of the declared policy of the Food Administration to use every agency in its control to secure justice to the farmer.

"The stabilization methods adopted for November represent the best efforts of the conference, concurred in by the Food Administration and the live-stock subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, together with special swine members and the representatives of the packers, to improve the present unsatisfactory situation which has unfortunately resulted because of the injection of uncontrollable factors.

"We ask the producer to cooperate with us in a most difficult task.

"The members of the conference were:

"Food Administration: Herbert Hoover, F. S. Snyder, Maj. E. L. Roy, and G. H. Powell.

"Department of Agriculture: Louis D. Hall and F. R. Marshall.

"Producers: H. C. Stuart, Elk Garden, Va., chairman Agricultural Advisory Board; W. M. McFadden, Chicago, Ill.; A. Sykes, Ida Grove, Iowa; J. H. Mercer, Topeka, Kans.; E. C. Brown, president Chicago Live Stock Exchange; Eugene Funk, Bloomington, Ill.; Isaac Lincoln, Aberdeen, S. Dak.; C. E. Yancey; John M. Evvard, Ames, Iowa; J. G. Brown, Monon, Ind.; N. H. Gentry, Sedalia, Mo.; John Grattan, Broomfield, Colo.; C. W. Hunt, Logan, Iowa.; and W. R. Dodson."

"OCTOBER 29, 1918.

"DEAR GOV. STUART: There is one important matter that was, in my understanding, agreed at the conferences just held over the stabilization of hog prices that I think should be set out now clearly in writing, in order that there may be no future misunderstandings on the subject, and I should be glad to know if the following is also your recollection:

"1. That the 13-to-1 formula, having proved disadvantageous to the farmer upon any interpretation, is absolutely abandoned as a price basis for hogs, and is only to be used for purely discussion purposes in future conferences to the end that it is considered as possible of guidance.

"2. That the whole of these plans are replaced by the periodic joint conferences between the Food Administration, the Agricultural Advisory Board (and the special members invited to sit with them on swine questions), and the packers' committee when the prices are determined for foreign orders. That no obligation rests on the Food Administration to try to maintain any minimum prices on hogs whatever, except so far as may be periodically agreed at these conferences.

"3. That the guiding principles of the conference are to be the determination of prices on controlled orders that will yield a fair return to the producer and the coordination of these prices with commercial conditions of demand and supply, so far as it can be accomplished.

"For the purpose of your records I send you herewith the undertaking made by the packers at the conference of the 25th instant and a copy of the statement drawn up with the full approval of the conference just finished, with the names of those present.

"Yours, faithfully,

"HERBERT HOOVER.

[Document No. 5.]

"DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
"Washington, November 6, 1918.

"DEAR MR. HOOVER: Replying to your letter of October 29, in which you ask for a statement from me as to my recollection of the understanding reached in the conference as to the stabilization of hogs, held October 23–25, between your department and the live stock committee of the advisory board and associated swine producers:

"1. My recollection is in accord with yours as to the present abandonment of the 13-to-1 formula as a price basis for hogs, and that it is to be used for discussion purposes at future conferences whenever it may be considered as a possible guide.

"2. That the prices of hogs should be arrived at for the present and the immediate future by a joint conference between the Food Administration, the agricultural advisory board or the live stock subcommittee thereof and associated swine producers invited to sit with them on questions relating to swine, and the packers committee, when prices are to be determined for foreign orders.

"3. My recollection is entirely in accord with the third paragraph of your letter, reading as follows:

"That the guiding principles of the conference are to be the determination of prices on controlled orders that will yield a fair return to the producer and the coordination of these prices with commercial conditions of demand and supply, so far as it can be accomplished.

"I acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the statement made by the packers, setting forth their undertakings resulting from the conference above mentioned, together with a copy of a statement drawn up by the conference itself with the names of those present attached.

"In behalf of the live stock subcommittee of the agricultural advisory board and the swine producers associated therewith, I wish to express, in so far as I may as chairman, the full confidence of the entire committee in the valuable work you have already done both for the producers and for the whole people, and to bespeak your further valuable support as food administrator in protecting the just and reasonable rights of the great army of agricultural producers of the country.

"Very truly, yours,

"H. C. STUART,
"Chairman National Agricultural Advisory Committee.

"Hon. HERBERT C. HOOVER,
"United States Food Administrator,
"Washington, D. C."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I ask that Document No. 1, Document No. 2, and Document No. 3, referred to in the letter, be printed in the RECORD immediately following the letter which has just been read, and also Documents Nos. 4 and 5 relating to the same subject matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GRONNA. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the Senator a question. I ask the Senator from Nevada to what he refers? Is this an answer to some statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who does not happen to be in the Chamber at this time?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Hoover states in the first paragraph of his letter that the inaccuracies in the editorial relating to hogs can easily be demonstrated by the actual documents. It is not an answer to any statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], but copies of the documents referred to in the letter showing the action taken and the reasons therefor. They give the facts, and should be printed in connection with the letter.

Mr. GRONNA. Does Mr. Hoover deny the statement made by Mr. Wallace in Wallace's Farmer?

Mr. HENDERSON. The letter of Mr. Hoover and these documents explain the situation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I am not mistaken, Mr. Hoover states in his letter to the Senator from Nevada that the statement made by Mr. Wallace in Wallace's Farmer, as presented by the Senator from Oklahoma, is absurd. I desire to state for the RECORD and for the information of the Senator from Nevada and other Senators that there appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry dozens and dozens of men who are interested in the production of hogs, and who stated most emphatically that there had been a breach of faith; that the promises made by those who said they represented the Government were not fulfilled. There were in a single day 39 men from the great State of Kansas who stated most emphatically that they represented live-stock interests to the amount of 400,000 head of cattle, and that they had then lost an average of $60 per head. All of them stated that they had been induced by Mr. Hoover or his representatives to buy cattle and feed at the high prices, and they charged Mr. Hoover absolutely with the responsibility for what had happened.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has asked that certain documents, No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, and No. 5, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes. I would like to have them printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. What documents are they?

Mr. HENDERSON. They are documents relating to the subject matter in connection with the hog situation and the abandonment of the 13-to-1 formula as a price basis for hogs.

Mr. SMOOT. Have they already been prepared and issued by the Food Administration?

Mr. HENDERSON. These papers are part of the records of the Food Administration. They were copied from those records.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the letter, in substance, explains the matter. What I want to know is whether those documents have been previously printed?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if they have not heretofore been printed, how can they be numbered?

Mr. HENDERSON. They are simply numbered for purposes of identification, being referred to in the letter by number, so that Document No. 1, as referred to in the letter, may be identified in connection with No. 1 in the letter.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say that I know that some of these documents have been printed in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HENDERSON. I simply make this request so as to save reading the documents. The editorial to which reference has been made was published in the RECORD, and I know of no good reason for excluding these documents which show the actual facts. I am asking nothing unusual, and it is fair and proper that the same action be permitted now that was permitted on February 20.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to appeal to the Senator, if these documents are in such form to-day that they can be secured, and have been printed, not to request that they go into the RECORD.

I wish again to call the attention of the Senate to the situation in which we find ourselves in relation to paper. The Public Printer has been scouring the country from one end to the other for print paper. In Maine on last Saturday he found 10 carloads of paper. He telegraphed from Maine asking whether or not he should buy the 10 carloads of paper. The price was three times the old price of paper, but we had to accept the 10 carloads of paper and pay the price asked or cease publishing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I plead with Senators to stop putting so much stuff in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. Could not this matter be compromised by leaving out the speeches of Senators and merely putting in editorials and magazine articles?

Mr. SMOOT. That would help to some extent but would not nearly bring the relief that is required, because the magazine articles and other matter inserted in the RECORD now constitute the bulk of the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I heard no objection the other day when the Senator from Oklahoma asked to have printed in the RECORD the editorial to which reference has been made; I think it is only fair and just that these documents should now be printed in the RECORD. When Senators see fit to have printed in the RECORD matters reflecting upon the character, integrity, and motives of private citizens or officials, an opportunity should always be given any Senator to have printed in the RECORD a reply to those matters. The American people always believe in fair play.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not happen to be in the Chamber when the Senator from Oklahoma asked unanimous consent for the printing of the editorial, and I dislike to stand here on the floor of the Senate and object to any paper going into the RECORD, but I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that we have got to stop the practice or else there has got to be some way devised of procuring paper from some source other than those now available, or we are not going to have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD printed. The Senator, of course, can read the matter into the RECORD when the time comes, but I do not desire to force him to do that. I will ask the Senator, can any citizen secure a copy of the documents if he takes the trouble to write for them?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know as to that, I am sure, but I would think so.

Mr. SMOOT. If they could be procured in that way, I should object to their being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can not state whether or not they can be so procured.

Mr. SMOOT. If they can not be so procured, being in answer to articles that were published in the RECORD at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma, I am not going to compel the Senator from Nevada to read them into the RECORD. Therefore, I shall not object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD as requested by the Senator from Nevada.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the national executive committee of the Private Soldiers and Sailors Legion of the United States of America, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Esch-Cummins railroad bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Lewis, Jefferson, Miltonvale, Assaria, Conway, Smith Center, Elk City, Glade, Hiawatha, and Valeda, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Calif., favoring the adoption of certain policies with reference to the merchant marine, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of McPherson Post, No. 51, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of California, of Hanford, Calif., favoring an increase in pensions of veterans and widows of veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, South Norwalk, Winsted, New Haven, Hartford, Ansonia, Orange, Darien, Ridgefield, Wallingford, and Norwich, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 9281. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 433); and

H. R. 10515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 434).

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2921) for the relief of the Milwaukee Bridge Co. (Rept. No. 435); and

A bill (S. 3205) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased (Rept. No. 436).

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 795) for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 437) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1275. An act for the relief of W. L. Rose (Rept. No. 438);

H. R. 1853. An act to reimburse E. T. Thing and S. A. Thing for losses and damages sustained by them by the negligent dipping of their cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture (Rept. No. 439);

H. R. 6291. An act for the relief of E. Willard (Rept. No. 440);

H. R. 6413. An act granting the sum of $549.12 to Clara Kane, dependent parent, by reason of the death of William A. Yenser, late civil employee, killed as a result of an accident at the Philadelphia Navy Yard (Rept. No. 441); and

H. R. 6773. An act for the relief of Albert C. Burgess (Rept. No. 442).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2934) for the relief of the Leavenworth Bridge Co., of Leavenworth, Kans. (Rept. No. 443); and

A bill (H. R. 1791) for the relief of O. W. Lindsley (Rept. No. 444).

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3911) to repeal section 7 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., p. 383), asked to be discharged from its further consideration and, with the accompanying papers, that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred Senate resolution 292, submitted by Mr. SHERMAN on the 4th instant, directing the Committee on the Library to have painted an oil portrait of Abraham Lincoln, to be placed in the Senate wing of the Capitol, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3609) to amend the act of Congress approved April 27, 1914, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 445) thereon.

ROANOKE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12351) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C., and I submit a report (No. 446) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved March 1, 1919, to be built by the county of Halifax, N. C., across Roanoke River between Hills Ferry and the ferry near the town of Halifax, in said county and State, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT PUBLIC-SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably with amendments Senate resolution 310, providing for an investigation of the public-school system of the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the resolution had better first be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 310) submitted by Mr. HARRISON on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the public-school system of the District of Columbia.

That said committee shall investigate, specifically, the manner of appointing the superintendent, principals, teachers, and other employees of the public schools of the District; the personnel, adequacy, and pay of teachers and other employees of the public schools of the District; the accommodation, heating, lighting, ventilation, and sewerage of the public-school buildings of the District; the number of holidays, courses of study, and discipline adopted by the teachers and management of the public schools of the District; and such other policies adopted by the management of the public-school system of the District as, in the discretion of the committee, is advisable to investigate.

That the committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer or stenographers to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation.

That said committee may sit during the sessions of the Senate, and it shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the earliest date possible.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate were, on page 2, line 5, after the word "investigation," to insert "at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page"; in line 6, after the word "sessions," to insert "or recesses"; and at the end of the resolution to add "All expenses in connection herewith to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman why it is necessary to have a special committee appointed? Why can not the Committee on the District of Columbia conduct this investigation? What is the use in providing for additional expense?

Mr. CALDER. The Committee on the District of Columbia has among its membership Senators who are engaged on work in committees that will prevent their giving the time necessary to carry on this investigation, and the chairman of the committee believes that a select committee should be appointed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that the reason why I did not provide in the resolution that this investigation should be made by the District of Columbia Committee was because I talked to the chairman of that committee, and he really preferred to have a select committee appointed. There are phases of this investigation upon which men who have served upon the Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having in charge the District of Columbia appropriation bill might be better posted, and therefore they might be more suitable to serve on this committee than many of those who are on the District of Columbia Committee. I think the greater number of the Senators to be appointed should be selected from the District of Columbia Committee and from the Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of District of Columbia affairs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, if the chairman of the District Committee would prefer to have a special committee appointed, I have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. The chairman so expressed himself when this matter was up the other day, and also expressed the hope that the resolution might be adopted.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether the resolution covers an investigation of the compensation received by the school-teachers of the District of Columbia for their services?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely. I may say that its provisions are broad enough to cover any phase of the public-school system of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by inserting, after the semicolon in line 14, on page 1, and after the word "District," the following:

The policy and influence of the teachers' unions in the conduct and management of the schools, and the extent to which said unions control teachers, members of the school board, selection of teachers, and other matters pertaining to the schools.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the word "District," in lines 13 and 14, and after the semicolon, the following:

The policy and influence of the teachers' unions in the conduct and management of the schools, and the extent to which said unions control teachers, members of the school board, the selection of teachers, and other matters pertaining to the schools.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana to explain what the teachers' unions are. What are they doing? They do not seem to be able to increase the teachers' salaries very much, if they have any influence.

Mr. MYERS. I want to find out what they are doing by this amendment. That is the object of the amendment—to find out what they are doing.

Mr. KENYON. Is there such an institution?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, yes. Nearly all of the teachers of the District belong to teachers' unions, and those unions, I understand, are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. KENYON. It does not seem to increase their salaries very much.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know what they are doing. I want to find out. If I knew, I would not be offering the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that the resolution is broad enough without that amendment to authorize an investigation of that phase of the situation, if the committee, in its discretion, desires to investigate it.

Mr. MYERS. I want to direct the committee to investigate it and not leave it a matter of discretion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the public-school system of the District of Columbia.

That said committee shall investigate, specifically, the manner of appointing the superintendent, principals, teachers, and other employees of the public schools of the District; the personnel, adequacy, and pay of teachers and other employees of the public schools of the District; the accommodation, heating, lighting, ventilation, and sewerage of the public-school buildings of the District; the number of holidays, courses of study, and discipline adopted by the teachers and management of the public schools of the District; the policy and influence of the teachers' unions in the conduct and management of the schools, and the extent to which said unions control teachers, members of the school board, selection of teachers, and other matters pertaining to the schools; and such other policies adopted by the management of the public-school system of the District as, in the discretion of the committee, is advisable to investigate.

That the committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer or stenographers to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page.

That said committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and it shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the earliest date possible. All expenses in connection herewith to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 3955) for the relief of certain estates; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3956) to facilitate commerce by prescribing overtime rates to be paid by transportation lines for inspection of arriving passengers and crews; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3957) to amend the proviso of paragraph 10 of section 9 of the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act as amended; and

A bill (S. 3958) to amend section 14 of the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 3959) to incorporate the National Board of Medical Examiners of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 3960) for the relief of Ellen Clifford; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3961) granting an increase of pension to W. H. Coulter (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3962) granting an increase of pension to Lucius C. Runion (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3963) granting an increase of pension to O. A. Rose (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3964) granting a pension to Alois Menzel (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of House bill 10453; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

JOINT COMMISSION ON RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I introduce the joint resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and then I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed, upon request of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, to assume custody of the records and reports of the said joint commission, which was created by section 9 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1919, and to maintain and keep current such records pending the consideration by Congress of the final report and recommendations submitted to it by the said joint commission, under the system established by said joint commission for reporting and recording changes in the personnel and the number and nature of positions in the municipal government, the various executive departments, and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia, except the navy yard and the Postal Service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand, this is a joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think we should act upon a joint resolution on its presentation. I think it ought to be referred to the committee. I know that is the usual rule in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That unquestionably is the general rule, but the matter is of such a nature that I thought it could be easily understood by the Senate, and that there would be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution, as it is important that it shall be passed promptly, so it can go to the House and be acted upon before the 12th of March next.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know of no objection to this joint resolution. I do not believe that joint resolutions should be passed without reference to committees; and for that reason I feel constrained to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well. If the Senator is of that mind, of course, the joint resolution will have to take the proper course.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that its importance ought to appeal to the committee to act promptly in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what committee does the Senator from New Mexico desire the joint resolution to be referred?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for its reference to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. I suppose it should go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to establish and maintain a forest experiment station in the State of Florida, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

THE RECLAMATION SERVICE.

Mr. KING. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 313) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to report to the Senate the total number of persons employed in the Interior Department, including the official personnel of said department; the total number of persons employed in the Reclamation Service, classified to show the number of engineers, technical experts, lawyers, supervisors, clerks, and other classes of employees, with a statement of the functions and duties of each class; the number of persons employed in the Reclamation Service in the District of Columbia, the number of persons in such service employed outside the District of Columbia; the number of persons employed at the various separate reclamation projects; the number of such projects, with specification as to the annual expenditure for each project, and the total cost of each project to date; the total expenditures on account of the Reclamation Service to this date with separate statement as to total expenditures for engineering, administration, operations, maintenance, office, and overhead charges, and all other expenditures except those made for actual construction, and a separate statement of expenditures made for actual construction; the number of persons employed by the Reclamation Service separately for each year for the 10 years last past; the number of persons in the other bureaus and divisions of the Interior Department who are employed or are engaged in connection with any part of the work of the Reclamation Service and the annual cost of such service, separately each for the last 10 years; total revenues received to date by the service from contract for the sale of land and water; and the total amount of outstanding, uncollected contract obligations due the Reclamation Service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks for the immediate consideration of the resolution just read.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I submit the following notice of a proposed amendment to the rules, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the notice.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McLEAN. I give notice of the following amendment to the Standing Rules of the Senate by adding thereto a new paragraph, as follows:

"6. Every bill and joint resolution which seeks to amend an existing law shall, when offered, definitely state the changes and additions proposed and the law as it will read when amended."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The notice will lie over for one day under the rule.

SURPLUS MOTOR-PROPELLED VEHICLES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3037) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer, free of charge, certain surplus motor-propelled vehicles and motor equipment to the Department of Agriculture, Post Office Department, Navy Department, and the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service, and certain other surplus property to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the act (S. 3722) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 6863.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from New York advise the Senate just what changes were made?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Senate made four amendments to the House bill. The House conferees receded from their disagreeing vote on three of those amendments. On the fourth amendment, which provides for the appropriation of $5,000 to lay out the city in zones, the conferees recommend that the House recede from its disagreement with an amendment which provides that not more than $5,000 shall be spent for that purpose. So the only difference between us was that one amendment, and in that the House conferees substantially agreed to the Senate amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have just gotten a copy of the report, and it states that the House recedes on amendment numbered 1 and agrees to the same with an amendment:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"There is hereby authorized for the expenses of said commission, including the employment of expert services and all incidental and contingent expenses, a sum not to exceed $5,000, payable one half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that the motion is not debatable at this time. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"There is hereby authorized for the expenses of said commission, including the employment of expert services and all incidental and contingent expenses, a sum not to exceed $5,000, payable one half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CARL E. MAPES,
B. K. FOCHT,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

HON. JOHN D. RYAN.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have a copy of the majority and minority reports recently made by a select committee of the House of Representatives on expenditures in the War Department. I have given these documents some perusal, such as my time permitted. The majority report seeks by insinuation and innuendo to make some charges against or to cast some reflections upon Hon. John D. Ryan, a distinguished and highly esteemed citizen of Montana, late Assistant Secretary of War. It makes no direct charges of wrongdoing and does not ask that any action be taken as a result of its conclusions. It deals only in vague insinuations.

I do not often refer to political matters or make political comment in this body. I believe I talk politics as little as anyone in the Senate. I said more yesterday along that line than I had said for a long time. But I have examined these reports to some extent, and I am of the opinion that the insinuations against Mr. Ryan made by the majority of the committee are entirely based upon and made from political prejudice and animosity and for political purposes—unworthy motives. I find nothing in the report upon which to condemn Mr. Ryan, no proof or substantiation of any insinuation of wrongdoing. The Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, has announced publicly on a number of occasions that he is thoroughly familiar with all the actions of Mr. Ryan while he was Assistant Secretary of War and also while he was chief of aircraft production for the Army during the late Great War, and has said that there is no blame or censure to be cast upon Mr. Ryan; that he was actuated only by the best of motives and rendered splendid service to his country. I believe the people who know the Secretary of War will credit him with sincerity and knowledge whereof he speaks and will be loath to doubt what he says on the subject or to question the authenticity of his statements.

I know that people who know Mr. Ryan will not believe that he was guilty of any wrongdoing or any wrong intent in any of the transactions referred to in the majority committee report, in which he is sought to be condemned by innuendo. Mr. Ryan is very vigorously defended by the minority report of the committee, which severely condemns the majority report for its loose and baseless charges. I wish to say that Mr. Ryan is a gentleman of the highest standing and well-known probity and established integrity. He rendered conspicuous service to his country in the time of its need, did so unselfishly and patriotically. His friends are legion and their faith in him is not shaken. It will take more than insinuations in a partisan report to shake it.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield to me for a moment——

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire simply to make a statement. I understood yesterday that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCH-

COCK] was not to be here to-day, and I assented, therefore, to the Senator from South Dakota bringing up his bill. I also, so far as I have power, gave assent to taking up the dyestuffs bill to-morrow, because that is an emergency measure which ought to pass.

I dislike extremely to have any delay in regard to the treaty. I hope that the bill for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service will be disposed of to-day in some way, and the dyestuffs bill will have to be disposed of to-morrow.

I now give notice that I shall call up the treaty on Thursday, and I shall ask the Senate to continue to consider it until a final disposition is made of it. I shall have to yield for conference reports, of course, but otherwise I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the treaty until some disposition is made of it.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1699, the civil-service retirement bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, before proceeding with the amendments which were under discussion when the bill was last being considered, I want to call attention to one or two objections made to the bill.

As Senators will recall, the minimum period of service fixed by the bill before an employee can share in its benefits is 15 years. That period of 15 years may be made up of separate periods of service which in the aggregate will amount to 15 years, as, for example, an employee may have been in the service for a period of 5 years, and then after separation from the service for a period may be reinstated in the service, and the period of first service may be added to the second period of service in order to make up the full period of 15 years, at which time he would be entitled to an annuity under the terms of the act.

It was suggested, I think, by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in his discussion of the bill, that that would permit an employee to withdraw his funds after a period of service less than 15 years with 4 per cent interest, and immediately then enter the service again, add the first period of service to a second period of service, thus making up the full 15-year period.

But, Mr. President, section 10 of the bill is a complete answer to the objection made by the Senator from Ohio. An employee can not reenter the service after being separated therefrom and share in the benefits of the bill unless he deposits an amount with interest equal to that which he would have drawn out on his separation from the service. I read section 10 of the bill, as follows:

That upon the transfer of any employee from an unclassified to a classified status, or upon the reinstatement of a former employee, credit for past service rendered subsequent to the date this act shall take effect, or for any part thereof, shall be granted only upon deposit with the Treasurer of the United States of the amount of such deductions with interest as provided in this act as would have been made for the periods of actual service, or part thereof, for which credit is to be given, but such interest shall not be computed for periods of separation from the service.

So, Mr. President, the employee can not take advantage of the Government at all, but he must, on being reinstated in the service, deposit with the Treasurer of the United States the amount withdrawn, with interest as provided in the act.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I did make the statement to which the Senator refers, and at the same time I made the suggestion that if I was right in that behalf I felt sure the Senator would want to correct it. At the time my attention had not been specially called to this section. I think that it does meet the suggestion that I made the other day.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. A gentleman called my attention a day or two ago to the fact that there are a great many employees in the service who had retired a number of times from the service and then come back into the service. He stated that this constant separation from the service and return to the service interfered with efficiency and was rather disturbing, if not demoralizing, to the service itself.

Does the Senator think that it is a good thing to have men and women separating themselves from the service, coming back into the service, separating and returning without any impediment to their return, and does the Senator think that the bill which is now before us, without penalizing such separations and returns, will not tend to aggravate the evil, if it is an evil, to which my attention was called?

Mr. STERLING. I think not. I think rather than aggravating the evil, the provisions of the bill will tend to mitigate the very evil of which the Senator complains. I am not saying that there is not some foundation for the complaint. I do not know how we might prevent separation from the service and then reinstatement in the service again if the employee is qualified to fill the particular position; but in this case and under the bill if he does reenter the service, having made contributions and having withdrawn those contributions when he separated from the service, he must pay back, with interest, into the Treasury of the United States all that he received when the contributions were returned to him. So it seems to me that this would rather be a deterrent of separation from the service.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that the Senator is right. I have not given the matter sufficient consideration to affirm that the Senator's position is not accurate, but it seems to me that the theory of the civil service is that men and women shall be employed by the Government because of their abilities and their capabilities and that they shall continue in the service because it makes for efficiency. Obviously, it makes for inefficiency in the Government service, if the civil-service theory is predicated upon any facts at all, to have constant separations from the service, with recurring entrance into the service. It does seem to me that if the law does not penalize in some legitimate and proper way these constant separations from the service it ought to be done. It seems to me that in the bill there ought to be some encouragement for men and women to persist in the service if the civil service is right, rather than separate and go out of the service and then return.

I suggest to the Senator that perhaps an amendment might be a good thing to encourage men and women not to separate themselves from the service. Of course, I have not very much confidence, I may say, in the civil service. I think the way it has been administered has not commended itself to a great many people in the United States.

Mr. STERLING. I think section 10 in itself encourages the remaining of the employee in the service. If, when he enters the service again after separation from it, he must before getting credit for his previous term of service put up, with interest, all that he withdrew, certainly that is some encouragement for him to remain in the service.

Mr. KING. This is what I have in mind, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Would it not be a good thing to have some provision that separation for a definite period—say five years or more—would be treated as a complete severance from the service, and if they entered again they must come in de novo?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that it might be as a general proposition, but I do not believe we can add an amendment to the bill incorporating that feature. I am not denying that as a general proposition that might be a good idea, but I think we would better attempt to reach it by some other bill than this one.

Mr. KING. For information will the Senator advise me whether or not persons returning to the service after having been separated are now placed in any advantageous position over those who may have taken the civil-service examination and are upon the eligible list?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Referring again to the matter which has been in controversy between the Senator from South Dakota and myself, the first part of section 10 bears the construction which the Senator has placed upon it and which I conceded to be right. And since making that statement I have read the proviso beginning with line 16. I read:

Provided, That failure to make such deposit—

That is, after he has been in the service, gone out, and reentered—

Provided, That failure to make such deposit shall not deprive the employee of credit for any past service rendered prior to the date this act shall become operative and to which he or she would otherwise be entitled.

What is the construction which the Senator places upon that language?

Mr. STERLING. The construction is that if an employee having rendered service prior to the date the act shall become operative, then no deposit shall be required on account of such prior service. The person who had rendered service prior to the date the act becomes operative would be entitled, of course, to count up any number of periods of prior service which would make the 15-year period or the minimum under which he could share in the benefits of the act.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me see if I understand the Senator correctly. Assume that an employee had been in the service for 10 years. After that he has gone out of the service, remains out of it for 10 years, and reenters the service, let us say, to-day. Then under the provisions of the bill he would only have to contribute for a period of 5 years in order to be entitled to the same pension that he would have been entitled to if he had been in the service for 15 consecutive years.

Mr. STERLING. I understand that. He could not have contributed anything to the fund during the 10 years and he could not withdraw anything from the fund for those 10 years.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me give another example. Assume, for the sake of the argument, that he had been in the service for 14 years and then left the service because he felt he could better his condition, and had been out of the service for 10 years and then reenters the service as of to-day. By being in the service for one year from this date forward, he would have to pay his assessment for only the one year, and he would then be entitled to his annuity from this time on.

Mr. STERLING. He would not be entitled to his annuity until his retirement from the service.

Mr. POMERENE. But he is entitled to retire after 15 years' service.

Mr. STERLING. He is entitled to retire, but not to get an annuity. He is entitled to retire and withdraw the contributions he has made. What contribution would he withdraw under the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I understand that he must have the right of at his age—in the one class 60 years, another 62, and another 65. Assuming that those conditions are met, then he would have to reenter the service; he would be in the service for one year, and he would then be entitled to the annuity.

Mr. STERLING. He might be entitled to the annuity. Let me say to the Senator that that will apply in any case so far as the annuity is concerned. A man having reached the retirement age will be entitled to the annuity if he has served 15 years.

Mr. POMERENE. If he has been of real service to the Government and he has seen fit for reasons best known to himself—it may be and no doubt would be for his personal financial advantage—to separate himself from the service and then seeks to get back in the service and then only serves one year and is entitled to this annuity, it does seem to me that it is not quite fair to the public.

Mr. STERLING. I regard this proviso, to which the Senator from Ohio calls my attention, as a most reasonable provision. Of course, failure to make deposits for service rendered prior to the time the act becomes operative should not deprive the employee of the benefit of credit for past service rendered.

In the case supposed by the Senator from Ohio, if he has served 14 years prior to the date the act becomes operative, separates himself from the service and then enters again—by the way, it is not simply at his will alone that he reenters, but it must be the head of the department or the bureau or the division who gives consent to his reentrance into the service—and if he serves but one year after reentering the service after the act becomes operative and then withdraws, what does he withdraw? He withdraws the contributions for one year, which if his salary is $1,200 will at 2½ per cent be $30, with interest thereon from the time the contribution was made. So there is no injustice whatever in the proviso to section 10.

Mr. President, in passing I desire to call attention to another objection made by the opposition to the bill. I think both the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] referred to it. It was an objection, as I understand, made by Mr. Herbert D. Brown, chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, and I will come to that just a little later, but the objection is this, namely, that the higher salaried men are required under the provisions of the bill in paying 2½ per cent of their salaries to pay an unfair and unjust proportion of the amount that goes to make up that which is paid to the annuitants under the bill.

I do not think the objection is tenable for a moment. In the first place, the higher salaried employees are making no complaint; I have heard of none outside of Mr. Brown himself. They are willing, for the good of this cause and in order that a civil-service retirement system may be inaugurated, to contribute, because of their higher salaries, more in proportion than those receiving lower salaries.

In the second place, they are better able to contribute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not care to interrupt the Senator unless it is entirely with his permission.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I, of course, realize that the Senator is in the midst of an argument and perhaps I ought not to interrupt him; and if it is at all objectionable, I shall not insist upon doing so.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly, I yield to the Senator. Really, I prefer that we may discuss these matters as we go along, I will say to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota is very generous.

I desire to say I have not in any way attempted to canvass the employees who are receiving the larger salaries, but I have been advised that they do object to this plan. When the subject was previously before the Senate, I made the challenge that the committee did not speak for the higher salaried employees, and that they had presented no tangible evidence bearing upon the subject. That was the effect of my statement. I have not heard any answer to that challenge save and except that those who are interested in the advocacy of the bill have made the statement that the higher salaried employees are satisfied with it, that they want to contribute, and so forth. Now, if the Senator from South Dakoa has any evidence upon the subject other than the naked statement of the committee, I should be glad to have it presented.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this is some, at least, of the evidence that I have, namely, that members of the committee of about 35 men who have for years had this matter under consideration for the civil-service employees, not only in the District of Columbia, but in behalf of the civil-service employees of the Government throughout the country, comprise men who are receiving the higher salaries, salaries above $1,200, salaries of $1,800, salaries of $2,000, some of them salaries of $2,500, and I think one, at least, is receiving $3,000. They make no complaint as to this plan; and they profess to speak for the civil-service employees the country over.

Mr. President, I wish also to say that I have presented here petitions of civil-service employees running into the thousands, petitions containing as many as 3,000 signatures, and I am satisfied those petitions contain the names of many men who are receiving $2,000 a year, or more. There has been no complaint anywhere in regard to this plan. I have had letters—I have not them before me—from men who I knew were drawing high salaries, and they are enthusiastically in favor of the bill. As I was saying a while ago, the high-salaried man can afford this contribution better than can the man receiving from $1,000 to $1,200 a year.

In the third place, Mr. President, whenever the higher salaried man separates himself from the service he draws out all that he has contributed, together with interest at 4 per cent per annum compounded. So it has proven a fairly good investment for the larger amount he has contributed.

Again, in case the high-salaried man becomes an annuitant and dies before an annuity is paid to him equal to the amount of the contribution which he has made, with interest, his estate or his legal representatives receive back the difference between the amount of the annuity paid and the contributions he has made. In case he is dismissed from the service the same rule prevails, and he receives his larger contributions with interest. So in these respects, as a matter of investment of his larger amounts in the way of contributions, he is benefited and suffers no loss at all. That is an inducement for him to support the proposition that they shall all stand on an equality so far as contributions are concerned.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call attention to Mr. Brown's statement in regard to the cost of the system provided for in the pending bill. I am going to put that in contrast with the statement taken from the report of the committee, in which we give the figures of Mr. Beach as to the surplus each year to the Government. According to Mr. Brown, the cost to begin with, and before a year has elapsed, will be $4,585,000; the cost the first year will be $5,026,000. Under a table prepared with some care undoubtedly, but with the intention of having the Senate believe that a great burden will be put upon the Government from the outstart, these figures have been prepared by Mr. Brown.

Now, what are the facts? Under the plan proposed by the bill the surplus the first year to the Government—and that surplus will be in the United States Treasury or in the retirement fund—will be $4,356,500. Do Senators understand how that surplus is reached? It is reached in this way: The contributions of 300,000 employees drawing an average salary of $1,138 are taken and they amount to $8,535,000. Bear in mind that the contributions from the salaries now paid would amount to more than that; I think they would amount easily to $9,000,000. Mr. McCoy has estimated the contributions to be about $9,000,000. Take from the contributions the sum paid out in annuities and the sum paid out in refunds to those who withdraw or separate themselves from the service and there is left a surplus, and, as I have stated, the surplus the first year will be $4,356,500. Mr. Brown then estimates the cost for the second year at $5,548,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. So that there may be no misunderstanding between us as to the facts, of course the money which is used to pay the annuitants, and so forth, is taken out of the contributions which are made by all of the employees?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and I am coming to that feature of the bill in a moment, if the Senator will bear with me.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. For the second year the cost, according to the Brown statement, will be $5,548,000; but the surplus remaining after paying annuities and after paying refunds to those who have separated themselves from the service will be $7,828,500. There will be that surplus in the hands of the Government or in the retirement fund.

For the third year, according to Mr. Brown's statement, the cost to the Government will be $6,193,000; but the surplus to the Government, after deducting from the contributions of the employees the annuities and refunds, will be $10,416,000.

For the fourth year Mr. Brown makes the cost to the Government $6,843,000; but the surplus, arrived at in the way I have already mentioned—and I will not repeat it in each instance—will be $12,119,000.

For the fifth year the cost, according to Mr. Brown, will be $7,553,000, but the surplus will be $12,937,500.

For the sixth year the cost, according to Mr. Brown, will be $8,315,000, but the surplus from which to draw will be $12,757,500.

For the seventh year the cost to the Government, according to Mr. Brown, will be $9,127,000, but the surplus—the surplus diminishes from this point on because of the increasing number of annuities—will be $11,933,000.

Again, for the eighth year the cost, according to the Brown statement, will be $9,933,000; but the surplus will exceed that amount, being $10,644,000.

For the ninth year, $10,820,000 will be the cost, according to Mr. Brown, but the surplus will be $8,710,500.

For the tenth year the cost, according to Mr. Brown, will be $11,707,000, but the surplus will be $6,192,500.

Now, let us go on a couple of years beyond that point. Remember that the contributions under this table, prepared by Mr. Beach, are on a basis of 300,000 employees, drawing an average salary of $1,138. Assuming there will be for the eleventh year 14,000 annuitants—and that is an increase of 500 in the number of annuitants over the number as fixed for the tenth year—14,000 multiplied by $620, the supposed average annuity, will make the amount of the annuities $8,680,000.

Now, let us assume that there are refunds to 20,000 employees who separate themselves from the service, although, according to the estimate of the Senator from Ohio the other day, as furnished him, I understand, by Mr. Brown, that estimate is too high. The claim made by him is that the number of those separating themselves from the service at that time after this law goes into effect will not amount to 20,000; but if that be true, so much the better for the plan we propose. There will be fewer withdrawals. There will not be so many to whom refunds should be made, and the fund will be larger and the surplus will be greater if that is the case. Assuming refunds to 20,000 amounting to $2,745,000, we have $11,425,000. Then deduct from that the annuities and refunds and we still have in the eleventh year a surplus of $3,302,500.

Take the twelfth year, add your surplus and add your contributions from employees during that year, and you have $11,837,500. This time, instead of 14,000 annuitants, take 14,500, increase the number of annuitants by 500 for the twelfth year, and you have $8,990,000. Take the refunds and add them and you have a total in annuities and refunds of $11,735,000. Subtract your $11,735,000 from $11,837,500, the amount of the contributions and the surplus put together, and you have a balance of $102,500.

You will see, Mr. President, that we are in the twelfth year from the time this act goes into effect, and there is still a surplus of $102,500. From then on for some years the Government will have to contribute to make up the annuities that are required, and will contribute until for a period the proportion will be about five-eighths on the part of the Government and three-eighths upon the part of the employees getting the annuities for which the bill provides.

There is no use of trying to camouflage here by holding up to view the tremendous cost of this experiment under the provisions of this bill.

Now, coming to the point alluded to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] a moment ago. His view is that these funds are put apart as they are contributed, and they are a sacred fund to be kept, each, as it were, by itself, for the employee who contributed it, in order that he may receive it back in the way of an annuity. But, Mr. President, what is there sacred about this? Is it the particular money that he contributes? That is not the sacred and inviolable thing. It is the obligation of the Government as provided for in this bill. The Government is obliged to pay a maximum annuity of $720 per annum to the man who has been 30 or more years in the service, and who had an average basic salary for the 10 years before he retired of $1,200 a year.

I call attention to the provisions of the bill in regard to the fund to be created by these contributions. I read from section 8:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the said deductions to be withheld from all specific appropriation for the particular salaries or compensation from which the deductions are made and from all allotments out of lump-sum appropriations for payments of such salaries or compensation for each fiscal year, and said sums shall be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of a special fund to be known as "the civil-service retirement and disability fund," and said fund is hereby appropriated for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as provided in this act.

The act itself makes the appropriation of all contributions made for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as provided in the act.

Now:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to invest from time to time, in interest-bearing securities of the United States, such portions of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" hereby created as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as herein provided, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 11 of this act.

The act itself is in complete harmony with the table that I have just read and a part of which was prepared by Mr. Beach; so the sacred thing about it is the obligation of the Government to pay these annuities provided for in the bill. All that is not necessary for payment of annuities and refunds, under the terms of the act itself, is to be invested in these interest-bearing securities.

Now, Mr. President, a little further in regard to the cost; and I refer again, as I have had occasion to refer before in this discussion, to the statement of Mr. McCoy. I have made some figures myself from Mr. McCoy's figures. I have made some averages. The attempt has been made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to show that the employees apparently will pay but a very small percentage of the annuities which are paid to them upon retirement. As I said before, the Government will never pay more than five-eighths, and I think it is a most fair assumption—not absolutely proven, I will grant, but one of the most fair inferences—that in the course of 20 or 25 years it will be a fifty-fifty proposition between the employees and the Government of the United States. The question, then, comes back to whether the Senate of the United States is in favor of a joint contributory system or whether we shall have a system wholly contributory on the part of the employees, requiring the employees, as they would be required under the provisions of the so-called Pomerene bill, to pay, according to the age of entrance, all the way from 3 to 8 per cent of their salaries, the man entering the service at the end of 20 years paying about 3 per cent of his salary, the man who enters at 40 paying about 8 per cent, and the ages between 20 and 40 varying all the way from 3 to 8 per cent.

Take the salary of $1,200 now, Mr. President. With times as they are and the cost of living as it is, what does it mean to the employee, even if he be a single man? But, more, what does it mean to him as the head of a family who is required to pay practically $100 a year out of his salary of $1,200?

Mr. President, we must get away from the idea of the wholly contributory plan. It is obsolete to-day, and all countries considering a retirement system at all are considering it from the standpoint of cooperation and about equal contributions between the Government and its civil-service employees.

But now I refer again, in order that we may know a little bit more about the cost to the Government, to Mr. McCoy's tables. I have had occasion heretofore to refer to who Mr. McCoy is. He is the trusted Government actuary, having been in the Treasury Department of the Government for a great many years, the actuary upon whom the Senator from Ohio has relied; upon whom the Senator from Utah, as a member of the Finance Committee, especially has relied for his statistics and for his data furnished on revenue bills and tariff bills before the Senate.

I briefly called attention to this table of Mr. McCoy's the other day, but I am fully resolved in the consideration of this bill that the Senate shall know the facts from which just conclusions may be derived. In this table Mr. McCoy considers how much will be contributed by the Government and the employee, respectively, under different salaries, and after having served a certain specified number of years. He takes a $1,200 salary, he takes a $1,800 salary, he takes a $2,000 salary, and he takes a $2,500 salary.

What will be the contribution of the Government and what will be the contribution of the employee, first of the man who has served 44 years? Mr. President, there are hundreds and hundreds of them in the civil service here in the city of Washington who have served 44 years and more. Some, of course, have served 50 years, and I think some 60 years. They ought to have been retired long ago, and they ought to have had the benefits of a retirement system, too, long ago.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I know one man who has served for over 70 years.

Mr. STERLING. I do not doubt that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He has served for 74 or 75 years.

Mr. SMOOT. And he is a good man yet.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; he is a good man yet.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the man who enters at 21 years and goes out at 65 years will have served 44 years, and 65 is fixed in the bill as the retirement age for the general employee. If he has served 44 years on a $1,200 salary, the employee will have contributed $3,462.38 and the Government $2,179.19. This shows, rather, what a 2½ per cent deduction from the salary will amount to when the age of 65 is reached, money at 4 per cent reinvested annually; also the amount needed to be contributed by the Government to pay the indicated annuities. What is the per cent in the instance I have just cited of a man who drew a $1,200 salary and served 44 years? The Government will contribute 38 per cent of his annuity, and he will get an annuity of $720, of course the maximum annuity.

Take the man who has served 40 years. The Government will contribute a little less than the employee there. The employee will contribute $2,850.77 and the Government $2,790.80, or the Government will contribute 49 per cent; and the annuity paid will be an annuity of $720, the maximum annuity.

The man who has served 35 years will get the maximum annuity. He will contribute $2,209.77 and the Government $3,432.61, or 61 per cent will be contributed by the Government under those conditions.

Take the man who has served 27 years. He will get a maximum annuity of $648, because he does not come within the class, having served only 27 years, who can under the provisions of this bill get an annuity of over $648. The Government in that case will contribute 72 per cent, without reading the amounts of the several contributions of the Government and the employee.

Take the service of 24 years, with an annuity of $576, the greatest a man serving that long can get. The Government will contribute 74 per cent in that case. But if he serves 21 years, with an annuity of $504, the Government will contribute 75 per cent. If he serves 18 years the Government will contribute 77 per cent. If he serves 15 years the Government will contribute 79 per cent. That is all based, it is understood, I hope, on a salary of $1,200.

What is the average? Sixty-six and one-ninth per cent will be the average contribution made by the Government to the men getting $1,200 having served for those successive periods of time.

Take the $1,800 salary, Mr. President, and the contributions are, of course, greater. Eighteen hundred dollars at 2½ per cent will, of course, yield more than $1,200 at 2½ per cent. Take the same period of service, a service by the man getting $1,800 a year of 44 years. The Government pays 8 per cent in paying his annuity. He has contributed 92 per cent himself. In the case of the man who has served 40 years the Government pays 24 per cent in order to make his annuity, and without reading all these I go to the one who has served 15 years only, drawing an $1,800 salary, and in that case, having served but for that length of time, the Government pays 68 per cent. But what is the average for the periods, respectively, of 44 years' service, 40 years, 35 years, 30 years, 27 years, 24 years, 21 years, 18 years, and 15 years? The average is 49⅞ per cent for the Government, a little less than 50 per cent, to the men who are getting an $1,800 salary.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to one thing in this connection. Those opposed to the bill have talked again and again about what the railway postal clerks will contribute and what it will cost the Government in paying annuities to railway postal clerks. Why do they make that prominent? For the simple reason, Mr. President, that under the terms of the bill the railway postal clerk may retire at the age of 60 years, and so, having served the Government for correspondingly less time, the Government will have to contribute more in the payment of annuities. That is the foundation for that argument.

But, Mr. President, though they take this for the purpose of putting to the front and foremost the thing that would tend to create a prejudice against the bill, what are the facts? The facts are that the railway postal clerks to-day are getting an average salary of $1,793, and the boy who enters the Railway Postal Service at 20 years and serves until he is 60 years of age will have served 40 years, and the Government in his case will be paying but 24 per cent of the cost of his annuity. One further thing about it, Mr. President, is that railway postal clerks comprise a comparatively small number of employees, there being about 21,000 men engaged in the Railway Postal Service, while there are more than 300,000, I suppose nearly 400,000, to-day in the civil service of the Government. Figures have been made largely on a basis of 300,000 employees.

Take the $2,000 salary. The amounts contributed are given in figures, but I am going to read only the percentages, Mr. President. Where a man is getting $2,000 a year salary and serves 44 years he will have paid in in his contributions to the Government $129.06 more than the amount of his annuity. When he has served 40 years the Government will pay but 16 per cent. When he has served 35 years, the Government will pay 35 per cent. When he has served 30 years, the Government will pay 50 per cent. When he has served 15 years only, the Government will pay 64 per cent. But what is the average, Mr. President? Take the men with $2,000 salaries who have served for these various periods—44 years, 40 years, 35 years, 30 years, 27 years, 24 years, 21 years, 18 years, 15 years—and the average that the Government will have to pay is 44 per cent minus, less by 6 per cent than a fifty-fifty proposition for the employees getting $2,000.

Take the $2,500 salary, and, of course, there are several thousand who are getting that. The man who has served 44 years will have contributed $1,571.71 more than the annuity will amount to for the rest of his life. Take the man who has served 40 years, and he will have paid $297.52 more than the Government pays him in annuities.

Take the man who has served 35 years; the Government will pay 18 per cent of the man's annuity. In the case of the man who has served 30 years, it will pay 38 per cent. Where a man has served 27 years, it will pay 42 per cent; where he has served 15 years, it will pay 57 per cent. But what is the average, Mr. President? Thirty-three and six-ninths per cent is the proportion of the annuities that will be paid by the Government to those who are getting, according to this table, $2,500 a year.

Now, let us find the grand average of them all. Take the man who has served for these various periods for a salary of $1,200, the men who have served these various periods for a salary of $1,800, for a salary of $2,000, for a salary of $2,500, and what do we find is the grand average of the Government contributions? Adding them together, and dividing them by four, there being these four different salaries provided for, you have 48⅞ per cent as the amount which the Government will pay on that basis.

Mr. President, I wish there were present the men who are to determine this question and to decide it. I think if they knew the facts, knew these figures as presented by Mr. McCoy, the Government actuary, and could consider the figures themselves, and the just inferences derived from them, there could be no hesitation about the merits and the justice of this bill.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to another matter or two, and first to a statement made by Mr. McCoy himself. He says:

> As before stated, the 30,000 employees, the maximum that will probably ever be upon the retired list at any one time, are the only employees aided by the Government, the remaining employees—those dying and those leaving the service for any other cause—receiving upon such separation only the amount contributed by them together with the moderate interest thereon. For this reason it would seem futile to complicate the analysis of this scheme by attempting any analysis beyond that of the annuitants themselves.

Now note this statement:

While the plan will eventually cost the Government some $9,000,000 a year, it is very evident that the efficiency of the service will be increased at least 5 per cent.

Which is equivalent to over $18,000,000 a year.

We do not quite agree with Mr. McCoy that it is going to cost the Government eventually $9,000,000 a year, but, granting that it does, if $9,000,000 cost will save us $18,000,000 a year in efficiency I would like to know in the name of common sense if it is not a good investment and had not the Government better make the investment of $9,000,000 in order to have efficiency equivalent to $18,000,000 a year?

There has been some question about the age of retirement. Sixty-five years is the retirement age for general employees provided now or, if not in terms provided for, striven for by every country in the world except France, where the retirement age is 60 and 55, 55 for those who are said to be in active service—I do not just now recall the French term employed—and 60 years for those doing sedentary work, as it is called. England, while not fixing arbitrarily 65 years as the age of retirement, or not absolutely compelling retirement at that age, provides in her plan an inducement of the strongest character for the employees to retire at the age of 65 years. Indeed, it is a well-devised scheme for the purpose of enforcing retirement at that age.

During the discussion I thought I discovered an attempt on the part of Senators opposing the bill to convey the idea that 65 years for general employees was the age at which they must retire, but that is not true under the provisions of the bill. Under the provisions of the bill for the first 10 years after the bill goes into effect the employee, having reached the age of 65 years and still being efficient and being certified by the head of the department, bureau, or division as efficient, may be continued in the service for a period of 2 years longer, and at the expiration of that 2 years may be continued in the service, if he is still efficient and is so certified, for another period of 2 years, and so on up until, under the terms of the bill, 10 years have expired. After that period the employee can have no more than two extensions of time of two years each. So that after the act has been in effect for 10 years an employee may be continued in the service until he is 69 years of age. After a man has reached the age of 65—not every man, of course; it depends upon constitution, physical and mental equipment as well—he perhaps begins to show inefficiency. It is for cases of that kind that we fix the age at 65 years.

I refer to a book entitled "Retirement of Superannuated Civil Service Employees," 1912. I think this was prepared by Mr. Brown. He shows in a table on page 40 of the book the unearned per cent of salary paid according to the ages of the employees, and the unearned per cent, of course, measures the inefficiency of the employee.

At 65 years of age Mr. Brown, according to this table, fixes the unearned per cent at 6.54; at 66 years of age, 7.28; and at 69 years of age, 12.10 per cent of unearned salary. That is greater than Mr. McCoy fixes as the per cent of efficiency that will be saved, which he says is 5 per cent at least, making $18,000,000 saved by the Government every year.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry on the point under discussion?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether in this country or in other countries there has been any critical examination with a view to determining the rate of inefficiency as men progressively increase in age? Of course, Osler's theory was that as soon as a man reached 60 years, as I recall, he ought to be retired and chloroformed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He denied that.

Mr. KING. I remember that it was jocular, but it was given great currency.

The point I am trying to get at is whether there is anything upon which Mr. Brown or any other statistician based his calculation that there is a peak in a man's efficiency, and as he advances in age beyond that period of his life inefficiency manifests itself, and is there any basis for determining the increase in inefficiency with increase in years?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that I do not know upon what Mr. Brown bases the table, but it is a table giving the ages from the period at which I began on down to 85 years and over, and showing the per cent of unearned salary in each case.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, what does he mean by unearned salary?

Mr. STERLING. Unearned percentage. The table is entitled, "Table 7, showing the number of employees in the classified civil service in the District of Columbia, distributed according to age, the total salaries paid, total salaries earned, the per cent of salary earned, and per cent of salary not earned." So I think this is the very kind of a table that the Senator is inquiring about, although, as I said, I do not know Mr. Brown's basis for it.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if there had been the institution of any system in the departments of measuring the efficiency of employees, and, of course, in determining their efficiency necessarily they would determine their inefficiency. I was wondering if that system, if one were employed, examined the period of inefficiency and when the peak of efficiency was reached and when the decline began to manifest itself.

Mr. STERLING. I have seen no such table. This table, however, I think is very instructive along the line about which the Senator inquires.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How can we tell what weight to attach to the tables if we do not know the basis upon which they are formed or made?

Mr. STERLING. I have not read enough of this volume to be able quite to say that there is no statement made as to the basis on which the table is made, but I doubt very much from my reading whether there is. It may have been made by Mr. Herbert D. Brown upon practical tests and experience, taking men of different ages and following them in their work and noting what they did with the work assigned to them, and from that judging as to the percentage of salary earned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, he would have to follow pretty closely with reference to the work which they did and the efficiency they manifested in doing it. I think everybody knows that a man working along certain lines on a certain character of work becomes much more efficient in that line of work than anyone can become without the actual experience. So a man 65 years of age doing a certain kind of work would be far more efficient in doing that work at that age than he was when he started in it. I wonder how much of that he has taken into account in fixing these tables.

Mr. STERLING. Whether or not that is an element considered, I am unable to state from the context of the book.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The tables certainly would not be entitled to very much weight unless something of that kind is taken into account.

Mr. STERLING. I am making due allowance for it, I will say to the Senator. I am quite ready to compare that with the statement made by Mr. McCoy in which he said there would be 5 per cent of efficiency saved anyhow, making a saving to the Government of $18,000,000, whereas Mr. Brown puts the inefficiency, gauging it by the unearned salary of a man 65 years of age, at 6 per cent and a fraction.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not understand how he reaches the determination of the amount of unearned salary, because if a man by training, experience, and so forth, has more efficiency than he had when he started in he is earning more than his salary.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a suggestion right here?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Soon after the war, as the Senator will recall, in many of the business houses in the United States and in many of the manufacturing plants there was a shortage of labor because of the draft and the large number of young men who went to the war. The Senator will recall that a great many men who had retired and a great many who had been severed from their former positions because of their supposed advanced years were drafted back into service. I have seen many statements—I do not vouch for them—that those old men, so called, rendered more efficient service or as efficient service as the younger men, and many of their employers compared very favorably their work and said that they preferred the older men, because they were more stable than the younger men.

I make no comment upon the statements, but I have seen many of them, and I was wondering whether Mr. Brown, or whoever had made these tables, had taken into account the testimonials that have come from the sources to which I have just referred.

Mr. STERLING. Let us see. Take this in connection with the statement I made a while ago in regard to the situation in every other country in the world that has a retirement system, where 65 years of age is fixed generally as the retiring age. I stated that in Great Britain it was not absolutely compulsory, and yet the law itself makes it almost compulsory for the employee to retire at the age of 65; and in France the retiring age is 60 and 55, according to the nature of the employment. Then take the bill and realize the latitude it allows. For 10 years after the bill goes into effect when an employee reaches the retiring age his services may be extended indefinitely, and after that time his period of active service may be extended for two successive periods of two years each, making 69 years of age before the employee must retire from the Government service.

I think, on the whole, Mr. President, it can not but be for the benefit of the service. It is in the interest of efficiency. It is also in the interest of the morale of the service that on retirement at a proper age of the older employees there may be afforded to the younger men and women in the service opportunity for advancement.

I wish to call attention in connection with the subject of retirement age to a little testimony before the committee at its hearings. I quote from the testimony of Mr. Saltzgaber, the Commissioner of Pensions:

The CHAIRMAN. How many employees, all told, have you in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. SALTZGABER. The present roll, I think, is 878. I will tell you that exactly in a moment. [After consulting memorandum.] Yes, sir; it is 878 actually serving. I would say that of that number 29 employees are over 80 years of age. Eighty-two are between 75 and 79; 104 are 74 years of age; 88 are between 65 and 69. That makes a total of 303 who are over 65 years of age.

Senator BALL. What is the total number that you have employed?

Mr. SALTZGABER. Eight hundred and seventy-eight. That makes about 37 per cent that are really inefficient. Of that number I believe they have figured that exactly 295 would be eligible for pension.

Under the statute, 3890, section 4, we are required to report every year the number below "fair," and last year we reported 23. Really, there are more than that number.

Those 23 below "fair," Mr. President, were not dismissed from the service, nor are any of them dismissed from the service. Let their inefficiency be 5 per cent or 100 per cent, they are still retained in the service on the rolls and drawing, in so far as they are inefficient and unable to earn the salary, a pension, the pension being measured by the difference between salary earned and salary actually paid. The testimony continues:

The CHAIRMAN. That is, below "fair" in efficiency?

Mr. SALTZGABER. Yes, sir. But we were never required to do anything with them, no matter how poor and inefficient they may be, so that they are still continuing on the roll. There are 50, I would say, whose services are of no use, practically. We have them engaged in some light work, but the Government as an employer would say that their service was not of value.

Senator BALL. Are they accurate in the work they do?

Mr. SALTZGABER. The work we confide to their care, of course, we are very careful about. There are 150 of the total number that are of little use. That is to say, if this law was adopted they would be eligible to receive the benefits of it, and it would be in the interests of the Government to see that such provision was made, and instead of paying them the salaries they now receive they would be paid a much less amount under the retirement law.

That condition exists not in the Pension Bureau alone, Mr. President—although we may take it that, in the very nature of the case, there are more aged employees there in proportion to the whole number employed than there are in other bureaus or departments of the Govenment—but every department and every bureau has them. I could refer here to the testimony of the chief clerk of the Treasury Department showing how the work of that department is hindered by inefficient servants whom charity and human sympathy keep on the roll at full pay.

Mr. President, I do not think I have anything further to say, except this: I am satisfied, after the fullest study of this bill and the different measures that have been proposed, the wholly contributory plan and the partial or joint contributory plan, that this is the one plan that is just, and that the plan which would compel the employee to contribute all the way from 3 to 8 per cent of his salary, the Government contributing nothing, is in these times especially and under these conditions unjust.

Mr. President, this further is to be said: Great industries, employing thousands of employees, recognizing, as they do, the rights of the employees who have spent years in the service, themselves have adopted the cooperative or joint contributory plan, requiring a contribution on the part of the employees of about the same per cent—and I cite as one specific example the Grand Trunk Railway—as is required of the employees under the pending bill. So other countries are getting away from the wholly contributory plan on the part of the employees. Canada is now evolving a plan which it is contemplated will be a partially contributory plan, the Government contributing about half and the employees the remainder.

I suggest an amendment, Mr. President, which I intend to offer at the proper time, and which will put this system to a test. I have every confidence in it, and my confidence is expressed by the amendment which has been printed and which has been placed on the desk of every Senator. That amendment provides:

That the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to select three actuaries, one of whom shall be the Government actuary, to be known as the board of actuaries, whose duty it shall be to annually report upon the actual operations of this act, with authority to recommend to the Commissioner of Pensions such changes as in its judgment may be deemed necessary to maintain the system upon a sound financial basis. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to submit with his annual report to Congress the recommendation of the board of actuaries. It shall be the duty of the board of actuaries to make a valuation of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" at the end of the first year following the passage of this act and at intervals of every five years thereafter, or oftener if deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions. The compensation of the members of the board of actuaries, exclusive of the Government actuary, shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

That shows my desire that this matter should be tested to the limit. By this amendment, if adopted, any doubts or any fears or misgivings entertained on the part of any Senator should be dissipated. The Government and the public will be safeguarded by such an amendment.

Mr. President, since there is such urgent demand for a civil-service retirement system, since we are the only great country in all the world that makes no provision in the interest of the aged employees in the civil service of the Government, since it means such a saving in efficiency of $18,000,000 a year on an investment, according to the highest estimate, of $9,000,000, and that some time in the distant future—why not at once enact this bill into law?

Mr. President, I send to the desk a communication received yesterday from Mr. W. M. Thomas, of the Commission on Pensions of the State of New York. I ask that it may be read and incorporated in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
COMMISSION ON PENSIONS,
Albany, February 20, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to thank you for sending me a copy of your bill for the retirement of employees in the United States classified civil service, together with report of your committee and hearing held on the bill.

The bill which our commission is working on proceeds along the same general lines as your bill, but will provide for a larger percentage of contribution from the employees of the State and a consequent larger retirement allowance.

Yours, very truly,

W. M. THOMAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has proposed the amendment just referred to by him for adoption now?

Mr. STERLING. I have not; but I intend to offer it when the other amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a word or two. There is certainly a very great misunderstanding upon the part of many Senators with reference to this bill. It is very natural that some of them should have such a misunderstanding, because there have been offered here some very misleading figures. An expert mind for figures can prove almost anything, but the figures which have been submitted here in opposition to this bill are not accurate. If Senators will bear in mind merely a general statement, it will be easy enough to see that this bill is right. For at least 10 years, and probably for a considerably longer time, this bill, if enacted into law, will not cost the United States Government a cent. Under the terms of the bill, in a general way, the Government pays 2½ per cent and the employees pay 2½ per cent. Now, the fund that comes from the employees alone is sufficient to pay all of the retirement charges or pay for many years, and it will be at least 10 and probably nearly 15 years before the Government has to contribute anything at all. At the end of 25 or 30 years the figures will reach the point where the Government will pay one half of the retirement pay and the employees the other half.

That is what this bill means, and it means nothing else. Already enough has been said to show that it is a system that ought to be put into force, but certain Senators draw back because of the ultimate expense of the plan. Why, instead of its being ultimately an expense, it is going to be an absolute saving to the Government all along the line, and the figures are perfectly plain. There are 6,400 of these superannuated employees that are drawing not $610 on an average, but they are drawing three times that amount on an average. There are 6,400 of these employees that are now drawing full pay from the Government for substantially no work, and the Government will save by taking them off the pay rolls, by a very simple calculation, $1,200 each, and there are 6,400 of them, amounting to $7,680,000 a year. Now, that must be taken into consideration in any matter of efficiency of the Government, and I say that the bill ought to pass. There is no reason in the world why it should not pass. I am perfectly willing to agree to the amendment that has been offered here by the chairman of the committee, which guarantees that it will work out, and if not the Congress will change it, and it should be changed if it does not work out; but my faith in it is absolute.

Who is fighting the bill? The principal fight that is being made on the bill is by a Mr. Brown, the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency. Mr. Brown for quite a while was very strong for the half-and-half plan; but he was not able to undertake to give the figures himself, and he sent his assistant, Dr. Maddrill, to give the figures, and Dr. Maddrill furnished the figures and was very successful with them, and then, for some reason, Mr. Brown took the other side, and furnished all the figures that have been submitted here in opposition to this bill. He and the chairman of the Civil Service Reform League, of New York City, have been acting together in the matter, and those two gentlemen have furnished a series of figures in the attempt to defeat this bill. It is an unrighteous cause in which they are engaged. This bill, if enacted into law, will mean a saving of money to the Government. It will be furnishing a proper retirement system if we pass this bill. There is no civilized nation in the world except the United States to-day that is without one, and we ought not to be without one. It is unfair and unjust to the employees, it is unfair and unjust to the Government itself, to keep these old and decrepit men and women on the rolls. They ought not to be there, and, to my mind, to keep them there is enough to bring this body into disrepute among the people of the land.

A year and a half ago, or about a year and a half ago, this bill was before the Senate as its unfinished business for more than 40 days, as I remember, and a filibuster was carried on by distinguished Senators here against the bill, not for days but for months, and we have it repeated this session, and it is because, as I believe, they do not know anything about the bill. Instead of taking the figures of some man who is opposed to it, and who is fighting it for reasons that I do not know of, and apparently no one else knows why he is fighting it, if they will go and examine it themselves calmly, the very gentlemen on the floor who are fighting this bill will change their views about it. It is impossible for a man to make an honest, unbiased inquiry into it himself and not come to the conclusion that a bill along this plan is right.

Some say we ought to discharge these superannuated employees. Ask the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who was formerly the great head of the Treasury Department, whether they ought to be discharged. Ask Secretary Houston and any other head of a department whether they ought to be discharged. There is not a man who makes that argument who, if he were the head of a department, would be willing to discharge one of them; and if he did discharge him or her, it would be a matter of such inhumanity that it would be brought before this body at once. We know that they can not be discharged. After keeping them in the service of the Government all their lives, when they get old and decrepit, no humane man is going to discharge them and turn them out to graze, as if they were horses, in their old age. We have got to deal with facts as they are and not as we would like to have them; and so the retirement system has been found to be good, not only by all the civilized nations of the world, but by all the corporations in the country that are successful, and ordinarily the corporations pay the retirement pay entirely. We do not ask the Government to pay all the bill in this legislation. We simply ask the Government to pay half of it, and under the terms of this bill the Government will not have to pay out a cent for at least 12 years.

Mr. President, I think the bill ought to pass. This filibuster went on for two months in the last Congress, and it has been going on for about a month now. I will ask the chairman of the committee if it has not been before the Senate for about a month now? It has been before the Senate for several weeks, at any rate.

Mr. STERLING. About three weeks.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a filibuster going on here now over it, Senators riding and tying, so to speak, and filibustering against this bill. Why not let us come to a vote on it? There is nothing unusual or improper about voting upon a measure when everybody certainly wants to have it disposed of. We want to do other things besides having a retirement bill here all the time. I say we ought to come to a vote and let Senators vote their honest convictions, and if this bill is not right vote it down, and if it is right pass it. I think it is right and ought to be passed, and I beg the Senators who are opposing this bill to let it come to a vote, and let us see how Senators are going to vote on it.

But it has been charged that there is a lobby here fighting for the passage of the bill, and that men interested in it are undertaking to get it passed. They are doing a most laudable work, a most praiseworthy work, in seeking to have these superannuated colleagues of theirs given an opportunity to be retired when they are no longer able to perform the duties of their several offices, but I want to say that that lobby is not confined to those who are in favor of the bill. Mr. Brown, of the Bureau of Efficiency, has been a most assiduous lobbyist here, furnishing the figures almost day by day. Whenever this bill comes up we see him around the lobbies here undertaking to aid in this filibuster that is going on against the bill.

I do not propose to be charged with having influences brought to bear on Senators favoring this bill here unless all the facts are brought before the Senate and before the country. I think we ought to have a vote on this bill. It is a reflection upon this body to have it before it as the unfinished business continually.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	Kenyon	Phipps
Ball	Glass	Keyes	Pomerene
Brandegee	Gore	King	Ransdell
Capper	Gronna	Kirby	Reed
Chamberlain	Hale	Lodge	Sheppard
Colt	Harris	McKellar	Simmons
Culberson	Harrison	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Cummins	Henderson	Myers	Smoot
Dial	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sterling
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Trammell
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Wadsworth
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Kellogg	Page	Wolcott
France	Kendrick	Phelan

Mr. GRONNA. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent because of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who are in attendance at a meeting of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The Chair is advised that the pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the pending question was the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not present at the time and can only be guided by the record.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I can refresh the memory of the Senate. On February 13 there was pending a motion by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which related to a committee amendment, as I now recall, on page 2848 of the RECORD, in the course of a colloquy between the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and myself, I said:

> However, I am going to interpose at this moment a motion to recommit the bill, with all amendments which have been proposed, and the report of the committee itself, for further hearings, investigations, and report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the RECORD, therefore, the pending question is the motion to recommit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to take any more time of the Senate at this hour. I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall vote now upon the recommittal of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I did not understand just what was said a moment ago. What is the pending question? Is it the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] or is it the motion to recommit?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the record, the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah was the pending question; and during its pendency, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] moved to recommit, and the Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from Ohio must be first put.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota I was just stating that I did intend to continue my remarks in explanation of the bill; but as the motion of the Senator from Ohio is the pending question, I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall take a vote upon it now.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that I hope the motion of the Senator from Ohio to recommit the bill will not prevail. I have already spoken at length this morning or I would go more into detail. I do not want to repeat what I have already said on the merits of the bill, but if the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, I am satisfied that no very different result would be reached. The bill in its essential features as it is now before the Senate would be rereported by a majority of that committee. I trust that the bill may remain here in the Senate now until it is finally disposed of one way or the other.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I feel as if the statement just made by the Senator requires an answer; but I am not going into detail. I will simply say if the bill is recommitted to the committee there will be a bill reported out from the committee, in my opinion, and these unforeseen errors in the bill—and there are some very vital ones that have appeared and been shown during this discussion—will be eliminated. I am in favor of legislation for the retirement of civil-service employees. If the bill goes back to the committee, I say to the Senator from South Dakota that I am going to take time to attend the meetings of the committee and see if we can not get a bill that will be absolutely satisfactory. I hope the bill will be recommitted.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I know the dividing line between the view of the Senator from Utah and my view, and between the view of the Senator from Ohio and my view. The one is the wholly contributory plan; the other is the joint-contributory plan. The bill provides a joint-contributory plan, and a majority of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment will not report in favor of a bill providing that the employees of the Government shall contribute all that goes to make up the annuities.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken when he says that that is the position of the Senator from Ohio or of myself. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and the Senator from Utah have always believed in a contributory plan, not to have the employees pay it all. I have not heard a Senator take that position, and I am not going to take that position to-day, nor will I take that position. I did say, however, that rather than have the rates in the pending bill put into force, claiming that it was a half-and-half proposition, I would prefer that the Government should pay every cent of it; and, Mr. President, I would very much prefer that the Government should pay the whole of it and that the employees pay none. It would take a long time to go into the details of it, and I have promised that I would not do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. MCKELLAR asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when Mr. EDGE's name was called). I desire to announce also the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. EDGE], on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent, on account of the illness of his wife, and, as I have a pair with that Senator, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained by illness. He has a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. If present and permitted to vote, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent on account of illness, to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I note the absence from the Chamber of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], with whom I have a general pair. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HENDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I voted, not knowing that my pair, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], is not in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GAY. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe the absence of my pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but I understand he would vote as I did, and therefore I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]; and

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Ashurst	Gore	Myers	Simmons
Beckham	Harris	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harrison	Norris	Smoot
Culberson	Hitchcock	Overman	Trammell
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Underwood

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the proposed amendment of the committee, at the top of page 2, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] proposes an amendment in two parts, first to strike out the words "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer," and, second, to strike out of the same amendment the words "and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds," so that if amended it will read as follows:

> The provisions of this act shall include superintendents of United States national cemeteries and employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden, and so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in regard to the amendment to the amendment. After hearing the proponents of the bill and after learning the theory upon which the system of pensions rests, it seems to me that it was inconsistent with such theory to grant pensions to the employees of the Government included within my amendment. Such employees are not under the civil service, never have been, and may never come within its provisions.

The argument in favor of the bill, as I have understood the proponents of the measure, rests upon the proposition that the Government requires a class of permanent employees, persons who, by reason of special skill and qualifications, have been after examination accepted by the Government for service in its departments; that they are expected to give their lives to their duties, and therefore should feel assured that in their declining years they will not be turned adrift without means of support. The bill was drafted to pension the employees of the Government who come within the terms of the civil-service act. It is not intended by its authors to extend to employees who are not within the classified service. If I am correctly stating the theory of the bill, then it is clear that employees outside of the classified service would not be entitled to pensions.

If we pension those in the Botanic Gardens and the various employees in the Capitol, I see no reason why we should not pension the men who work in the arsenals of the Government and in the shipyards and in all the branches of Government service. I make the prediction that if we inaugurate a system of civil pensions for those within the classified service, within a short time we will be pensioning everybody who works for the Government of the United States, and, little by little, we will shorten the period of service entitling employees to pensions, as a result of which within a few years all employees of the Government who have been in its service for 10 or more years will be given a pensionable status.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. While there is some justice, I think, and it so seemed to me when the matter came before the committee, in including in the bill those employees above the grade of laborer in the Canal Zone, yet I am not disposed to insist upon that amendment. So far as that part of the Senator's amendment is concerned, I am willing to accept it and do so on behalf of the committee.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator indicate his position with respect to the latter part of the amendment? The Secretary stated it as if it were two amendments, at least I so understood him.

Mr. STERLING. I will consent also to the Senator's amendment so far as it relates to the employees under the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. KING. And the Botanic Garden?

Mr. STERLING. And the Botanic Garden.

Mr. KING. I do not want to be misunderstood. It may be that the employees in these branches of the Government ought to be pensioned, but if they are pensioned, then, obviously, others working for the Government and who are not within the classified list should be pensioned. If we are embarking upon a pension scheme for Government employees, let us be fair and just and extend it to all. At least it would seem to be the proper course, although there are reasons for limiting the pension system to the civil-service employees.

A strong argument, I think, could be made, if pensions are granted to any employees in favor of the proposition that they should be granted to all persons within the Government employment. Why should not employees in shipyards or arsenals or in the Capitol be pensioned just the same as those who work as clerks in departments here in Washington? Perhaps the first-named employees perform more onerous labor and under less favorable conditions.

But the bill before us is founded upon the theory of pensioning the classified employees of the Government only. This bill has been, I am told, worked out along certain lines and that the civil-service employees are entirely satisfied with it.

Of course, that ends the matter. We should not change the theory or reconstruct the bill, but put it through just as it comes to us. My motion is to preserve the harmony of the bill and preserve unimpaired the theory upon which it rests. But, frankly speaking, it would not be proper to impose into the bill numerous exceptions to the general policy which the bill announces. As stated, the classified employees are regarded as occupying a position entitling them to consideration which the nonclassified employees should not receive. This may be true. I express no settled view upon this point, although, as I have just said, there would seem to be reasons justifying the exclusion of the pensionable status to noncivil-service employees. If the pensions are to be granted to all employees of the Government, then the bill should be recast and material changes made in its framework. I am only endeavoring to maintain the theory of the drafters of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands it, the motion of the Senator from Utah is to strike from the amendment proposed by the committee the words:

American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer * * * and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden.

Is it the desire that the amendment to the amendment shall be divided?

Mr. STERLING. I did not understand that the amendment included the employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden. I thought it included two classes, the employees on the Panama Canal and the employees under the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, and those only.

Mr. KING. The amendment, if the Senator will pardon me, extended to employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator modify his amendment so as to let the bill include those two classes? While the employees of the Library of Congress are not under any executive department of the Government they are virtually civil-service employees, and I think they, as well as those employed at the Botanic Garden, ought to share in the benefits of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if it is in order, I ask for a division of the question so that we can vote separately. There is no doubt about the fact that the employees of the Congressional Library are under a civil-service rule. It is not the general civil-service rule, but it is a civil-service rule, and I do not think they ought to be included with the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Mississippi is granted. The question must necessarily be put in that form. The Chair will first submit the question relating to the words "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may, I accept that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. What does that reduce it to? Does the amendment now say that the common laborer is not to be included in the provisions of the bill and that he can get no pension? Is that the way the bill reads?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not the way the bill reads, but the way the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] reads.

Mr. ASHURST. That everybody working with a pick and shovel will not get a pension?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not mean that the bill reads that way now, but that the amendment of the Senator from Utah reads that way.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows he is wrong.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Utah says the Senator from Tennessee knows he is wrong. If we are giving a pension to the man who works with a pen, why not give a pension to the man who works with a pick and shovel and does the hard, rough work of the world? I want to know before I vote.

Mr. STERLING. Let me state for the benefit of the Senator from Arizona that the purpose of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is to strike out that part of the committee amendment relating to "all employees on the Panama Canal."

Mr. ASHURST. What employees does that mean?

Mr. STERLING. It would mean American employees on the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer.

Mr. ASHURST. He will not get a pension?

Mr. STERLING. No employees of the Panama Canal would come within the provisions of the bill if the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. The Senator will agree, will he not, that under the amendment which the bill carries "the common laborers" upon the Canal Zone do not get any pension?

Mr. STERLING. I contend that if I agree to the amendment of the Senator from Utah that question is immaterial.

Mr. KING. But the Senator declines to answer the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Tennessee stated inaccurately the proposition of the committee. The committee amendment—not my amendment, but the amendment of the committee, and the Senator from Tennessee, as I understand, is a member of the committee—provides:

The provisions of this act shall include American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer.

Mr. McKELLAR. When the words which the Senator wishes stricken out go out of the bill all of the laborers will be excluded.

Mr. KING. Oh, no. The Senator from Tennessee stated here, in answer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], that my amendment forbade pensions to the laborers, whereas the committee amendment intended to give a pension to the laborers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. That was clearly his intention.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that was the Senator's understanding, of course, I want to make that clear. That was not what I intended to say. The language will show what I meant, for it is in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. No one could misunderstand the imputation of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well——

Mr. KING. I have the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield, if he has such an understanding from what I said, I merely say that I did not intend that it should be that way, of course.

Mr. KING. Of course, I shall be compelled to accept the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, but I want to repeat the interrogation. The Senator from Arizona inquired of the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not the effect of the amendment was to exclude the laborers from pensions, but to give pensions to those above the grade of laborer, and the Senator from Tennessee felt called upon to reply and stated that that was the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. Clearly the answer of the Senator from Tennessee to the question propounded by the Senator from Arizona, although he did not intend, as I now understand him, to convey that idea, carried the thought that my amendment permitted a pension to the higher grade of employees in the Panama Canal Zone, but excluded from the pensionable status those who were within the grade of laborer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment of the committee has these words—I am reading from the original bill:

> The provisions of this act shall include—

There the committee has recommended the insertion of the following:

> American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer, superintendents of United States national cemeteries, and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds.

That means all employees, laborers of every kind. My statement was that the amendment of the Senator from Utah was to strike that language from the bill; that is my understanding of it. If the Senator did not so move, of course, then I am mistaken about it, but I understood that to be the motion of the Senator from Utah, which was accepted by the Senator from South Dakota.

It is true that the amendment does not affect employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer; but so far as the employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds are concerned it includes them all. Therefore the laborers and other employees will not be included if the amendment of the Senator from Utah is agreed to. That is the truth about it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is very adroit; he is again begging the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was merely repeating the language of the Senator's own amendment. There is no adroitness about it. Anybody who can read it can understand it.

Mr. KING. The question of the Senator from Arizona did not relate to anything except the employees of the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Utah is entirely right about that, and I think to that extent I made a mistake; but I did not intend to include as much as I did include. I was thinking of the whole amendment, which does include laborers; but the Senator from Utah is entirely right when he says it does not include laborers of the Panama Canal, though it does include laborers under the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] says the bill does not include the laborers in the Panama Canal Zone. If not, why not? Until American genius reclaimed it the Panama Canal Zone was a pestilential place. It is not an easy task to be a "laborer" in the Panama Canal Zone. It is, however, a pleasant thing to be a clerk there, because the clerk has social advantages and possibly has an automobile at Government expense put at his disposal; but it is not so with the laborer who, with pick and shovel, delves in the earth or who sprays the oil on the sluggish water to destroy mosquitoes' eggs, thus preventing deadly fevers. I say, therefore, why refuse to give him who does hard work a pension, and yet give a pension to other Government employees? Why this discrimination? The very sort of man who is excluded is the man who should get a pension. I do not understand why we are to exclude the laborer on the Panama Canal Zone. If this is to be as it should be, a broad, comprehensive, just law, and if the Treasury of Uncle Sam is to be open, so that we may all grab and all may take, why not allow pensions to those who, I repeat, are, if not the most worthy, certainly are equally as worthy as those who have soft seats upon which to sit when they do their work? I can not understand such a construction of democracy. I can not understand such legislation as deliberately excludes a worthy class of laborers. The man whose fingers are soft and whose nails are well manicured is to receive a pension, but the man whose fingers, from hard, deforming work, resemble hooks, is to be deliberately excluded from a pension. Yet we are talking about democracy. I hope the Senator from Tennessee does not favor such a bill as that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. ASHURST. Why are laborers to be excluded?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Utah will yield just a moment, I desire to say I do not think the Senator from Arizona understands just what the situation is. The laborers of whom he speaks, who work with pick and shovel in the Panama Canal Zone, are not American citizens at all. A great many of them have come from adjacent islands. I am not sure that he is correct in his conclusion about the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Utah; but so far as the committee amendment is concerned, it includes laborers in so far as the Capitol Building and Grounds are concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator says that many laborers in the Canal Zone are not citizens of the United States. That is true; but with my own eyes I have seen hundreds of American citizens, just as good citizens as I ever saw anywhere, who would be excluded from the provisions of the bill if the policy which has been outlined here should be followed. The men to whom I refer are citizens, born in the United States, white, free; and yet they are to be excluded from the benefits of this bill. That is not the way to legislate.

If we are to have a retirement pension bill, let it be just and equal in its terms. Serious consequences are upon us already because we have been legislating and passing laws for special interests and for classes. Let us get back to the eternal Democratic doctrine of no special privileges to anyone, white or black, rich or poor. If we are to have a retirement pension bill, let it apply to all. The farmer who feeds us does not work merely seven and one-half hours, but he arises with the sun and seldom has he time even to rest on Sunday, so busy is he in feeding the Nation. Yet he is to be excluded from pensions; his duty is limited to paying the pensions.

I believe in pensions, but I believe the hand that bestows them so bountifully should not select only those who work 7½ hours a day and refuse to give it to one who works 12 hours a day. We hear much about the consumer and his burdens—and they are very heavy—but I want to hear a few words in behalf of the producer.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, while it is somewhat beside the mark—because I think the whole question is covered in the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah and the acceptance of that amendment on behalf of the committee—the reason laborers are not included in the original amendment is because most of the laborers on the Panama Canal are aliens. Let me read——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator amend his bill so as to provide that all laborers, whomsoever they may be and in whatsoever capacity they may labor, who are white and American citizens, shall come within the provisions of this bill?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I could not consent to that. This bill is meant to cover, in a general way, the classified civil service. Certain exceptions are made, as specified on the second page of the bill, of those not in the classified civil service. Then there are those in the civil service who are not classified, because they have not entered the service through competitive examinations. It will exclude some of those, but the President is given power to extend the provisions of the bill to those who may not be in the classified civil service——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I will ask the Senator to pardon me for just a moment—but whose work or employment is of a permanent nature and for that reason could not be very clearly distinguished from those in the classified civil service.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am in favor of pensions to those embraced within the civil or classified service of the United States, but my mind declines to function when it is said that those who are within the civil or classified service of the United States, who are doing the easiest work, who have the best opportunity, shall have pensions, but that those who are not in the civil service, who are in the uncivil service, doing the hard, rough work of the world, producing food, making the Nation great, making the pathway smooth and easy for the pensioners, those who exercise brain and brawn as well, and those who meet the hard, sharp corners of life are to be deliberately excluded. I do not understand such an hypothesis.

Mr. STERLING. The bill includes thousands upon thousands of that class of employees. It includes the employees at the navy yard. All those are included in this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. It includes merely those in Washington, does it not?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; it covers the service throughout the United States, including those employed in arsenals.

Mr. ASHURST. But they must be within the civil or classified service. Let me ask the Senator, Is the gravedigger—underpaid and overworked—working in the Arlington National Cemetery to get a pension under this law? He is not.

We have a Government-owned and Government-controlled railroad in my State which is some 15 or 20 miles in length. It serves the reclamation project at Yuma. Is the man who fires an engine on that road, is the section foreman who keeps the track in shape, to be included under the provisions of this bill, or is the clerk who works seven and one-half hours a day the only one who gets the benefits of the bill?

I am not antagonistic to this bill; I believe that, along with other civilized countries, we should pass some legislation to put the aged employees of the United States—not civil-service employees alone but all employees—on pensions. I am not going to attack the civil service; it does not require any courage to attack it; but we are building up and covering into the civil service a large class of persons. When one goes out into the country he finds that one out of every 200 people in this country is working for the Government, and more are being covered into the civil service every day. As a rule, when a person is covered into the civil service the longer they stay in the more initiative they lose; the longer they stay in the more of the spirit of attack they lose; and when a man has lost his initiative and has lost his spirit of attack he has lost his usefulness. I do not mean the power to attack people physically, but I mean to attack work, and not keep one's eye on the clock all the time. Although my mind sometimes may function very differently from the minds of other men, and better-thinking men than I, I repudiate the doctrine as shocking that the man who has the softest place in the Government, the softest seat upon which to sit, the man doing the lightest kind of work, is the one who is to get a pension, while the one who does the hard, rough work is the man who is deliberately excluded; and yet we talk stridently about equal rights to all and special privileges to none!

So, Mr. President, I appeal to the Senators who are favorable to this legislation to make up a bill of which you will be proud, so that you can go out to the sons of toil and say, "Sir, we have pensioned the man who works for seven and one-half hours a day, but we did not forget you, sir, who do the hard, rough work of the world." What are you going to say when you meet employees of the Government who are doing the rough work of the world, and are meeting life's seamy side, when they learn that you have deliberately excluded them?

It is whispered that this is demagogy. Very well; it is better to be a demagogue than a plutogogue. [Laughter.] I say that a bill which would single out one class of our citizens, the most favored class, the most highly paid class, the class which has the easiest kind of work to perform, the class which is sure of its position and its pay and its vacation, and give them a pension—such legislation does not promote confidence in Congress; and in the last analysis it is confidence in public men that sustains the Government. So, Mr. President, I have been utterly amazed that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who, above all Senators, should be here championing a bill in behalf of laboring men, and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] should confess here that the bill deliberately excludes the American citizens who do the hardest work.

Mr. President, there are in this world men's minds that work in the wrong direction. Passing a monumental building, a noble edifice, they see and admire only the lines of elegance, they admire and praise the top stones that are presented to men's view, they praise the widening arches, the sculptured architraves, the swelling domes, and the fluted pilasters, but they never give a fleeting thought to the usefulness and the stability of those rough stones that are hidden from the view of men, are not admired of men, those stones which under the surface of the earth are supporting the superstructure so beautiful and so pleasing to the eye. No, Mr. President. To construct a bill in this way would be just as if the workmen omitted the foundation.

Such a bill is shocking. It will not stand; it is unjust. When the country learns that a bill has been passed which permits those whose lot is easiest in life to have a pension while those whose lot is hardest in life have been denied a pension, a tide of indignation will roll over the proponents of such a bill. The heat of popular resentment will scorch them. Let the bill be amended so that the faithful workman who pumps cold air into this Chamber in summer and who pumps hot air into this Chamber in winter shall have a pension, so that the fireman who supplies the fuel and the light for this building and the public buildings throughout our country shall have a pension, so that all who work for the Government shall come within its provisions, and then you will have a bill that at least can not be assailed from the viewpoint that it is guilty of favoritism.

Now, we Democrats are pledged to "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." We are going to make not only the woods but the welkin ring within a few months, testifying to that eternal and supreme truth Thomas Jefferson uttered when he said, "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none"; and yet we are going to sit here and pass a bill that pensions those whose lot and work is easiest and deliberately exclude a worthy host of laborers whose work is the hardest. That does not meet my view of my duty as a Democrat. That is not even good Republican doctrine.

These are the reasons why I voted to recommit this bill a while ago, and I want it understood that in voting to recommit it I am not opposed to pensions for worthy employees in the classified civil service, but I want a bill that applies to all. I believe that the man who serves his Government faithfully for a long period of years, and thereby is deprived of the opportunity of earning a subsistence and a competency elsewhere, should at a certain period of his life receive a pension; but I utterly repudiate the doctrine, the suggestion, that it is proper to pension those whose work is easiest and deliberately deny and refuse a pension to those whose work is hardest.

Referring again to the Panama Canal Zone, Senators seem to think it is an easy place in which to work. It is a beautiful place now. Indeed, Mr. President, American genius has transformed it from a pesthole into a restful scene of rare beauty. The zone has been transformed into a pleasure resort where 40, even 30, years ago the miasmatic vapors and the insects and fevers ceaselessly attacked mankind and made life not only unpleasant and intolerable but practically impossible.

Since the day when Balboa climbed to the top of a hill on the Isthmus, where—

> With eagle eyes
> He star'd at the Pacific—and all his men
> Look'd at each other with a wild surmise,
> Silent upon a peak in Darien—

that country has been one of mystery and romance, and you will obtain some faint suggestion of the toll of human life if from Cristobal you drive out to the picturesque cemetery at Mount Hope and there look upon the interminable vista of white headstones; each stone marks the resting place of some laborer who fell in the war with fever, malaria, and the other fierce and fatal enemies of mankind that he finds in the Tropics. But American workmen have wrought there a change almost miraculous; the poison spines that once speared mankind, the insect that stung him, the vapors that poisoned him have been driven from the zone by brawny American workmen whom this bill declares are not worthy to participate in a governmental pension. Alligators and crocodiles with unimaginable fecundity flourish in the Chagres River and in Gatun Lake. A constant warfare must be waged against them, and yet the men who do this work are not deemed to be worthy to share in a governmental pension.

I pause for an answer. If there be some reason why a laboring man should not have a pension, let us know it. If the reason is good, I will vote with you.

Oh! I have just discovered that the laborer on the Panama Canal can not vote! I have just discovered the reason. How many men vote in the Panama Canal Zone?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona is wrong in his premises.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope I am.

Mr. STERLING. Thousands upon thousands of these men do manual work. Their work is not clerical. It is not at a desk.

Mr. ASHURST. They are the kind of men in behalf of whom I am talking.

Mr. STERLING. They come under the provisions of this bill, too.

Mr. ASHURST. But they do not come under its provisions unless they are covered into the classified civil service.

Mr. STERLING. I stated a while ago that the men in the navy yards and the men in the arsenals throughout the country whose work is manual and not clerical come within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, I am satisfied. If all the men and women who do the hard, rough, manual work come within the provisions of this bill, then I stand corrected and pleased; but I want to know do they come within the provisions of this bill whether they are within the civil service or not? That is what I want to know. If I am correctly advised, a considerable proportion of the laboring people that work for the Government are not within the civil service. What I want to know is this: Take the city of Sacramento, Calif., or the city of Columbus, Ohio, or any city of any State; there is the man running the elevator; there is the man who is firing one of the engines that generates the steam to keep the civil-service employee from freezing, and to make the work of the civil-service employee pleasant and suitable and soft. I want to know if those who are doing the manual work, whether they are within the civil service or the uncivil service, are covered by the terms of this bill; and I pause for an answer.

Are those people, without regard to whether they are in the civil service or not, within the terms of this bill and will they share its beneficence just the same as will the clerks and the stenographers, who are worthy and ought to get a pension?

I pause for an answer. I hope such questions are not embarrassing to anybody. [Here a pause of 50 seconds.] Mr. President, as I hear no reply I have a right to assume that those laboring people who do the rough work of the world, who are bearing the world's burdens, upon whose broad shoulders the weight of our country and our Government is resting, and who are doing work sometimes not attractive but very necessary, are not included.

Now, Mr. President, it has been said that some of the employees of the navy yards are within the provisions of the bill. If some, why not all? A large number of the clerks here and elsewhere in the Government service are not only faithful but their work is necessary and quite efficient, but it is no more necessary than is the labor of those who are doing the world's rougher work. My conception of greatness is this, the man or the woman who uncomplainingly does his or her work is great. Let us not forget when we see a lofty mountain peak, with its base sweeping almost to the sea on either side, rearing its head almost to the skies, that at the base, at the bottom, is where the weight is. The base of the mountain is what supports it. The base of the building is what supports the edifice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KING. I want to state to the Senator that this bill, too, has this feature, that you have to be in the service of the Government for a long period of time—30 years or 27 years or 20 years or 15 years—in order to get a pension. Many of these laboring men, of course, will not live that long, they have to work so hard for the Government, and unless they happen to live a long time they will not get a pension.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the carpenter in the Senate Office Building, Mr. Frank Agnew, of Lynchburg, Va., who came here with the great Virginia Senator, John W. Daniel, departed this life a few months ago. I mention him with great respect. He was a man educated—no, learned. I would rather be learned than educated. "Education" means to have knowledge. "Learned" means to have wisdom. He was a learned man. He did his work faithfully, working with his plane, his saw, his hammer, with patience, skill, good nature, and loyalty to duty; he labored with hand and brain; he mended the desks here; he made the seats soft here; but he would not have been eligible for a pension under this bill. I mention that simply as an illustration, for I knew the man well and esteemed him highly. His work and his life could be pointed to with pride, and the attention of the ordinary American boy could have been directed to that carpenter as a model of the proficient, useful, American citizen.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My attention was distracted so that I was not able to hear all that the Senator said. I heard the Senator ask a question of the Senate a while ago and pause for an answer. I was curious to know if during the moment when my attention was attracted elsewhere the Senator got an answer to his question?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I asked a question which I thought should have been answered; but it is not answered yet, and I am afraid it will not be answered. The Senate heard the question. There has been no answer. I pause again. I will pause 20 seconds to give the Senator in charge of this bill an opportunity to answer that question. [Pauses 20 seconds.]

Mr. President, I am going to be talking politics after Congress adjourns. I expect to go about this country a veritable peripatetic, bifurcated volcano in behalf of Democratic principles. The corner stone, the backbone, of my speech will be "equal rights to everybody, special privileges to none," and if, perchance, I should be speaking and should be told in the middle of my speech that I had sat here and unctuously washed my hands in invisible water with imperceptible soap and voted in favor of a bill which granted a pension to a certain class of our citizens who ought to have a retirement bill passed, but that I was deaf to the call of those who were bearing the great weight of the work, I would like to know what would become of my speech in behalf of Democratic principles.

I would probably be like the man who was struck in the stomach with a piece of sandstone, whom Bret Harte tells about—subsequent proceedings would interest me no more.

Mr. President, we have made some mistakes. I am guilty of some. But I am done with it, and the stinging of conscience I am now getting is the just punishment and the just excoriation that comes to every Democrat every time he departs from Thomas Jefferson's immortal statement, "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none." Let this bill apply to the coal heaver on the Panama Canal. Let this bill apply to the men who, down in the bottom of the ship, are stoking the coal and are oiling the engines, when the waves are mountain high. Let the bill apply to them, and it will commend itself to every right-thinking person.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we have heard a good deal said about the clerks who sit in swivel chairs around the table, with their feet upon the table, and we have also heard something said about the man who works six or seven hours a day. But I have also heard from people who work a good deal longer.

Mr. President, there has just come into my hands a pamphlet from your State, where an organization of 4,000 stock shippers of Iowa in annual convention at Des Moines the other day adopted some resolutions. It might be very profitable to read them now, Mr. President.

In thinking about this, Mr. President, it might be well to consider the farmers. They are not always hollering for a holiday. They work sometimes 14 or 15 hours a day. Now, they have their eyes on Washington, to see what we are doing, and they are beginning to hold us to a more strict account than they have ever done in the past. I will not take the time of the Senate to read all of the resolutions, but there is one here, Mr. President, where they say they want this body to guarantee, among others, one thing—that they want the Senate to pass this resolution:

Further be it resolved, That as an incident to the foregoing guaranty Congress shall also be requested to guarantee: (1) That we won't have a drought this summer; (2) that our sows will bring forth of their kind bountifully and plentifully; and (3) that our eggs will hatch—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator read the whereases? I do not know the organization from which the resolution comes.

Mr. DIAL. The resolutions are from an organization of 4,000 stock shippers in Iowa, 50,000 grain producers in Minnesota, and 60,000 producers in Illinois, and a great number of the farmers of this country.

Mr. President, seriously, I presume that it is desired that some kind of legislation be passed whereby the old employees of the Government could be gotten rid of, pensioned in some way. But I do not feel that that time has arrived yet. Possibly that would add to the efficiency of the Government service. I am so told. But, Mr. President, I feel that there is no compulsion; there is no law in this country to make people work for this Government. They do not have to come and work for the Government unless they do it voluntarily. They have an option to work for the Government or not, as they see proper.

I feel that of all times this is the most inopportune time to pass special legislation of this kind, just after the war, before we have gotten back to normal. When things are in a chaotic condition all over the world, it is unkind, it is unthinkable, it is unpatriotic to come here and ask Congress to pass any such legislation as this when our Government bonds are selling at 90 cents on the dollar. We want things to become normal, and I feel that this is bad legislation. The bill ought to be defeated. I voted a while ago to recommit it, but the whole thing ought to be defeated until we can become more normal.

If people do not want to work for this Government, they have a perfect right to quit. I do not know anybody who has ever lost much health and much strength by work. The great trouble in this country is that they do not work enough. Instead of trying to curtail the hours of labor we need longer hours. We need to produce more in this country to help support the people. We are quitting work; we are quitting producing. We never will bring down the cost of living so long as we curtail production. That is the only way in the world to go at it. There is legislation for prosecuting some little fellow for profiteering. Profiteering is wrong, but it will not cure the defect. We have to go back to the old-fashioned labor and hard work, and we should remember that the people of this country have to pay the bills.

I am reminded of an old man in my town who used occasionally to go on a spree, and he would go alone and say, "It is easy to blow, but where is the wind to come from?" Somebody has to pay these bills, and I think the whole legislation ought to be killed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word in regard to this amendment. The provision under discussion is the amendment offered by the committee. It declares that the provisions of this act shall include:

American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer, superintendents of United States national cemeteries, and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and.

That is the amendment offered by the committee to the original bill. Then follows these words, which are embraced in the amendment to the amendment which I offered:

Employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden.

The amendment which I offered, Mr. President, was to strike out the words "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer" and the words "and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden."

I will again state the reason why I offered this amendment to the amendment. I had understood from the proponents of the bill and from the earnest advocates of a retirement system that the system was to extend to those who were within the classified service.

It occurred to me that if we have a pension system extending to the employees of the Government who are within the classified service, then none should be brought within the provisions of this bill outside of the classified service unless all of the employees of the Government outside of the classified service were brought within its terms; in other words, that it is an unfair discrimination to bring within the provisions of the bill a part only of the Government employees and not all.

In making that statement I do not wish to be understood as defending a policy under which the benefits of a pension system shall be extended only to those within the classified service. I am somewhat in agreement with my friend from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that if a pension system is to be fastened upon the Government it ought to extend to all of the employees of the Government. There may be reasons for limiting a pension system to those within the classified service. I do not have the knowledge on this important question that is possessed by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and there may be abundant reasons for the apparent discrimination which limits the payment of pensions to those within the classified service.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator permit me to explain?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I think the primary reason is this: Those within the classified service are employed permanently, their work is of a permanent nature, whereas the employment of those in the unclassified service is more or less temporary and there is not the same reason for including them within the provisions of the bill.

The Senator will see that idea carried out by the terms of the bill itself, which gives authority to the President by Executive order upon recommendation of the Civil Service Commission—to include any employee or group of employees in the civil service of the United States not classified at the time of the passage of this act.

The Senator will note what follows:

The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act any employee or group of employees in the classified civil service whose tenure of office or employment is intermittent or of uncertain duration.

The Senator knows that under the provisions of the bill there must be a service of at least 15 years before a man can share in the benefits of the act. So primarily it is for those whose employment is of a permanent character rather than those whose employment is intermittent or uncertain. I think it may be found, if the bill works satisfactorily, that there are other employees not in the classified civil service who perhaps ought reasonably to be brought within the provisions of the bill, and if the Civil Service Commission approves of it the President may by Executive order extend the provisions of the bill so as to cover cases of that kind.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator from South Dakota for the very clear and lucid explanation which he has made. The Senator's position would seem to afford some justification for the theory adopted in the framing of this bill.

But as I was about to state, in view of the fact that the bill is founded upon the theory that the pension system should be limited to the classified employees of the Government, it seemed to me that it was somewhat incongruous to import into the bill a few of the nonclassified employees of the Government. It occurred to me that if we imported into the bill any who are outside of the classified service, it would provoke heartburnings and recriminations and undoubtedly criticism of the committee and of Congress. Men who had been in the employ of the Government much longer than those upon the Canal Zone and in service perhaps as important or more important than that in which they were engaged would perhaps say that it was unfair and discriminatory to exclude them from the benefits of the pension after placing other nonclassified employees within its benefits.

The same criticism I thought might be urged if we included within the benefits of the bill the employees of the Capitol, the employees of the Library of Congress, and the employees of the Botanic Garden. If they do not belong to the classified service and the theory of the bill is that the pensionable status shall be accorded to those who are within the classified service, employees of the Government outside of the classified service would say that there was an unfair discrimination against them.

Since I submitted the amendment I have had a brief conversation with the chairman of the committee and reasons have been assigned by him which prompt me to amend my motion by excluding therefrom the words "and employees of the Library of Congress." My information is that their services are of such a character as that they are really within the classified service. So I shall perfect my amendment to the committee amendment by excluding those words, so that the amendment as perfected will read:

The provisions of this act shall include superintendents of United States national cemeteries and employees of the Library of Congress.

And so forth.

Mr. STERLING. As chairman of the committee, I accept the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question? Why include the superintendents of the United States national cemeteries? Is there any reason why?

Mr. KING. The only reason, I will say to my colleague, was that which was assigned by my good friend, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], a few days ago when this matter was under discussion. Upon reflection I see no reason for it. I thought that perhaps some of the superintendents of the national cemeteries were not receiving sufficient compensation, and we might consider that they were fairly entitled to this pensionable status. I will say, however, that it seems to me incongruous to engraft upon this bill legislation affecting the old soldiers when that legislation is dealt with so liberally and generously by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STERLING. But this class of employees are in this situation, and it appeals to me very strongly. Here are the qualifications prescribed by law and by regulation for superintendents of national cemeteries. They must have served in the Army of the United States, either Regular or Volunteer, and must have been disabled for active field service in the line of duty, but the degree of their present disability must not be such as to impair their efficiency in charge of cemeteries. They must be of steady, sober, correct habits. They must have a fair degree of intelligence and education, and must be able to write legibly. The compensation for the superintendents is $60, $65, $70, and $75 per month, according to the grade of the cemetery to which they are assigned. They are all old men, I suppose veterans of the Civil War, and they get small salaries, and they ought to come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator whether the law requires service in the Army before appointment can be made?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; that is the requirement. They must have served in the Army of the United States, either Regular or Volunteer, and must have been disabled for active field service in the line of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a fair reason why it should be taken.

Mr. STERLING. The employees under these superintendents are in the classified civil service themselves, but the superintendents are not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word further before the vote is taken on my amendment to the amendment.

There has been considerable discussion concerning the effect, the financial effect, if I may be permitted the expression, upon the Public Treasury if this bill shall become a law in its present form. I confess that no matter how ardent one might be in favor of a system of retirement or a pension bill, where two statements are made so divergent as those which have been submitted to the Senate by experts it ought to occasion some hesitancy upon the part of Senators until they have had an opportunity of investigating fully and determining which of the two divergent statements is the truth.

I understand it is contended by one or more experts that the bill now before us in its present terms will cost the Government of the United States approximately $260,000,000 or $270,000,000 during a period of 50 years, whereas the other experts, as I understand, give it as their opinion that the bill, with the present number of employees and assuming that there shall be no expansion in the personnel of the Government, will cost the Government for the same period more than $1,250,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. One billion five hundred million dollars in 60 years.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Ohio reads from the table and states $1,500,000,000 in 60 years. Now, I say that no matter how ardent a disciple one may be of a system of pensions for Government employees, it would seem to me that he would hesitate before voting for any bill that presented such a wide divergence of opinion where it was susceptible, if not of accurate and mathematical demonstration, at least of reasonably accurate demonstration as to the truthfulness of the respective contentions.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] contends that the bill for a period of 60 years will cost the Government only two hundred and fifty or two hundred and sixty million dollars. That, I understand, is his position, whereas the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has presented figures which have been submitted by Mr. Brown and other experts, as I understand, wherein it is shown that it will cost the Government $1,500,000,000 in 60 years. There is one billion and a quarter dollars difference between these views. Certainly we ought to have the views reconciled before we are called upon to vote upon a proposition of this kind. Are Senators willing to vote for a measure, no matter how ardently they may favor it, when they do not know whether it is going to cost the Government $250,000,000 or $1,500,000,000?

During the war we voted for many measures without knowing what the cost would be. We were engaged in a world conflict and it was imperative that the forces of justice should triumph. We did not hesitate when requests were made for liberal appropriations to grant them, and we appropriated not merely hundreds of millions of dollars but billions of dollars. Pay day, Mr. President, is now at hand. We have got to meet the obligations which we have incurred. We can only meet them by levying taxes upon the people or by issuing bonds, which will call for additional levies of taxes; but in the end the bowed back of labor will have to pay the burdens that will be imposed by Congress upon the people. In the final chapter the bankers do not pay the taxes; Wall Street does not pay the taxes of the United States; the men of wealth do not pay the taxes of the United States; in the last analysis the burden rests upon the shoulders of the producers, the men who toil, the farmers, the men who work in the factories, and the men who work in the mines and produce from the raw material those things which are essential for the life and happiness of the people.

Mr. President, there are always men—I have no reference now to the bill under discussion—appealing to Congress for appropriations. Most of those who are appealing for appropriations do not have to pay the taxes. I have sometimes thought that it would be a wise course if there were a few individuals here and in the House of Representatives whose only duty it was to represent the taxpayers of the United States and who from time to time would challenge the attention of Congress to the staggering burdens which are being laid upon the back of labor in this country. It is easy to vote money out of the Treasury; it is easy to pass a law and put the hand of some executive agency into the Treasury of the United States and authorize it to take from it a hundred million dollars or a billion dollars or two or three billion dollars; it is easy to pass a tax bill; but when the tax measure is passed and the taxgatherers make their demands, then we awaken to a realization of the chain placed upon the people. The taxes paid must come from production; and though the rich pay heavy taxes, the burden is carried back to the producer, to those who by their toil build the great edifice of our political and social structure.

The earnings of the American people are going to diminish this year; in my opinion they will be ten billion less than they were in 1919. Where are we going to get the taxes? Where are we going to get the savings in exchange for bonds, if we issue bonds? Without savings there can be no investments or new enterprises. We can not prosper by the consumption of capital. That would be a wild and mad debauch. We must not take all the savings for the payment of taxes, or we will bring financial disaster. We must produce, and produce still more, and save and save still more. There must be not only thrift, but economy to the point of parsimony. Our production is diminishing and dwindling to the point of danger. Our agriculturalists are facing a serious situation and their prosperity is threatened. If they can not produce for our domestic needs and for export, ruin will be imminent. Our foreign commerce this year will be less than it was in the year 1919. The products of mine and mill and farm and field will be less in value. Of course, with the diminution of production in the United States there will be a diminution in the amount of taxes poured into the Treasury, and with a diminishing Treasury there will be national bankruptcy if we continue extravagant appropriations.

A few years ago when a Democratic President issued—and it was only a small issue—bonds in time of peace, it aroused the resentment of the American people and was a contributing factor to the defeat of that party. We are now actually in peace times threatened with a bond issue, notwithstanding the stupendous amount wrung from the people by way of taxation, contemplating that in this year of peace we are collecting more than $6,000,000,000 in taxes. We are lavish in our expenditures and are still appropriating money by the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars. But, Mr. President, the argument in favor of economy is not decisive against this legislation if it is wise and imperative. There may be wise legislation, and yet it may be deferred. There may be imperative legislation which will permit of no postponement and which statesmanship demands shall be enacted notwithstanding the fact that its enactment may impose grievous burdens of taxation upon the people. Coming to this bill, however, we are confronted with this situation: Competent persons affirm that it will cost the United States $256,000,000 or $260,000,000 within a given period, and other credible witnesses emphatically declare that it will cost $1,500,000,000 within the same period and with the present number of employees of the Government. I am desirous before voting of knowing which is right. I want to know whether if I vote for the pending bill I am burdening the people with $1,500,000,000 of taxes or only $250,000,000 or $260,000,000.

Can any Senator answer that question to the entire satisfaction of this body? The Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Tennessee seem absolutely convinced that the figures which they submit are correct; but they are not convinced by reason of any calculations which they have made; they are dependent upon hearsay evidence; and, as I understand, Mr. Beach and Mr. McCoy, witnesses in behalf of the system which they are proposing, differ materially. I want to know before I vote on this bill whether I am voting for $1,500,000,000 out of the Treasury or for two or three hundred million dollars. If Senators are ready to vote without knowing that fact, I shall not be critical; I simply say that I can not do so.

I voted for the recommittal of this bill for that reason, and that reason alone; my vote did not indicate whether I was for or against this legislation.

If we are to have a pension bill, I want one that is fair and rational, one that can be defended on all proper grounds, one that as a precedent will not prove dangerous to the United States or governments, States or otherwise, which may follow it. I think before we vote we ought to have some men of competency and skill, experts of recognized standing, who can furnish this information. I want it, and I believe other Senators desire information that will enable them to act intelligently in regard to this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As divided, the first question is, Shall there be stricken from the amendment proposed by the committee the words "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer"? The question is on that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As divided, the second question is, Shall there be stricken from the amendment proposed by the committee the words "and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds"? Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

The third question—and it is one which relates to the text of the bill and not to the amendment proposed by the committee—is, Shall the words "and the Botanic Garden" be stricken from the bill?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I object to striking those words from the bill. I do not see why the employees of the Botanic Garden should be deprived of the benefits of the bill. It seems to me, if any employees are going to be pensioned, the employees of the Botanic Garden should be pensioned as well as other employees, so I ask that the question be put to a vote. I wish to vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the words "and Botanic Garden," occurring in line 6, page 2, of the bill be stricken out?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I merely wish to say again that the chairman of the committee has accepted this suggested amendment. I have no antipathy at all toward the employees of that service, but under the explanation which has been made it seems to me that we would be guilty of discrimination to give them pensions and not give pensions to a multitude of others in the service of the Government; and I am not in favor of discrimination. We have accepted the line of cleavage as the classified service; that is, those within the classified service are to be pensioned, and the reason for that has been explained by the Senator from South Dakota. Those outside of the classified service are not to be pensioned, but the Senator has called attention to a provision in this section under which, if reasons warrant, the President and the Civil Service Commission may transfer from the nonclassified to the classified service any employees of the Government whose tenure is of such a nature and whose service is of such a character as that in justice they should be brought within that service.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Montana that I consented to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah striking out the employees of the Botanic Gardens largely with the fact in view that many of the employees of the Botanic Gardens are laborers, and temporarily employed. Their services are not of a permanent nature.

Mr. MYERS. Are not any of them under civil service?

Mr. STERLING. Some of them probably are under civil service.

Mr. MYERS. If any of them are under civil service, would they participate in the benefits of the bill?

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the Senator from Montana, however, that they are not under any of the executive departments, as I understand; and this applies primarily to those in the classified civil service, and who come under the executive departments.

Mr. MYERS. Are any of the employees of the Botanic Garden under the civil service?

Mr. STERLING. I think so.

Mr. MYERS. If so, would they benefit by the bill?

Mr. STERLING. I think they would benefit by the bill if they are so called, but I doubt whether they would come within the term "classified civil service."

Mr. MYERS. There are not many employees of the Botanic Garden, are there?

Mr. STERLING. Not very many, I think. I have not a list of the number.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana that if any of them are within the classified civil service, the theory of the bill being that the retirement feature shall extend to those within the classified civil service, I am perfectly willing to amend the amendment so that they may receive the benefits of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. There can not be many employed in the Botanic Garden. It is not a large institution.

Mr. STERLING. No; I think not. I will say to the Senator from Montana that in view of the subsequent provision of the bill which will allow the President, on the approval of the Civil Service Commission, to put under the provisions of the bill those whose employment is of a permanent nature, not intermittent or temporary, I would consent to the amendment. If it is found that there is any considerable number of Botanic Garden employees whose work is permanent, then, by order, they can be made to come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which is to strike from line 6, page 2, of the bill the words "and the Botanic Garden."

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the acceptance of these amendments may not call for an amendment of the text. I invite the Senator's attention to lines 6 and 7, to the words "excepting persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate." Does the Senator think that those words should remain in view of the amendments which have just been adopted?

Mr. STERLING. I think those words ought to remain in the bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection if the Senator thinks so.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I think they ought to remain in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment was, on page 3, line 21, before the word "annual," to insert "average," so as to make the paragraph read:

Class B shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 27 years or more, but less than 30 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 54 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $648 per annum, or be less than $324 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 1, after the words "date of," to strike out "termination of pay for active" and insert "separation from the," so as to make the paragraph read:

Annuities granted under this act for retirement on account of age shall commence from the date of separation from the service on or after the date this act shall take effect, and shall continue during the life of the annuitant. Annuities granted for disability under the provisions of section 5 hereof shall be subject to the limitations specified in said section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, after the word "out," to strike out "the," so as to make the paragraph read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered in carrying out provisions of this act to supplement the individual contributions of employees with moneys received in the form of donations, gifts, legacies, bequests, or otherwise, and to receive, invest, and disburse for the purposes of this act all moneys which may be contributed by private individuals or corporations or organizations for the benefit of civil-service employees generally or any special class of employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 14, line 9, after the word "date," to strike out the word "of," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That upon the transfer of any employee from an unclassified to a classified status, or upon the reinstatement of a former employee, credit for past service rendered subsequent to the date this act shall take effect, or for any part thereof, shall be granted only upon deposit with the Treasurer of the United States of the amount of such deductions with interest as provided in this act as would have been made for the periods of actual service, or part thereof, for which credit is to be given, but such interest shall not be computed for periods of separation from the service: Provided, That failure to make such deposit shall not deprive the employee of credit for any past service rendered prior to the date this act shall become operative, and to which he or she would otherwise be entitled.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill, inviting his attention to section 12, whether there is any necessity for monthly payments of the annuities?

It seems to me that it involves unnecessary expense to the Government. I think that quarterly payments, or even semiannual payments, ought to be sufficient.

I recommend to the Senator the consideration of the question of an amendment striking out the word "monthly," in line 18, page 15, and inserting the word "quarterly." The Senator knows that the burdens of bookkeeping upon the Treasury Department are multiplying, and becoming onerous in the extreme.

Mr. STERLING. I should not like to consent to an amendment of that kind. The annuitants will be known; there will be a list; and it will be no great trouble, I think, to make these payments monthly, instead of quarterly or semiyearly.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that it involves a vast amount of bookkeeping. Checks will be made out for each annuitant. Those checks will have to be transmitted. Numerous bookkeeping entries will be necessitated by the issuing of the checks. Vouchers will be received, and all of the procedure incident to payments from the Treasury will have to be gone through; and the Senator knows that that procedure is costly and expensive in the extreme. If the Senator will not accept the suggestion, I shall move to amend by striking out the word "monthly" and inserting the word "quarterly."

Mr. STERLING. The Senator may make that motion if he chooses. I believe the committee amendments are completed. I have an amendment that I wish to offer.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator until his amendment is disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, to be numbered section 16, and to read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to select three actuaries, one of whom shall be the Government actuary, to be known as the board of actuaries, whose duty it shall be to annually report upon the actual operations of this act, with authority to recommend to the Commissioner of Pensions such changes as in its judgment may be deemed necessary to maintain the system upon a sound financial basis. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to submit with his annual report to Congress the recommendations of the board of actuaries. It shall be the duty of the board of actuaries to make a valuation of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" at the end of the first year following the passage of this act and at intervals of every five years thereafter, or oftener, if deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions. The compensation of the members of the board of actuaries, exclusive of the Government actuary, shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this amendment contemplates a continuance of this board in session all the time, or if its duties will require that these two additional men shall be put on the pay roll at a regular salary?

Mr. STERLING. I do not hear the Senator distinctly.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator's amendment provides for the establishment of an actuarial board?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRBY. One to be already in the Government employ and two others to be selected?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. KIRBY. Will the duties of the board require the continuous service of these other men, and at what salary will they probably be employed?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know how long the services will be required, but the salary is to be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, under the terms of the amendment.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I want to suggest an amendment, at any rate, to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota. At the end of line 8, on the first page, or between lines 8 and 9, I think there should be inserted:

to protect the public interest, and maintain the system upon a sound financial basis.

It seems to me that these suggestions ought to go to that extent, and I assume that the chairman will have no objection to including that.

Mr. STERLING. I have no objection. I accept the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 9, of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, before the word "maintain," it is proposed to insert the words "protect the public interest, and".

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Dakota modifies his amendment so as to include the words proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator really want to accept these words? I call his attention to them. I had not noticed them. If those words are accepted, this is the way it will read:

Recommend to the Commissioner of Pensions such changes as in its judgment may be deemed necessary—to protect the public interest and maintain the system upon a sound financial basis.

Mr. STERLING. I think I have no objection to the words. The public interest will be protected, I think, in maintaining the system on a sound financial basis. The words may be regarded as superfluous in that respect, but I agree that the words may be included.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course if the Senator does not care what wording there is in the bill, it is all right. It does seem to me, however, that it is a repetition of language.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator ought to accept those words unless it is done with the understanding that they may go to conference for the purpose of determining exactly whether those words are properly there or not. We all understand what the Senator from Arkansas wants, and nobody objects to that, but I am very doubtful as to whether the words which have been suggested offhand by the Senator from Arkansas are the proper words to employ in that connection.

I wanted to say this because if the matter goes to conference the Senator from South Dakota, as the chairman of the conference committee, probably will feel bound to stand by the action of the Senate. At least that is the way I always regard the duty of a conferee, but I think the chairman ought to say that this is a matter which should receive more careful consideration than can be given it at this moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that this is a Senate bill which we are considering, and if the words are put in, and the House does not notice the language, nor make any change, there will be nothing in conference. I think, Mr. President, that before the Senator accepts the words he ought to be very careful about having them in, because I can see a conflict of interests here, and yet upon the face of it, if it is for the object stated by the Senator from Arkansas, nobody could object to it. As the Senator from Michigan said, nobody could object to the object of the proposed amendment, but if the object is to be reached, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, then it is a repetition of language and not necessary. But there is a question, if you put it in here, as to what construction will be put upon it.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is a singular thing, indeed, that an amendment offered in the United States Senate which would require the recommendation of a board to protect the public interest should be objected to. The purpose and object of the bill is understood. It is intended that one half of the expense shall be borne by the beneficiaries and that the other half shall be borne by the Government, and certainly the recommendation of this board ought to extend to the protection of the public interests along the line of the bill, as well as placing it on a sound financial basis. It would be on a sound financial basis anyway if the Government pays it, whether the other people contributed anything whatever to it or not.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wish to call attention to is this: Why should the words "protect the public interest" be inserted, if we are going to use the words "maintain the system upon a sound financial basis"?

Mr. KIRBY. It might be a sound financial basis so far as the payments of the benefits to the beneficiaries are concerned, but it might take two-thirds of the money out of the Public Treasury, instead of half of it from the Treasury and half of it out of the employees.

Mr. SMOOT. This will not reach that. I will say to the Senator, without a question of doubt, that under the bill there will be two-thirds of it taken from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KIRBY. I know, but the purpose of the bill as stated here is that one half of it shall be contributed by the Government and the other half by the employees as contributions from them.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the bill which makes that provision, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. That is the entire argument here.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, and I have tried to show that that is not the case, and if I could get Senators here to listen, I am quite sure I could convince the Senate that it is not the case. If the Senator wants to accept the words and wants them to go in in his amendment, I am not going to say another word, but I do see that there could be a conflict.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Utah that whatever I might have done in the light of the discussion, I agreed to accept this amendment, and I do accept it according to the agreement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, referring to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, may I ask the Senator why it is that the amendment does not fix any pay for these actuaries?

Mr. STERLING. One reason is because it is not known just what pay to fix. In preparing the amendment I thought the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, would be better able to determine what was just compensation than I myself was in drawing the amendment. I thought the Commissioner of Pensions would fix a reasonable compensation, and no more than a reasonable compensation, and that it could be safely intrusted to him.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it not generally the practice of Congress to at least fix a maximum, allowing discretion to pay below the maximum of salary?

Mr. STERLING. I think frequently a maximum has been fixed, but I think the Senator from Delaware will find that the maximum is always allowed. That is the effect of fixing a maximum.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That may be very true. I confess that I do not like to vote to some administrative official the power to fix a salary for somebody. I do not like the idea, and I discover from the Senator's answer that there is no explanation for this indefiniteness except that the committee did not know what figure to name. That is correct, I believe?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and with the additional fact that I thought the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior would agree upon a just compensation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me ask the Senator another question: How is the salary of the so-called Government actuary to be fixed?

Mr. STERLING. He is already paid. He is in the Government service now at a stated salary, and his salary, of course, will be paid for services rendered in his regular employment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I had an impression from the reading of the amendment that the three actuaries were three new officials. But one of them, I understand, is an old official already in office, and under a stated salary?

Mr. STERLING. An old official. A Government actuary on a fixed salary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Amend by inserting after section 14, on page 17 of the printed bill, a new section to be known as and numbered section 15, to read as follows:

SEC. 15. That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to and none of its benefits shall be received or enjoyed by any person who is a member of any association, society, organization, or union of Government employees which is affiliated with, subject to, or a member or component part of, or acknowledges the authority of, any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor; and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions shall make and enforce rules for the enforcement of this section and governing the method and character of proof required in order that employees may receive the benefits of this act.

Amend further by renumbering the subsequent sections in accordance herewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Montana, but I think it will perhaps be impossible to reach a final vote on the bill to-night, and, as some Senators desire an executive session, if the Senator will yield now I will move an executive session.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that I am not talking to delay or to kill the bill; I really have some things I wish to say; but it will take me some little time longer, and I yield for the purpose indicated by the Senator. I do not care if I do not complete my remarks to-day.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS—SWISS RESERVATIONS.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Tribune on the Swiss reservations to the covenant of the League of Nations. It is a very important and very illuminating article.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Tribune, Feb. 16, 1920.]

THE SWISS RESERVATIONS.

The admission of Switzerland to the League of Nations demonstrates that the council of the league has no invincible opposition to membership with reservations. In order to let Switzerland in the council had to annul several specific provisions of the covenant.

Article 1 provides that the original members of the league shall be the signatories of the treaty with Germany and such neutral nations, named in the annex to part 1, "as shall accede without reservation to the covenant." Switzerland was one of the neutrals named. Article 1 also provides that these neutrals must deposit a declaration of accession "within two months of the coming into force of the covenant."

Switzerland's constitution makes it impossible for her to deposit such a declaration within two months, for her Government has to submit the question of departing from the Swiss policy of neutrality to a vote of the people, and this vote can not be taken within the period fixed. Nevertheless Switzerland was received into the league last Friday.

But the council didn't stop merely with suspending the rules of admission. It permitted Switzerland to make sweeping reservations to article 10, often described as "the heart of the covenant," and to article 16, relating to the coercion to be employed against a covenant-breaking State. Switzerland has pursued for centuries a policy of absolute neutrality—of noninterference in the quarrels of Europe. She desires to remain a neutral—at least in the military sense. Although willing to make some sacrifices in order to enter the league, she insists that her military forces must never be used offensively against nations which the league may want to discipline.

She therefore refuses to accept any obligation "to preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and political independence of other members of the league" if that obligation commits her to the use of armed force. Her reservation to article 10 goes much futher than our Senate's reservation does, for the United States agrees to use force as well as economic pressure whenever Congress so authorizes.

Article 16 requires members of the league to combine to punish a covenant-breaking State both through economic boycott and through military pressure. Members agree "to take the necessary steps to afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the members of the league which are cooperating to protect the covenants of the league." Switzerland, besides declining to furnish military aid against an offending State, declines to allow the passage of foreign troops across her territory, or to allow her territory to be used in any way as a base for military operations. She gives notice that she will defend her territory in any circumstances, even against the League of Nations.

Such reservations "cut the heart out of the covenant," so far as Switzerland is concerned. Yet the council, while admitting this fact, has yielded to the constitutional and historic traditions of the Swiss, and has admitted them into a limited partnership in the league.

The United States also has constitutional limitations and historical traditions to live up to. The makers of the covenant did not sufficiently realize that. The council seems to be more open-minded. Having accepted Switzerland's stringent reservations, it has debarred itself from objecting to much more moderate reservations on the part of the United States.

Mr. GORE. Just 7 months and 26 days before the first shipload of drafted men landed in Europe.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 25, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for the splendid tribute, poured out of the heart of our people throughout the length and breadth of the land, in memory and admiration of George Washington, commemorating his birth.

For so long as the spirit of Washington lives in the hearts of our people, so long will patriotism live; and so long as patriotism lives, our glorious Republic will live to bless millions yet unborn.

Live on, O Washington, strong, and pure, and great, that thy spirit may inspire the world to deeds of heroism and glory, that liberty, truth, justice, and equal rights for all mankind shall live. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of penny postage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of penny postage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 466.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $2,000 per annum for the services of one clerk for the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

With the following committee amendment:

Lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "until otherwise provided by law" and insert in lieu thereof the words "during the remainder of the Sixty-sixth Congress."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is made necessary by the congestion of papers found in all of the departments and in the House document room. There has been no disposition made of these papers since the death of the lamented Mr. Talbott, of Maryland.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this the usual appropriation for a clerk of that committee?

Mr. IRELAND. Does the gentleman mean with regard to the amount of salary?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this the usual appropriation made for the clerk of that committee? Is it a new provision or an old one repeated?

Mr. IRELAND. It is an old one repeated. I can give the gentleman that information from the Sixty-third Congress on. I have not got it prior to that. There has been a clerk and also a messenger since the Sixty-third Congress for each session up until the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress and the first of the Sixty-sixth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the clerk do anything at all?

Mr. IRELAND. I can only repeat what I have been told. The unwilling chairman of this committee says that he must have a clerk with some technical knowledge to go over these papers, that they have to be read and a report made upon them to the House.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. There is just a little increase in the amount of salary that is to be paid, and that is all the difference?

Mr. IRELAND. I think so; but no messenger is provided, and none is needed.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, the Democrats when in power were very good to this committee because the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. Talbott, was the chairman of it. I think we gave him nearly everything he asked. I do not think it was necessary, but I think we gave him that clerk, I might say, as a matter of courtesy, because of the fact that he was the oldest Member. I make no reflection upon him now when I say that the House in its goodness of heart gave this clerk, and especially the messenger, as I recall it, to Mr. Talbott because he asked for it, not because it was necessary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That might be true, possibly, in part, as to the messenger, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield.

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I remember I supported the proposition. That committee does have important work to do, and most of that work is done by the clerk to the committee. Every few days we have a request from some department of the Government for permission to destroy what they call useless papers. When such a request goes to the Senate, that body refers it to a special committee. The House acts upon the theory that there ought to be a standing committee for this purpose, and the rules so provide. Frequently these papers are of a character that demands some one's investigation. A clerk in the department prepares a list, and decides that they should be destroyed, in his opinion. The law provides that Congress shall authorize their destruction before they are destroyed. Some one, both from the Senate and the House, is supposed to and ought to examine the character of papers, and in the main that work is done, and always has been done, by the clerk of the committee.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me so that I may ask a question of his colleague?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. As a matter of fact there ought to be a clerk for this purpose, employed both by the Senate and the House, whose duty would be specifically defined with reference to a report from a joint committee, and that clerk ought to be a lifetime position, as near as possible. In that way we would do away with having two clerks for two separate committees to do the same work. I think that is the method that ought to be pursued. Then we would have a technical man holding the position, probably for life, and Congress could rely absolutely upon his judgment as to what should be destroyed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman that the clerk ought to be for life. I think the clerks of all of these committees ought to retain their places, regardless of a change of chairmanship or of the political majority in the House.

Mr. GARNER. There is a good deal in that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But that never has been the case and will not be right away.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], after his long experience here, believe that most of these papers ought to be destroyed before they are ever prepared, before they are printed?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No. A large share of these papers are reports of some sort. For instance, they destroy applications for money orders. It is necessary that those shall be made, but they become finally of no use. There are many papers in the files of all departments which after a while are to be destroyed, but just at this time it is important that papers relating to the war, which might be valuable, should be examined before they are destroyed upon the recommendation of some clerk in some department who wants to get rid of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman think all of these papers ought to be retained for a reasonable number of years—and I refer now to war papers or any other papers of importance?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All papers of importance ought to be retained probably permanently, and certain papers relating to the war certainly ought not to be destroyed unless it is perfectly clear that they are useless.

I do not think we ought merely to trust the judgment of some clerk in a department to prepare the list. I think it ought to be examined by somebody in the House and somebody in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman from Texas will bring in a resolution here carrying out what he suggests ought to be done, to have one permanent clerk for the two Houses to look into these matters and who will become an expert, I will vote for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let me suggest to both gentlemen that that would mean the House would have nothing to do with it. That would mean that the Senator, as chairman of the joint committee, would name the clerk.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, why?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why? No matter why; it is a fact, and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. The only method would be as the gentleman from Illinois suggested, for the two Committees on Printing to get together and draw up some kind of a law which would authorize the selection of a clerk who would be permanent in nature. That would reach the object to be attained. Otherwise, as the gentleman from Illinois says, the name of the clerk would be dictated by the Senator who was chairman of the Printing Committee.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. Who is the chairman designated as the unwilling chairman of this committee?

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES], I am told.

Mr. GARD. Have there been any meetings of this committee?

Mr. IRELAND. There has been no committee that I am aware of.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman says the gentleman from Indiana is chairman of the committee. Is that all the personnel of the committee, just the chairman?

Mr. IRELAND. I think there are two Members of the House on the committee.

Mr. GARD. Under the former rule I know the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. Talbott, was chairman for a number of years, and my recollection is that there were two other Members on that committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are only two members of the committee.

Mr. GARD. I thought there were two besides the chairman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Republican member or the chairman has not been selected, but he has been agreed upon by the Republican committee on committees, and there is a lot of work for that committee to do in connection with reports which have been already sent in.

Mr. GARD. But up to this time there has been no chairman or no Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers?

Mr. IRELAND. Not since Mr. Talbott's death.

Mr. GARD. Who has been performing the onerous duties of this committee?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have not been performed by the House.

Mr. IRELAND. I know of my own knowledge that these papers have been accumulating. I spent half a day with Mr. Grayson in the document room going through them down here in the basement of the Capitol. There is a tremendous lot of waste stuff there, and they need the room for other purposes.

Mr. GARD. There has been nobody acting on the part of the House on this committee in this present Congress?

Mr. IRELAND. That is my understanding.

Mr. GARD. Does this appropriation carry a messenger, too?

Mr. IRELAND. No, sir.

Mr. GARD. Just a clerk?

Mr. IRELAND. Just a clerk.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

NOMINATION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I nominate MERRILL MOORES, of Indiana, as a member of the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, as chairman.

The question was taken, and the nomination was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

BLASCO IBANEZ.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes in order to make a short statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I announce to the House we have visiting us to-day Blasco Ibanez, whom you all know is the foremost writer of Spanish in the world, the author of the "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and other works with which we are all familiar. It will perhaps be of interest to Members to know that Blasco Ibanez has also been for seven years a member of the Spanish Cortez, or Parliament; that he has always been a republican [applause] and is now—I mean not a Republican as distinguished from Democratic and Republican Parties here [laughter and applause], but a republican as against a monarchial system—and that he has always been a friend and admirer of the United States and its Government, and especially has he advocated and approved the parliamentary and Federal system of this country. Blasco Ibanez will be in the Speaker's room after a little, and he will be very glad indeed to meet all Members of Congress personally, and I am sure it will be a great pleasure for us to meet so distinguished a representative of that which is best in European and Spanish literature, as well as one whom we ought to admire and know better because of his republican and democratic principles. [Applause.]

CAMPS AND CANTONMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 8819.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the conference report on the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 16, 22, 28, 29, 30, and 31.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, and to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "at Camp Taylor, Ky., and in no event later than June 30, 1921"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$236,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives, at a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 8819, an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report, to wit:

Amendments Nos. 1, 2, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40 are simply changes in phraseology.

Amendments Nos. 16, 22, 28, 29, and 30 are likewise corrections of the language.

On amendment No. 3: Provides for the completion of the 60-centimeter railroad at Camp Benning, Ga. Your conferees are of the opinion that this amendment will probably save a considerable sum for the Government in the long run. Hence they recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to said amendment.

On amendment No. 4: This changes the amount appropriated for Camp Benning from $250,000 to $320,000, in compliance with the preceding amendment.

On amendment No. 5: Merely changes the total as required by the adoption of amendments Nos. 3 and 4.

On amendment No. 7: Provides the sale of real estate and buildings at Camp Gordon, Ga., shall not be made before June 30, 1921.

On amendment No. 10: Provides for the construction and completion of steel storage buildings at Camp Normoyle, Tex., so as to provide shelter for the motor trucks located at this camp.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment describes more fully the land to be purchased at Camp Knox, Ky., but does not add to the cost.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment provides for the sale of all real estate and buildings at Camp Taylor when Camp Knox is prepared to take over the Field Artillery School now at Camp Taylor. Your conferees agreed to place a time limit upon this proposition so that the sale of the real estate and buildings at Camp Taylor shall be disposed of not later than June 30, 1921.

On amendment No. 24: Specifies that the sale of Camp Eustis shall not be made prior to June 30, 1921.

On amendment No. 27: Your conferees agreed that the amount to complete the purchase of real estate for Watervliet Arsenal extension, N. Y., be increased over the amount allowed by the Senate to $236,000.

On amendment No. 31: This amendment proposed to strike out the provision for the purchase of real estate and the acquisition of oyster rights at Langley Field, Va., but the Senate recede and the legislation is restored.

On amendment No. 32: This amendment relates to the purchase of the Curtiss-Elmwood plant, at Buffalo, N. Y. Your conferees believed that the language of the Senate amendment makes the provision more specific and provides for a complete settlement of all claims and charges for depreciation, wear and tear, obsolescence, and amortization of the claims of the Curtiss-Elmwood Co. The amount of the appropriation as passed by the House, however, is not affected by the amendment.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment authorizes the expenditure of the unexpended balances of appropriations for "terminal storage and shipping buildings as may be necessary," which were made in the deficiency act of October 6, 1917, so as to provide for the payment of awards to cover the acquisition of certain described real estate at Raritan Arsenal, N. J.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment relates to the purchase of land for Walter Reed Hospital. The purchase was originally provided for in the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, approved July 11, 1919. However, the comptroller rendered a decision to the effect that there were two conflicting provisions in said appropriation bill, one of which prohibited the purchase of any real estate by the War Department and the other for the purchase of land contiguous to the Walter Reed Hospital. The amendment authorizes the purchase of said land.

JULIUS KAHN,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
THOMAS S. CRAGO,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from California if he noticed that in preparing the amendment and acting upon the Senate amendments there was a slight mistake in one of the totals in the paragraph relating to Infantry on page 3 of the bill?

Mr. KAHN. I had noticed that mistake. It was a mistake of $2; but it is a mistake in the total amount, and I believe in construing legislation the totals are never considered in connection with the items themselves. So that I assume there is no serious damage done by the mistake. It is an inadvertence, however.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The mistake was in the Senate amendment, and of a character which the conferees could not correct without making a report subject to a point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly. That is the position of the case. It does not affect any of the legislation whatever.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman understands that the totals in bills carrying appropriations for specific items in specific amounts are not controlling?

Mr. KAHN. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is perfectly certain under the rulings.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to ask the distinguished chairman whether, if his committee had employed this expert $40,000-draftsman in the preparation of this bill, he might not have saved that $2?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think this committee had anything to do with it at all. It was a mistake that was made over in the Senate committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. Well, a $40,000-a-year draftsman is supposed to help the distinguished Senators as well as the distinguished Representatives.

Mr. KAHN. The bill was all right as to amount when it left the House.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. How much more is the appropriation as shown in the conference report over what it was when the bill passed the House?

Mr. KAHN. I think it is nearly, but not quite, $50,000, if I recall correctly.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12610.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. With reference to the situation when we adjourned last night. There was a motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] pending at that time, to strike out the following language on page 11, lines 11 and 12, at the end of the first paragraph:

For labor, tools, and machinery for furniture-repair shop, $10,000.

And pending the vote the question of no quorum was raised, and the committee rose and the House adjourned. Since adjournment we have had some conference upon this matter with the Clerk of the House and with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND]. I wish to state that it is agreeable to all concerned for this item to be transferred from the paragraph in which it now appears, to page 18, in lines 11 and 12, and that it be added to the furniture, material, and repair item of $20,000, making that item $30,000.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not understand what he was saying.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I said to the committee that when we adjourned last night we were taking a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] to strike out the $10,000 item referred to. As a result of the conference with the Clerk and with Mr. IRELAND, it is perfectly agreeable to have this transferred to page 18, to the item for furniture and materials for repairs of the same, making the total of the item $30,000.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] is defeated, I will ask unanimous consent that this item be considered in order when we reach the item on page 18.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it the suggestion of the gentleman that we increase the amount on page 18 by $10,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I want to modify the language so that it will read:

Including not to exceed $12,000 for labor, tools, and machinery for furniture repair shop.

And in line 12 strike out "$20,000" and insert "$30,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was going to ask in reference to labor, tools, and so forth.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We modify the language.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman mean to transfer the language as well as the amount, so as to carry the item in the language in which it is now carried in the present place?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman withdraws his amendment, then what becomes of the matter?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The amendment ought to be adopted. I will state to the committee that if the amendment is adopted we will then offer to amend the section referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that when we adjourned yesterday we were voting on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] and the motion was voted down, but there was not a quorum present, and the House adjourned. When we vote now do we vote on his motion?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Is it the purpose to vote it out here so that we may put it in in the proper paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, before passing this item I will state that the total of the item should be reduced by $10,000. I ask unanimous consent that all totals be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the totals. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, messengers, and janitors to the following committees: Accounts—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $1,000; Agriculture—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $1,000; Appropriations—clerk $4,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, assistant clerk $3,000, assistant clerk and stenographer $2,500, assistant clerks—one $1,900, one $1,800, janitor $1,000; Banking and Currency—clerk $2,000, assistant clerk $1,200, janitor $720; Census—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Claims—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,200, janitor $720; Coinage, Weights, and Measures—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; District of Columbia—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $720; Education—clerk $2,000; Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress—clerk $2,000; Elections No. 1—clerk $2,000, janitor $1,000; Elections No. 2—clerk $2,000, janitor 720; Elections No. 3—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Enrolled Bills—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Flood Control—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Foreign Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $720; Immigration and Naturalization—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $720; Industrial Arts and Expositions—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Insular Affairs—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Interstate and Foreign Commerce—clerk $2,500, additional clerk $2,000, assistant clerk $1,500, janitor $1,000; Irrigation of Arid Lands—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Invalid Pensions—clerk $2,500, stenographer $2,190, assistant clerk $2,000, janitor $1,000; Judiciary—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,600, janitor $1,000; Labor—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Library—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Merchant Marine and Fisheries—clerk $2,000, janitor, $720; Military Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,500, janitor $1,000; Mines and Mining—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Naval Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,500, janitor $1,000; Patents—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Pensions—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,600, janitor $720; Post Offices and Post Roads—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,400, janitor $1,000; Printing—clerk $2,000, janitor $1,000; Public Buildings and Grounds—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,200, janitor $720; Public Lands—clerk $2,000, assistant clerk $1,200, janitor $720; Reform in the Civil Service—clerk $2,000; Revision of the Laws—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Rivers and Harbors—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $1,000; Roads—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Rules—clerk $2,000, assistant clerk $1,500, janitor $720; Territories—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; War Claims—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,200; janitor $720; Ways and Means—clerk $3,000, assistant clerk and stenographer $2,000, assistant clerk $1,900, janitors—one $1,000, one $720; in all, $180,570.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 13, line 13, after the word "clerk," strike out "$2,000" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, by the way, I reserve a point of order against the entire section.

Mr. WALSH. It is too late now.

Mr. LITTLE. Then it is too late for the gentleman from Indiana to reserve the point of order. But I will reserve points of order on what comes after that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am reserving this point of order in order that the gentleman from Kansas may state what the purpose of his amendment is.

Mr. LITTLE. I am not criticizing the gentleman's action.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I thought the gentleman was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kansas can not reserve a point of order at this time.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not have that thought in mind at all—the thought that the gentleman from Indiana suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, after a conference with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who have charge of the bill, this amendment is offered without any objection on their part.

I may state to the House that this Committee on the Revision of the Laws is at work upon a revision of the laws. This work will include, when accomplished and ready to present to the House, all the general laws in force on March 4 last. This is a work, you will understand, of tremendous extent. The committee has undertaken to do this with practically or almost no tools at all. The work has not been done for 46 years, and the committee has fallen into a sort of somnolence; but I felt, of course, that until we had accomplished something there was no reason why we should expect anything, and I have been working with the tools that we had.

This committee is allowed about $4,000 to accomplish this revision. Heretofore there had been an allowance of $20,000 when such things came up; $15,000 for three revisers, and $5,000 for clerk hire. Twice as much would be needed now to equal that then. We have been doing work for $4,000, and I may state to the committee that about one-third of this work is now revised and one-fourth of it is in the hands of the printer, so that you can see we have really accomplished something. The revisers have accomplished about one-third of the work, and one-fourth of it is in the hands of the printer, and most of that is printed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the clerk of this committee do active work in reference to the work of revision?

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I am on my feet to say. I will take that up now. The gentleman brings it to the point. But I want to make my preliminary statement first. I want some day to take the time of the Members of the House to go over this work with them. At present I am not quite ready for that. I do not want to burn my powder too much until we get to that.

The question of the gentleman from Illinois suggests the point, Does the clerk do this work? The chairman has devoted practically all of the funds of this clerkship to the work of revisers. Practically all of that money has gone in that way. I really practically have not had any clerk most of the time in the sense that other chairmen of the committee have had clerks. I have had three men working on this revision. They are revisers.

Now, in order to get them I have had most of the time to sacrifice my clerkship and do most of the clerk's work myself.

I would not have said this if the gentleman from Illinois had not asked me the question. On Sunday I spent 16 hours in doing the work that largely I would want a clerk to do. That is not the first time I have done that, either.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state to the gentleman that when I first came to Congress I served on this committee, and we revised, under Judge Moon, of Pennsylvania, the civil code and the criminal chapter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that if he expects to get a clerk who is really capable of doing this work, he will be extremely fortunate if he gets a man to suit him for $3,000; so that I think the committee would want an answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and that is, whether or not the clerk would be the man who would be expected to do this work. If you expect a man to devote his time and attention to this work exclusively, you would need a man who would cost you at least that much money. You would have to have an able assistant in the codification of these laws—30 volumes or more——

Mr. LITTLE. Thirty-five volumes, including the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SISSON. And to go through all these volumes and bring each of these sections down to almost perfect accuracy, so that Congress will know that all that is contained in the 27 or 35 volumes will be covered. You will have trouble in getting a man for that money. If the gentleman thinks he can get such a man for $3,000, I hope he will be able to do so.

Mr. LITTLE. Most of the time I have practically not had any clerk at all. The pay would be sent to a distance, to a gentleman who was doing the revising, and I would have to do the clerk's work. I have had two lawyers working for me a while who might have filled the bill, but one came down here and got a much better salary, and we could not keep him. The other was a man who was not very well. He was a nervous man, and he was working too hard and could not well hold out, I think. But I think either one of them could have been made to fit the purpose if we had the salary. This clerk could do some of the revising, although I hope to ask the House for further means for revisers.

The reason I have not asked more money for revisers is because I have not found them yet. When I find more good men I shall ask an increase in that fund. What I want now is a clerk who is a lawyer and an editor and everything else—some young man who is ready to begin by hard work, or some older man who does not enjoy active practice but who is a master of the books.

Now, I want him to take some of this burden off my shoulders of going through the revision when it comes in. Everything done so far has been gone through by at least three men, in all, three times. I want this clerk to go through the copy that comes in and compare it, under instructions I will give him—go over it all before it goes to the printer—and I want him to help read the proof on it when it comes back from the printer. He will be expected also to do some revision. I have in mind two or three men that I might possibly get who would, I trust, fill the bill. The gentleman suggests that $3,000 is as little as we ought to have for the compensation of this man, which is true. It ought to be $4,000, but I do not want to get some fellow who is no good and have him saddled on us here. When I get a man, if I find he is worth $4,000, I am going to ask the House to make it $4,000 later on, in a few months, perhaps. If I do not get a man who is worth $4,000, the $3,000 will be enough. This committee, when it does anything, has as important and multifarious duties as any committee in the House, and I think it ought to have a clerk equipped for the work.

Mr. WASON. Has the gentleman any special fund?

Mr. LITTLE. The House contingent fund allows us $4,000 for revising. That has been the case for some years. It used to be $5,000, and before that they allowed $20,000. Instead of asking for more I went to work on the $4,000, and I hardly know myself how I got it done so far, but I have got a part of it done, and a fourth of it in the hands of the printer, and most of it printed now.

Mr. WASON. That is how the gentleman has had three assistants, a clerk, and two others, out of that special fund?

Mr. LITTLE. I just dumped my clerkship in with it, and kept the work going. I have been doing without a personal clerk nearly all the time.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If this clerk's salary is increased, does the gentleman have considerable confidence that he will be able to present to this Congress some plan of codification of the Federal laws within a reasonable period, for the action of the House?

Mr. LITTLE. I have a great deal of confidence that we will do so. I have submitted what I have done to a good many lawyers, some in Congress and some out. I wish the gentleman himself would run it over. I have submitted it to men like Mr. Webb, who was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and they have said to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I withdraw the reservation. I am willing to let it go.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would like to say a word on this.

Mr. LITTLE. Before the gentleman does that I wish to say that Mr. Webb, when he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said this was wonderful work that the revisers were doing, and very successful.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, when I first came to the House, in 1897, there was a commission on codification of the laws of the United States, a commission that lasted a long time and made some reports. Even then it was recognized that there was occasion to revise and codify the laws. Since that time we have had a special committee of the House on the subject of revision of the laws, in addition to the regular committee of the House. That special committee made several reports to the House, and we passed what we called the Criminal Code, and the judiciary title, and possibly something else. Those two were the most important.

When Mr. WATKINS, of Louisiana, was chairman of that committee they did very considerable work, though I think no bill was passed.

It is highly desirable that Members of Congress and other people may have an opportunity to learn what the law is by the examination of a book. You can not do that now. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws. I urged him to accept that chairmanship with the idea that he would go to work, and would have sufficient help to revise the laws, not to change them, but to bring down to date a revision of existing law. I said to him that if he did that, in my belief there was a chance, and possibly more than a bare chance, that the Congress would pass it as a law, even without reading it, if they were satisfied it was only a codification of existing law. I hope it may be done. There is no small thing of greater importance. I have kept track somewhat of the work being done by the chairman and the committee and their assistants, and they are doing good work in the way of really codifying the existing law. Let us hope they will; and I hope in addition to that we may act and pass the law, so that you can find it in a book. In the old Roman days they had to have special counselors, because no one else knew the law, and the old Roman days had nothing on us. [Laughter.] There is not a man on earth to-day who can tell where he will find the statutory law of the United States. There are men who on certain lines know where the law is, but there is no one person who can find all the law without spending years of careful study. Let us be prepared to enact a law that everybody can find, though they may not understand it if we keep on passing what we do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the next paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. That has not been read yet.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been read.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer an amendment. I move, on page 13, line 21, to strike out the sum "$180,570."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee and the chairman to the fact that in this paragraph we are providing for 41 colored janitors, most of whom are to perform in the House Office Building. They do not do janitor service, or much of it, and we all know it. If you will come over to the House Office Building some morning at any time between about 5 o'clock and about 8 o'clock a. m., you will find a horde of janitors and charwomen cleaning up that building. They go into every single office, committee room, and otherwise, and clean it up well every morning, except Sunday morning. No janitor is to be found there on Sunday morning. These 41 so-called extra janitors are, as a matter of fact, merely the door flunkeys of these committee chairmen, and they are not necessary. Why should we have a suave, well-dressed negro porter sitting out at the office door to greet people when they come in? Does it add anything to the dignity of the chairman? Can you not save this expense of these 41 so-called janitors?

Now, we can not deceive the people on this. The people of this country know that every single chairman of every one of these numerous committees has first his private secretary whom Congress gives him and then in addition to that he has his clerk whom Congress gives him. They are two employees under him to do his work. And then in addition, if he is chairman of a committee, besides this secretary and this clerk he has the committee clerk. Then in some cases there is an assistant committee clerk and in some more cases a second assistant committee clerk, and then there is this janitor for the committee, but more especially for the chairman, all under the jurisdiction of the chairman.

Now, let us scrutinize one of these committees, for instance. On page 12 of the bill, lines 18 and 19, appears the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. How many times has that committee met in the Sixty-sixth Congress? Not a single time. That committee chairman has his secretary. He has his Member's clerk. He has his committee clerk, drawing $2,000 a year. What has he done in the Sixty-sixth Congress? Not a thing outside of the private work of the chairman. What work has there been for him? Practically nothing in the nature of committee work. And then he has this negro janitor, who sits out at his door, and so on, in addition to all these employees. Is my good friend, the distinguished economist from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who speaks of saving a billion dollars on the estimates in this Congress and who decides what legislation is to pass, going to stand for all this?

Oh, it is no excuse to say that the Democrats have had them; it is no excuse to say that the Democrats inherited them from our Republican friends. They are here, they are unnecessary, they are useless, and they are expensive to the taxpayers, the people of this Nation. Is it not time that our friends, the Republicans, and we Democrats on the other side of the aisle should wake up and stop it? I know that Members fortunate enough to be chairmen of committees like to have that porter out at the door to meet his constituents when they come here, to bow and scrape and invite them in, but your constituents, if they are like mine, would prefer for you not to have them and for you to cut that expense off their taxes. Why, they draw a salary of from $1,000 down to $720, and the one that draws $1,000 salary gets $240 bonus, making $1,240 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment, knowing that it is useless to put the matter to a vote, as there is no chance to stop this expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks provided in the foregoing paragraph shall be under the direction of the Clerk of the House of Representatives at any time after the termination of the Congress during which they were appointed.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state to the committee the reason for inserting this provision in the bill. There seems to be some misunderstanding with reference to this provision. Many think it is for the purpose of giving control to the Clerk of the House over the various committee clerks. That is not the purpose except in a limited way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order, in order to raise it, that it is legislation and not in order.

Mr. IRELAND. The point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist on his point of order?

Mr. DOWELL. I will withdraw it in view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] has reserved it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the provision reads:

Clerks provided in the foregoing paragraph shall be under the direction of the Clerk of the House of Representatives at any time after the termination of the Congress during which they were appointed.

"After the termination of the Congress." There is that lapse of time from the termination of Congress until the new Congress is elected. In that interim there is no one to whom the clerks are responsible or to whom they have to answer. They hold over; their salaries are continued; they are annual employees. There should be some one to whom they may look for guidance and to whom they shall answer for the discharge of their duties.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. The chairman of the committee may be defeated for Congress. There may be an entirely new committee, and there is no committee in existence in the interval. The chairman is defeated and Congress does not meet until December, and so the employees are without anyone to whom they are responsible.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think I can give a better explanation for the insertion of the item, because I can go back a ways in history. Of course, there is no chairman of a committee at the end of a Congress, but the annual clerks remain on the pay roll. Some Congresses ago the annual clerk and janitor told the former chairman of the committee to go to ——, although they were supposed to be under his control. They said they would do no work of any kind either for him or the House; that there was no way of taking them off the roll. They were on the roll, and they would stay there until a new Congress came in. I am not sure whether on that occasion there was a change of majorities; but they would go out when the new Congress came in anyhow, and did not propose to pay any attention to the House or the former chairman who had appointed them.

That matter was corrected as to janitors by the provision now in the bill, on the top of page 14. It was inserted in the bill long ago, but was not put in for the purpose of requiring these committee janitors to do ordinary janitor work, but so that the chief janitor or doorkeeper having control of them would require them to do the same character of work which the former chairman of the committee who appointed them wanted them to do.

I take it that the purpose of this provision was that at the end of this Congress, for instance, when there is no chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if the distinguished gentleman—and I use the term properly—Mr. Shields should say, "I do not propose to do any work between now and the meeting of the next Congress," if this provision is in he will do the work or come off the pay roll. If the provision is not in, the clerks of that committee could refuse to do any clerical work for the Committee on Appropriations preparing for the next session of Congress.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Suppose a committee clerk was willing to remain and do the work, and the Clerk of the House should say to him, "We do not need you." Under this provision he could dismiss him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Possibly that is true, but that will not be done. It leaves them in somebody's control.

Mr. DOWELL. It seems to me that it may be as easily done as for the clerk to rebel and say he will not do any work. The only purpose I see of this provision is to give the Clerk of the House the power to dismiss any clerks he desires to because he may not have any need for them. All this does is to give him the power to discharge the clerk at any time he sees fit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He can not discharge him except for insubordination.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no provision to that effect. If it is the intention to dispense with all the clerks, I want to say that many are busy during vacation, and it seems to me we are giving the power to some one else to dispense with the services of the clerks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was chairman of a committee for many years and helped put in the original provision about the janitors.

Mr. DOWELL. If the interpretation of this by the Clerk would be the same as that of the gentleman from Illinois, there would be no question about it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa that the very provision that he is now saying might be construed into this language was asked by the Clerk, but the committee did not think it wise to put it in. I wish to state further that it is the duty under the law for the clerks of these committees to file with the Clerk of the House all of their files and papers. It has been established by many concrete cases that they absolutely not only do not file them but have refused to do that very thing, and there is no one to compel them to do it. It has resulted in loss of many valuable papers, and it has resulted in much confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only intention of the committee in putting this clause in is for the purpose of maintaining good order with reference to the conduct of these clerks and with reference to the business of committees during this interim. Somebody should be charged with this responsibility.

Mr. IRELAND. Can the gentleman inform the House why the Clerk should have any greater authority over these clerks to committees than the chairmen of the committees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the trouble. They are not the chairmen and there are no chairmen to committees. The Congress has ended, and in many cases the chairmen may be defeated. The Congress ends on March 4.

Mr. IRELAND. Absolutely—granted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And the clerk to the committee continues by virtue of the law, for he is an annual employee, and he has nobody to answer to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the gentleman think that the word "direction" here gives the authority to discharge these men?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is not by virtue of the word "direction" that the chairman of the committee has the right to hire and discharge men. It is power conferred in another way.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would expect—and I expect that every Member of this House would admit—that if there was some one to whom these clerks should answer and any one of them should become insubordinate and would absolutely neglect the duties imposed upon him, waste the property of the Government, lose the papers that are of value to subsequent Congresses, somebody ought to have the right to discharge him.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think so, too; but I doubt if that authority is carried by the word "direction."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is absolute necessity for it now. There has been necessity for this for many years—that somebody have responsibility over these clerks who can protect the property that belongs to this Congress and that is of so much value to an incoming Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. Why not insert a provision terminating their services with the Congress?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Because of the fact that there is need of them.

Mr. IRELAND. It is the gentleman's thought that they should be under the direction of the Clerk rather than under the direction of the chairman?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But there is no chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois to insist upon the point of order?

Mr. IRELAND. I am so minded at present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see any reason for further discussion. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. IRELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Alabama has demanded the regular order.

Mr. IRELAND. Then I renew my point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana concede the point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would like to have the gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. It is new legislation, it is contrary to existing law, and it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I may or may not be right in my contention, but I desire to be heard for a moment upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is perfectly patent, perhaps more because of the discussion that has been had than what appears in the clause itself, that this is in the interest of economy, is in the interest of saving expenditures, is in the interest of good government and good conduct of the business of the United States, and for the life of me I can not see how any man could be so jealous of a little bit of jurisdiction over these men, when his jurisdiction has expired, as to offer objection to it, for the reason that there is no Congress during the time that the Clerk has jurisdiction over these men. There is no chairman, and by virtue of law these men being made annual employees they go adrift without anybody to answer to, and even defy requests of the officer who is charged with the responsibility of taking care of the files. It is the duty of these clerks to file all papers in their several committees with the Clerk of the House. They refuse to do that, and they defy him, and he can not get them, and very often it has resulted in loss not only to the Government but in very great confusion in the investigation of unfinished business before the committee that comes up again in the next Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course there may be a number of Representatives elected who might like to have this clerk at home during the interim to impress upon their constituents the importance of the position here.

There are repeated cases where these committees have defied the Clerk when requested, under the statute which makes it his business to take over these bills, to furnish or bring them to his office for the purpose of examining them or storing them.

Mr. SISSON. And is it not true also, after a defeated Congress has adjourned and there is nobody to control these clerks with reference to papers belonging to the committee, that in some cases the books and bills that should have been listed were never turned over to the succeeding clerk and succeeding chairman because there was nobody to control it?

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it the intention of the committee that the authority granted here to the Clerk is for the purpose of the Clerk directing the work of the clerks of the committees during the vacation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely. The fact is they pay no attention to it. They abandon their work and yet they are receiving their pay.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully suggest that this is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the discussion is wandering very far afield.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is myself, but I still insist that the paragraph is in favor of retrenchment of expenses and the conservation of the property of the United States, and I think it ought to be in order even if it should be held not to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks very clearly it is legislation and can be justified only under the Holman rule, and it does not come under that rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 13, after line 21, insert:

"Appropriations in the foregoing paragraph shall not be available for the payment of any clerk or assistant clerk to a committee who does not, after the termination of the Congress during which he was appointed, perform his duties under the direction of the Clerk of the House."

Mr. IRELAND. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would like for the gentleman to state what his point of order is.

Mr. IRELAND. The same as before.

Mr. BLANTON. I respectfully ask for the regular order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This is a limitation of expenditures and comes clearly under the rule, and I do not think I care even to argue it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. This is the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman only reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to proceed for five minutes under a reservation of the point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. I would like to ask the Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a Member reserves the point of order and the regular order is called for, does not that stop debate under the reservation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is the better practice where a gentleman reserves a point of order that he be permitted to proceed for five minutes, but if the point of order is made and the regular order——

Mr. BLANTON. May I suggest to the Chair that this is overruling precedents of the House for 50 years?

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair thinks under a reservation of a point of order there is probably no time limit except in the discretion of the Chair unless the regular order is demanded, but if there is a reservation of the point of order the Chair thinks the Member should be permitted to proceed for five minutes, as possibly the explanation which will be given by the gentleman in charge of the bill might induce the withdrawal of the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. While I think he ought to be given time, I hope the Chair will not rule that as a matter of right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not make that ruling unless some gentleman insists——

Mr. BLANTON. I have insisted and have demanded the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is, Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. IRELAND. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. The gentleman my colleague from Illinois made a point of order on the original paragraph. He is chairman of the Committee on Accounts. The law provides for a Committee on Accounts after the final adjournment of Congress. Now, does the gentleman from Indiana think that it would be desirable to take away from my colleague when he is named, as he probably will be, the chairman ad interim of the Committee on Accounts command over the clerks of that committee and transfer it to the Clerk of the House, as will be done by the amendment proposed here?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, that would not be done; it could not be done——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would be done. I do not know what practical thing would be done, but what legal thing would be done.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it would not be done, for the reason that under the paragraph as originally drawn it just simply gives the Clerk of the House the direction of these clerks during the interim.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I know, but there is a chairman of the Committee on Accounts during the interim——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is chairman and he is renamed by the Speaker and he is continued. Now, is it desirable, the Committee on Accounts largely through its clerk passing upon all accounts of the officers of the House, including the Clerk of the House, to say that the Clerk of the House shall direct this committee in the interim in preference to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there is no such intention as that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know, but that is what it says.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it does not say that. A reasonable construction of the language is that the Clerk shall direct these men where committees are inactive. If the gentleman will read here——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know what the theory is, and I fully agree with it, but here is an actual case. Now, there ought to be an exception where there is any committee continued by law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman thinks there is any fear of any conflict between the chairman of the committee and the Clerk, I absolutely have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know why the gentleman from Mississippi should insist, when I have the floor, that I should yield to him in preference to somebody else.

Mr. SISSON. I was not endeavoring to get any preference.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; the gentleman was.

Mr. SISSON. I was not endeavoring to get any preference. I was endeavoring, if I could do so, to help the gentleman in reference to the very matter that is under consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I knew the gentleman was, and I should have yielded to him just as soon as I could, but the gentleman ought not to get vexed because I had not yielded a part of my time to him.

Mr. SISSON. I am not so easily vexed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman was very easily vexed then, though not usually.

Mr. SISSON. I asked the gentleman to yield, and he repeatedly declined to do it or absolutely ignored me.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I had several gentlemen talking to me all the time, and I think I had the control of my own five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, has the point of order been decided? I made the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is too late.

Mr. HAUGEN. I made it at the very first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman or hear the gentleman. The reservation of the point of order was withdrawn.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And I yield to my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] reserved the point of order, and it was understood the point of order was made, but the point of order was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets he did not see the gentleman rise and make the point of order. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. And after all "the gentleman from Iowa" should be protected in his rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not obtain recognition from the Chair. The Chair did not see the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is recognized.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say, with reference to the clerk of the Committee on Accounts, that, so far as I am concerned, when we were discussing this matter in the committee it did not occur to me that the duties of the Committee on Accounts continued until the next Congress, and that they had the duty of auditing and passing upon claims in the meantime between the two terms of Congress. I therefore think that it would be doing the Committee on Accounts an injustice not to permit the chairman of the committee, who has duties to perform in the meantime, to have control of the clerk and other officers in his committee. I would, therefore, be very glad if the chairman would accept an amendment that would permit the Committee on Accounts to do that.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] is recognized.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the following amendment to strike out the period and insert a colon, and insert these words after the amendment offered:

Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IRELAND to the amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: At the end of the amendment strike out the period and insert a colon and insert: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I wish to emphasize an additional point in support of this amendment, namely: If the resolution should be adopted as offered by the chairman of the committee, the Clerk of the House, who is a disbursing officer, would have control of the clerk of the Committee on Accounts, who would manage practically the administrative examination of the accounts of the Clerk of the House, who is a disbursing officer. That plan would combine the authorizing power and the paying power in one and the same agency, which is a very bad practice.

Mr. IRELAND. It would be, in effect, as a hypothetical case, giving a man the authority to approve and audit his own expenditures under his own orders and control. It perhaps is not, as it seems, a presumptuous usurpation of authority, but I recognize the evil exists and perhaps may be cured in this manner. But it is certainly an abdication of rights on the part of the House, but perhaps warranted.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, it seems that the gentleman from Illinois now has his troubles nicely ironed out; but I would like to know something about the chairmen of the other committees of this House, Members who will be renominated and reelected. In my own case I have now hanging over me a resolution of my committee directing me to prepare a tabulated record with the reports of all legislation acted upon, so that future committees may know just what disposition has been made of the bills. In the presence of this situation I would like to know what has arisen to demand that a Member of Congress with a clerk of capability, also a sworn officer of the Government, would not feel as responsible to duty as the Clerk of the House?

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman not think that the amendment in the shape it now is would be a protection to the clerk, say, of the gentleman's committee after the 4th of March?

Mr. FOCHT. Certainly not, for this proposal is a clear surrender of the right of a Congressman to maintain control of the position of clerk at the end of a session, even though he has been reelected. I am not bringing the present Clerk of the House into the question, for I hold him in high esteem and, in fact, is a friend, but he may not be here and all sorts of contingencies arise to confound and confuse the situation, which is now perfectly satisfactory and simple enough when competent clerks are appointed.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose the chairman is not reelected.

Mr. FOCHT. I agree that that would make all the difference in the world, and is exactly the point about which I am making this contention. I think, however, that all the Republicans are going to be reelected, and I feel they have pride enough in their committees to take care of the business referred to them without submitting to this unusual proposition of turning over their power of selection to the Clerk of the House, whoever he may be.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, if a gentleman is reelected he might not be chairman of the committee again, or he might be promoted to some other important committee.

Mr. FOCHT. Or possibly demoted. My observations are on the presumption that the House will be Republican and that any gentleman who is now chairman can be and should be reelected if he so desires.

Mr. BLANTON. That is such a violent assumption that it does not need an answer.

Mr. FOCHT. Like a good many things the gentleman says, you can not see the relevancy—in fact, the woods for the trees.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is now chairman of the Committee on War Claims, where the clerk has a great deal of work to do between the sessions of Congress. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that the clerk ought to be under his jurisdiction during this vacation?

Mr. FOCHT. If I am reelected, I certainly do, and would surely discharge the obligation my committee has imposed upon me and which I have just recited.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This would put it practically under the jurisdiction of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whereas without this the clerk will be under the jurisdiction of nobody.

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, yes; the clerk would. The clerk would have a fine chance of being retained by me or my committee if the business was not attended to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. After the 4th of March, a year from now, there will be no chairmen of committees in fact, although in one sense the gentleman will remain chairman. The clerk will be under the control of no one. Now, if the Clerk of the House is given control he will tell the clerks of that committee to do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the former chairman of the committee, wanted them to do.

Mr. FOCHT. No; not "former chairman," for I expect to be chairman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but you will not be chairman during the vacation.

Mr. FOCHT. But I will surely be a Congressman if elected. The fact is you are trying here to get at something and to save some money, and this has my approval, but it seems you are not able to solve the mystery. The purpose seems to have become tangled and confused. Furthermore, it is impossible to place the control of these clerks in the hands of the Clerk of the House without taking the power away from Congressmen who are now chairmen of committees and who will be reelected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We want to save money, but perhaps we can not do it by this method.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Sergeant at Arms: Sergeant at Arms, $6,500; deputy sergeant at arms, $2,500; cashier, $4,000; financial clerk, $2,700; bookkeeper, $2,200; deputy sergeant at arms in charge of pairs, $1,800; pair clerk and messenger, $1,800; messenger, $1,400; stenographer and typewriter, $900; skilled laborer, $840; hire of horse and wagon, $600; in all, $25,240.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on line 10, that the salary of the bookkeeper be made $2,460.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMPSON: Page 18, line 10, after the word "bookkeeper," strike out the figures "$2,200" and insert "$2,460."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order on the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of W. Ray Loomis for services as editor and compiler of the Weekly Compendium and Monthly Compendium and as assistant in the document room, $2,500.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to some of the results of the employment of extra men by resolution, prepared by those of good intentions, but without opportunity for what I believe to be proper investigation.

A few days ago a resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a minority messenger who was to be a doorkeeper at a salary of $1,500. The result is that that man is employed as a doorkeeper on the soldiers' roll—a roll created by an act of Congress, a law to provide for the veterans of the Union Army; and up to this time few, if any, very few except soldiers, have ever been employed, and the salary of each of them is only $1,180, whereas this special minority employee is to receive $1,500 for doing the same work. A number of men similarly employed, largely around the House end of the Capitol, now, by virtue of selections made by the committee on patronage, are returned soldiers of the World War. Those places are occupied by young men, some of them with one leg, some with one arm, the preference being given to disabled men, and the salary of each is $1,180, whereas a special employee performing similar service receives $1,500. And it develops that after this place for this special employee was created by resolution, fixing his salary at $1,500, he is one of three men on one door in the gallery, and their combined salaries, including the bonus they receive, is $4,580, all employed at one door.

A few days ago we put through a resolution here, as I believe, without proper consideration, for the employment of still another minority employee with no work whatever to do, to fill a place, or what was called "a place," that had not been occupied during this Congress, fixing the salary at $1,800. And, more than that, it was made retroactive to the first day of last September; and by virtue of that resolution the man put into the place will receive approximately $800 for sitting around the House doing nothing, waiting for the passage of that resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, although I do not think I will use it all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I would like to hear the gentleman speak five minutes, I do not object. I would like to ask him a question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think all these things that he has recounted are any more extravagant on the part of his party than the item which we have just recently passed, of carrying on the pay roll 41 extra janitors for the House Office Building, some of whom, I understand, are young ladies?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Texas that possibly some unnecessary janitors are to be employed.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will touch on that feature of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But as was clearly shown to the gentleman from Texas, and as the rest of the House fully understood before, many of these employees are not properly named. They perform other work, and as far as my knowledge extends most if not all of the janitors do necessary work.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think it is time for us to name them properly?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I object to being interrupted further without my permission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And therefore they ought to be on the roll. The gentleman from Texas told us this morning that the people throughout the country can not be deceived. I am very glad, listening to some of the speeches in the House, to know that the country can not be deceived by them.

Now, as to the particular matter the reading of which has been concluded, I wish to speak of the compensation of a man for services as editor and compiler of the Weekly Compendium and as assistant in the document room. I think those who have knowledge of the matter are satisfied that the Compendium is of no value whatever; that the information it pretends to give is not of great value; that more information, better arranged, is carried in the Daily Calendar, and that providing for an editor of the Weekly and Monthly Compendium is simply providing for a man a job that he would otherwise be unable to get. Certainly there is no opportunity for him to employ himself on this kind of work when the Congress is not in session, and it is a waste of money to provide $2,500, a large part of which will be paid him after the adjournment of the Sixty-sixth Congress, when in all probability several months will elapse before the opening of the next Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does not the gentleman from Michigan know that Mr. Loomis, who is mentioned in the bill, is also an assistant in the document room, and that he keeps the record of all of the bills introduced in both branches of Congress?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I know something of the work done by Mr. Loomis. It was formerly done by a man on the regular roll, in a position filled in the regular way, and who received, as I remember, about $1,600. This provision was passed as a special favor to Mr. Loomis, who could be attached to the pay roll in no other way. A title was given him involving work that was altogether unnecessary, and in my judgment the salary, even if he were to be employed, was improperly raised from about $1,600 to $2,500.

Now, I do not know what impression my remarks have made on those who have listened to me, but in view of the fact that a place was made for this man unnecessarily, that the Compendium can not be published, there being no use for it and no material out of which it can be made after the termination of the Congress, it seems to me an appropriation to pay his salary only to the end of the Congress ought to be substituted for the $2,500. And in order to test the temper of the House and to see if its Members really wish to economize, although they are spending $4,580 for three doorkeepers in the gallery where one is enough, I offer an amendment which will provide for the payment of this man to the end of the Congress—to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,687.49."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 15, line 20, strike out all of lines 20, 21, and 22 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"For compensation of W. Ray Loomis for services as editor and compiler of the Weekly Compendium and Monthly Compendium and as assistant in the document room until March 4, 1921, $1,687.49."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment which I made, and I presume I have five minutes on the amendment which I have just offered. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the law creating this position. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman prevails it will accomplish nothing, for under the House resolution creating this position and fixing this salary that was passed some time ago it is provided that he shall receive this compensation, $2,500 per annum, until otherwise provided by law; so if he is not paid by virtue of the appropriation in this bill, he will be paid out of the contingent fund. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it would amount to nothing, for if not carried in this appropriation bill it will be paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Indiana is not entirely right. This gentleman was employed under a resolution which provides that he shall be employed "until further ordered," and so forth. A resolution of a Congress without those words has no force beyond the life of the Congress which passes it. Those who look over the accounts and are responsible for paying the money would not be permitted to pay the money beyond the life of the Congress except for the inclusion of the words "until further ordered," which words give the Committee on Appropriations authority to hang an appropriation for a further length of time if the committee wish to do so. But a resolution even with those words does not create a permanent position which takes action by the House to dispose of it. The resolution is good only during the life of the Congress, and if the Committee on Appropriations fail or refuse to take advantage of the words "until further ordered," the salary stops at the end of the Congress enacting the resolution.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken with reference to the provision of the law. It is not "until further ordered," but the provision is that there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law this amount of money. So, if the gentleman desires to reduce the salary of this employee, or if he desires to abolish it, he should make some effort with reference to the amendment or repeal of the provision. This is fixed law, and if the gentleman desires to accomplish anything he should seek to repeal this law or amend it as it now stands.

But aside from that I hope this item will be permitted to remain as it is.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The work that is being done by this young man is a very important work and does not conclude with the termination of the Congress. Aside from that, the work stated in this paragraph is not all the work that this young man does. He does a lot of work with reference to the document room other than that here specified, and by reason of his knowledge, information, and affability he is of great service to the Members of the House. I say this not because he is a partisan friend of mine, for he comes from the other side of the House, but I am willing to give him credit for being a faithful servant—doing well that which he is asked to do and that which he was appointed to do under this resolution. I do not know how many Members appreciate the Compendium, but it is a splendid reference work, not only to tell what is past but what is present, showing the condition of any bill pending in either the House or Senate, and stating what finally becomes of it. This involves a great deal of labor and research, and I insist that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan can in no event accomplish what he desires to accomplish, and it should be defeated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] will be recognized first, to speak on his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. May I suggest to the Chair that the gentleman from Michigan offered an amendment and spoke upon it, and then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was recognized to speak against it. Now I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is in error. The gentleman from Michigan spoke on a pro forma amendment, and after that he withdrew it and offered a substantive amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not understand that. I only want to be sure not to lose my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully insist that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has a wrong idea as to the force and effect of a House resolution even in the form in which he reads it. A resolution in that form has force only during the Congress which passed it. I wish to read a decision of the comptroller to that effect. This was rendered by William Lawrence, first comptroller, in 1884. He said:

> The power of the House of Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress ceased at noon of March 4, 1883, after which the resolution of March 3, 1883, was inoperative, and hence only gave employment and right to compensation to and including March 4, 1883.

That is taken from the syllabus of the case, and the comptroller goes on to say that a resolution—and I get my information by reading that; it is not original with me—that a resolution by a Congress is not a law; that it dies with the Congress that passes it; it has force only during the Congress which passes it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from Michigan, I have no doubt, desires to be exactly right, and what he has read was at one time the law. Eight years ago it was changed, and since that time it is not the law. I want to call his attention to the statute:

> Hereafter the payments made from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts shall be deemed, held, and taken, and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all the departments and officers of the Government.

By reason of that, as I am informed from sources I consider reliable, where salaries are paid out of the contingent fund, until otherwise provided it is a continuous obligation on the contingent fund, and as long as there remains a contingent fund it must be paid out of that fund.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. A job and compensation for it can be continued if the Committee on Appropriations chooses to take advantage of the words "until further ordered by law" and Congress approves of the recommendation of the committee and provides the money.

What the gentleman from Indiana has read relates to paying out money, after vouchers have been approved by the Committee on Accounts, whose duty it is to oversee the matter. When that approval, appearing by indorsements on the papers, reaches the official who has the money and the responsibility of paying it out, payment by him is lawful and he is protected; it is a proper expenditure of money as far as he is concerned. But that has no bearing whatever on the ruling of Comptroller Lawrence in 1884, to the effect that a resolution has force and effect only during the life of the Congress that passes it. What the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] reads does not conflict in any respect with the comptroller's decision. The words "until further ordered" do not continue the resolution in force beyond the life of the Congress; they do, however, authorize or permit the committee to recommend and the Congress itself to appropriate money to pay for services extending beyond the life of the Congress. Those words enable the Chair to overrule a point of order if one be made against an item like this in an appropriation bill; it is not "contrary to existing law." The law read by the gentleman prescribes the manner in which checks and vouchers shall be certified and indorsed, and that, being so approved by certification and indorsement of certain officials, payment of them will be proper and the official making such payment will be protected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment; that is, strike out the figures "$1,687.49" in the amendment and insert in lieu thereof "$2,495."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment of Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Strike out the figures "$1,687.49" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,495."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am with the gentleman from Michigan on every proposition of economy that he can suggest to this House where it is real economy, but why on earth he wants to jump on one of the most efficient employees in this House I can not understand, unless it was disclosed in his partisan statement made that the gentleman comes from the Democratic side of the House. If the gentleman from Michigan will make an investigation, I am sure he will find that both of our efficient friends—Joel Grayson, who is a real expert and a most efficient employee of this House, and the gentleman he seeks to attack, W. Ray Loomis, in the document room—are Republicans in politics. Mr. Grayson is universally recognized as an expert and one of the most efficient employees in this Capitol. You can go to the document room and of the thousands of bills that have been introduced and various committee reports and other public documents and laws that are to be found there, call for any particular one of them, and Grayson immediately can tell one of the employees what number it is and where to find it.

It saves every Member of Congress lots of time. It saves our secretaries lots of time searching for any particular document we want. W. Ray Loomis is another employee of that kind. When Grayson is not there you get the same information almost from W. R. Loomis. What on earth would our friend from Massachusetts, the efficient Congressman, JOSEPH WALSH, do every morning if it was not for this Compendium, when he is seeking to find out the present status of various pieces of legislation before the House? He gets the Compendium, finds exactly what has been done, knows its present status, and where to go to get the various documents concerning it.

I want to say that it is very valuable to a man who is looking up bills and documents and has much to do in the preparation for transacting the business before the House. Take the chairman of any committee who has charge of legislation, and he looks to the Compendium largely. Go to the reading clerk and ask him about any matter that is coming before the House and its status, and he in many cases refers to the Compendium. And yet our friend from Michigan is willing, as I say, on the Agricultural Committee to give 754 messengers to the Agricultural Department and 76 watchmen to the Secretary's office, and yet wants to cut down the salary of such an efficient man as W. Ray Loomis to $1,687 for more than a year's service. Why, it is more than a year to March 4, 1921, and yet he wants to cut this man's salary down to $1,687 from now until that time. Yet he will vote to pay most of the 41 extra janitors for the House Office Building in this bill, a section we have just passed, over $1,000 plus the $240 bonus per annum.

He wants to keep these 41 janitors on the pay roll, and yet he says because W. Ray Loomis came from the Democratic side of the House his salary should be cut to $1,687 for more than a year's work.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did I understand the gentleman to make the assertion as a statement of fact or as a guess that I make use of this Weekly and Monthly Compendium?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that there is not a single piece of legislation that ever comes on the floor of this House from one week's end to the other concerning which both the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] do not know every single thing, and they could not know about it unless they used this splendid Compendium.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is mistaken. I do not use the Compendium.

Mr. BLANTON. How on God's earth the gentleman gets his unlimited information otherwise I do not know.

Mr. KITCHIN. Perhaps he would be more accurate if he did use it.

Mr. BLANTON. Possibly. I want to say that this money is well spent by Congress in paying the salaries of not only Mr. Grayson, but Mr. Loomis. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment. I offered it merely as a pro forma amendment, in order to be able to answer the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not offer it as a pro forma amendment. It was reported from the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I agree with all the gentleman from Texas has said with reference to the efficiency of Mr. Joel Grayson, who for 45 years has been a valued and trusted employee of this House, and to Mr. W. Ray Loomis, an assistant in the document room. I am very much surprised to know that so many Members of Congress appear not to be informed with reference to the valuable compilation known as the Weekly and Monthly Compendium.

Mr. Loomis began the publication of the Compendium about two years ago, when he saw the need of something of this sort to keep Members posted on what was going on in both Houses. Previous to his efforts in the matter nothing on this scale had ever been attempted. New features were added by the compiler from month to month, and by this gradual scheme of development the Compendium has grown until it is regarded as perhaps the most comprehensive legislative reference guide in any parliamentary body in the world.

The compiler does his work without the aid of a single assistant, and, while he is as hard-worked an individual as there is in the Capitol, he has never asked for any help in preparing these two publications.

In addition to getting out the Compendium publications, weekly and monthly, Mr. Loomis keeps all records of public bills, documents, reports, resolutions, and laws in the document room of the House. I understand there are two men who do this work in the Senate document room, one to index House publications and the other to index Senate publications. When one considers that Mr. Loomis has so far this Congress had to index and classify almost 18,000 bills and resolutions, as well as several thousand other publications, one appreciates how much work this man performs in this respect alone.

Scores of Members of Congress seek out this man to ask him questions about pending legislation. It can be readily seen that Mr. Loomis must have a very unusual memory to be able to reel off numbers as readily as he does, since there are in the neighborhood of 20,000 publications, each having a different number.

Not only that but this man must carry numbers in his head dating back to former Congresses; he must remember the numbers of measures, some of which may be known by a dozen different titles. It seems to me that this work alone is worth at least as much salary as is provided for him in this appropriation bill.

Mr. Loomis's work on the Compendium publications speaks for itself. I understand that about 500 letters, most of them from Members of Congress, have been written to him, praising him for his undertaking. Most of the newspaper men in Washington have the Compendium at their sides at all times.

But of course the most vital thing to be considered is whether the Members of Congress find the Compendium useful in their offices, and I think that has been demonstrated time and again. Several times the question of the usefulness of the Compendium has come up on the floor of the House, and whenever a vote has been taken on the matter the result has been practically unanimous in favor of Mr. Loomis's work.

A great feature of the Compendium is that each monthly issue is indexed down to the date of publication and is accumulative. The new issues carry comprehensive data on legislative measures which have had action of any kind during the Congress, containing all the information the previous monthly publication had plus what has transpired in both branches of Congress in the meantime. As everyone knows, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD index comes out every two weeks or so.

It serves the purpose of only recording the happenings in Congress during this limited period of two weeks or so. Suppose a Member is looking for reference to some bill. In which of the many indexes will he look to find it? If he knew the date, he would not have to look in the index. Not knowing the date, he is at loss to know in which of the many indexes he can find what he wants. He can only resign himself to look through each index separately, and there are not many who can spare the time or have the patience to do that. The RECORD indexes differ from the Compendium in that they contain limited information only on what has transpired in Congress during that period intervening since the last publication, while, as I have explained before, the Compendium is a consolidated volume.

Every bill and joint resolution of a public nature receiving some action during the Congress is indexed in the Monthly Compendium under a limited number of subjects. When a bill is first reported it goes in the index, and each succeeding step is recorded from month to month, down to the law number and date of approval. Once an item finds place in the Compendium, it stays there as a matter of recording what has been done.

It contains a list of all resolutions introduced seeking investigation, regardless of whether any action on them has been taken; gives subject, number of resolution, name of author, and information as to final disposition, listed under headings of agency of investigation specified.

It contains a list of laws and public resolutions enacted during the Congress, with date of approval, number of law, very brief synopsis of text, and bill number.

It contains a synopsis of "riders" in important appropriation measures, arranged in such a way as to tell the searcher what law and on what page the item can be found. Each item is also embodied in the main subject index of the Compendium. To show the extent to which riders appear in these annual supply bills, it is only necessary to state that in six appropriations laws enacted in one month alone there were 225 items not having to do with the appropriation of money.

It contains a history of omnibus pension bills during each session of the current Congress, giving date each bill was introduced, number of the House report, date of passage in House, number of Senate report, date of passage in Senate, number of conference reports, date of approval by the President, and number of law. Senate and House bills are compiled on separate pages.

It contains a numerical status of all bills and joint resolutions acted upon during the Congress, given under four headings, as follows: "House bills," "House joint resolutions," "Senate bills," and "Senate joint resolutions." The numbers of the bills are in rotation. When the number of a public bill or resolution is not to be found, it will be evident that the bill for which information is sought never got further than the committee. If the bill got out of the committee, it will be found listed, together with the status of the bill on the date of publication of the Compendium. If the bill has become a law, the number of the law is given, and in every event there is a reference character in the last column to show where the complete status can be found in the main subject index of the Compendium. The numerical list enables one to tell how far the bill has gone, while the main subject index goes further and gives history, as explained previously. Sometimes the Member has only the number of the bill and does not know the title or anything else about it. By this system he can easily and quickly locate the information desired.

Other transactions of Congress are recorded from time to time of a miscellaneous character, intended to assist the Member in his search for legislative information or to record something of unusual significance.

What makes the Compendium so complete is that it takes into account action on bills in both the Senate and House. A bill is reported out in the Senate and record of the transaction is duly entered in the Compendium—the number of the bill, the name of the introducer, the number of the report, the date of the report, the date of passage in the Senate, the number of the House report, the date of passage in the House, the date of sending to conference (if such action is taken), the number of the conference report, the date of submitting the conference report, the date of the approval of the conference report in both Houses, the date of submission to the President, the date of approval by the President, and the number of the law.

I know of no other current publication that carries a complete list of the laws. If the Member is looking for a law "approved on such and such a date," he can find it in a minute in the Compendium. He can do this also in the session statutes, but not for several months after the session has ended. The list of laws in the Compendium is extended from month to month as fast as the laws are approved.

So far as known no other Government publication lists "riders," which go into appropriation bills by the hundreds during each Congress.

Buried down as they are in the midst of money items, it is often a problem to find what one is looking for, for the subject is invariably foreign to the title of the appropriation measure. For instance, in the last annual sundry civil appropriation law there was an item amending the war housing law of May 16, 1918. This item is not to be found indexed anywhere except in the Compendium, and there it can be found under the subject of "Public Buildings." This is just one case in several hundred that might be cited.

The numerical status of bills, as listed in the Compendium, is new to Congress, but it has been found satisfactory and convenient when one is looking for the status of a bill by number and does not know the title.

Another commendable feature of the weekly and monthly is the chronology of happenings in Congress, to be found under the heading of "Congressional happenings at a glance." A great many times a Member is required to look up a measure of which he has received only a vague description, but being given the date of the passage or report of the measure, with no other important clue by which he can conduct his search, he can take the Compendium and refer to the transactions of the date in question and find just the information he is seeking.

The Weekly Compendium was originally meant to show only what Congress was doing from one week to another. Between the time of the issuance of the Monthly Compendium, the Weekly Compendium was intended to supply information as to what changes were taking place, as a sort of supplement to the monthly. But it was decided to continue each item of legislation in the list from week to week and make the weekly compilation accumulative, so that when the session was over the last issue could carry every bill acted on during the session, with the information as to the status of bills on the date of publication. So it was intended from week to week during the session. The last issue would be complete for the session up to that time, and the next issue would carry the same information, plus the changes during the succeeding week.

The bills are listed by numbers in rotation. An asterisk (*) at left of number indicates that action was taken since last publication the week before, so that each week it could be ascertained what has been done by Congress during the preceding week. In some respects the weekly is more handy for reference purposes than the monthly, but it should be borne in mind that it contains information as to the current session, while the monthly represents action taken during all the sessions of the Congress.

The weekly also gives tabulated history of omnibus pension bills, both Senate and House, as well as tabulated history of all appropriation bills introduced during the different sessions. A special feature of these tables is that the various report numbers are given, which is information commonly sought after and obtained through no other means in tabulated form except in the Compendium.

Another feature is the list of laws approved by the President since the date of the last issue of the Monthly Compendium, which latter publication contains the list of all laws of the current Congress.

Both the weekly and monthly publications are sent regularly through the House post office to each Member the same date the issue comes off the press.

It seems to me it would be very unwise if we should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan to eliminate the appropriation for the splendid work performed by Mr. Loomis in preparing this valuable Compendium, in addition to the very important duties imposed upon him as assistant in the House document room, and I therefore hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Successors to any of the employees provided for in the six preceding paragraphs may be named by the House of Representatitves at any time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 15, by striking out the word "six" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 15, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, while I do not think it is essential, I think it is desirable for the House to retain the right, if it wishes to do so, to name a successor to Mr. Loomis. This would simply give that authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Official reporters: Six official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House, at $6,000 each; assistant, $3,000; six expert transcribers, at $1,200 each; janitor, $980; in all, $47,180.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph pertains to the Official Reporters of this House. It is impossible to let this occasion pass without a word of appreciation for this group of trained and able men, who act as mediums between us and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Day after day, week after week, month after month, they toil with patience, transferring into everlasting black and white our thoughts, our motives, our emotions, and our mistakes. With unfailing accuracy they note the daily triumphs, failures, and calamities of "the pit." The recording angel himself is not more faithful. Their pens trace our frailities in life and our virtues in death. They do not worship at the shrine of that tantalizing goddess inefficiency.

Presiding officers may lose themselves in their abstractions and others become engulfed in multitudinous duties, but the Official Reporter, constantly alert, in calm or in confusion, stands on guard like the Roman centurion of old. They are not mere machines, but men—men of convictions, men of ability, men of brains, steeped in the rarest of political, historical, and legislative lore. An exchange of positions with them which would place us at their desks and put them in our seats, while ruinous to the RECORD might be of great value to the country. They are, withal, wise judges of human nature. It matters not who passes a favorable judgment upon your ability if you fail to win the sanction of the Official Reporter. He may remain silent, but he sees all, he knows all, and his friendly glance of approbation means you have succeeded. Try it on others, but do not try to cajole or mislead him. It can not be done. It may be true that you can fool a part of the people a part of the time, but it is equally true that you can not fool the Official Reporter any of the time.

There are no other men on earth in any court or legislature who are rendering more effective service than these men. They are doing that thing which if the whole country did would end our "sea of troubles"—work. They are in the prime of life, but here and there a touch of gray would indicate a point had been reached in the universal journey near the brow of the hill which is not reached by mortals until they have passed through scenes of sorrow and adversity scattered more or less with flowers of love. The House is indeed fortunate that it possesses these men. May they live forever, but if in the natural fix of things one individual pass on he may know that he has contributed an installment of immortality to the Official Reporter who never dies, but lives, we hope, the amanuensis of all time. [Applause.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. I asked the gentleman to yield merely to compliment him on having written his remarks, so as to relieve the Official Reporter of the embarrassment of having to report them. I agree thoroughly with everything the gentleman from Illinois has said.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to have the fact noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I carefully wrote out my remarks, instead of speaking them offhand from the floor, for I do not desire to mislead anyone.

The Clerk read as follows:

Stenographers to committees: Four stenographers to committees, at $6,000 each; janitor, $720; in all, $24,720.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is this the same salary that has been carried in previous bills—$6,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not the sum carried in the former legislative bill, but it is the sum as agreed to in the House resolution providing for an increase.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The salaries of the committee reporters were raised to $6,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; in the deficiency bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was not aware of that. If that is the case, there is probably no use of attempting to change the item. I fully agree that as to the Official Reporters of debates the salary of $6,000 is not more than it ought to be, and possibly not so much, because it requires the highest skill to report the debates which occur on the floor of the House when frequently three or four Members are talking at the same time.

But so far as the committee reporters are concerned, I think the salary is a great deal larger than it ought to be. I think a competent reporter can be obtained for a great deal less.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Has not the gentleman from Iowa seen these committee reporters take much longer turns than the Official Reporters of the House are compelled to take? These committee stenographers take some very difficult hearings, and I know I have seen them sit there taking very long turns, as much as an hour or more at a time, and it is pretty difficult work, whereas in the House it would be impossible for the Official Reporters to take turns as long as an hour on account of the greater difficulty of the work. The work of verbatim reporting is always difficult enough, and it is especially so when it has to be taken for a long time, as it is in committee hearings. It is my observation that it is pretty hard work for the committee stenographers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why, I have seen court reporters work all day and even into the night and receive less than half the salary provided by this paragraph, under circumstances that required a great deal higher degree of skill than the committee reporters. I think the provision carried here is altogether too high; but if it is already established by a House resolution, I suppose there is no use now of trying to change it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: For clerk hire necessarily employed by each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $3,200 per annum, in monthly installments, $1,408,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the joint resolution approved July 11, 1919, shall apply to this appropriation in the same manner as it applied to the appropriation for clerk hire for Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. IRELAND, Mr. CALDWELL, and Mr. BLACK rose.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IRELAND: Pages 17 and 18, line 23, page 17, strike out all of lines 23 and 24 on page 17 and lines 1 and 2 on page 18.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, this, I believe, will have the effect of making the arrangement for clerk hire revert to its former plan and would make the allowance herein provided for payable direct to the Member rather than to the clerk or clerks that he might have designated, but it would have this feature, that it would save about $200,000 by the abolition of the bonus now paid. That is the sole object in offering the amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute by Mr. CALDWELL: Line 23, page 17, strike out all after the word "Provided," to and including line 2, page 18, and insert "That the appropriation for clerk hire for Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners may be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to two persons to be designated by each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, the names of such persons to be placed upon the roll of employees of the House of Representatives together with the amount to be paid each, and Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners elect to Congress shall likewise be entitled to make such designations: Provided, That such persons shall be subject to removal at any time by such Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner with or without cause."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk failed to read the word "hereafter."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "hereafter" will be inserted in the proper place.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is permanent legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question first?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman in his amendment provides for no appropriation at all.

Mr. CALDWELL. The amendment has a proviso making it permanent law——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know; but the way the amendment is reported it strikes out the appropriation.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; the appropriation is prior to the proviso.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I understand the gentleman is adopting the language of the original bill, except he is inserting the word "hereafter."

Mr. CALDWELL. Exactly. It strikes out two or three words, so as to make it read intelligently. I will come to that if the point of order is overruled and explain it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CALDWELL. On the question of the point of order or——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I will state to the gentleman and the Chair that this whole item is subject to a point of order, and the point of order not having been reserved, any amendment may be offered.

Mr. CALDWELL. The point of order is made here that this proposed substitute is new legislation upon an appropriation measure. If the Chairman will look at the bill as it was reported by the committee he will see that the proviso is clearly new legislation upon an appropriation measure. The proviso was read in connection with the section and the gentleman from Illinois rose and offered an amendment, not making a point of order against the proviso but offering an amendment to strike out the proviso. The time for making the point of order had expired, and after his amendment was offered I then offered an amendment by way of substitute, and the point of order made to my motion is out of order. While the point of order might have been made to the proviso as it was written in the bill, the gentleman has waited too long, for under the rules of the House the proviso being subject to a point of order and no point of order being made to it, the field of legislation is open to any substitute or amendment that is germane to the measure. And upon the question of whether or not this is germane to the proviso that is sought to be amended, I direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the proviso in certain words undertakes to make a payment by reason of a certain resolution passed by this House. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois sought to strike the proviso from the bill, and the substitute offered by myself was a reenactment of the resolution mentioned in that proviso word for word with the additional word "hereafter," making it permanent law. It is clearly germane, and the failure to raise the point of order against the provision that was subject to the point of order precludes anyone from making a point of order at this time.

Therefore I respectfully submit that the substitute is now in order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I understand, the only difference in your amendment to the provision in the bill is this, that you set out a resolution in haec verba, and the provision in the bill simply seeks to reenact it by referring to it?

Mr. CALDWELL. That is exactly it. It adds the word "hereafter" and puts in the law exactly what the bill referred to has, word for word, except as I have stated.

Mr. BLACK. Here is the situation that we have before us: The provision in the bill provides an appropriation for $1,408,000 to be expended for clerk hire to Members and Delegates during the fiscal year 1921. Now, to that appropriation is appended a provision which provides that the money shall be expended in the same manner as was provided in the joint resolution approved July 11, 1919. Now, to that no point of order was made, because the life of that provision, the effect of it, was only to apply to the appropriation for the fiscal year 1921. It had no effect or no relation to any future appropriations made for other fiscal years.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] proposes an amendment which sets out in its entirety the language of the resolution of July, 1919, and he adds to that the word "hereafter," which would not only control the expenditure under this appropriation but would control all future appropriations of the same nature unless otherwise specified by law. Now, I make the point of order that such language would be new legislation upon an appropriation bill; and, in addition to that, I make the point of order that it would not be a germane amendment to the provision in the bill, in that the provision of the bill only seeks to apply to the appropriation for the fiscal year 1921, whereas the effect of this amendment would be to control appropriation bills in the future until Congress should otherwise provide by law. Therefore I base the point of order on the two propositions, namely, that this is new legislation upon an appropriation bill, and the other is that it is not germane to the provision now in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, one principle was overlooked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL]. Of course, it is perfectly competent, when legislation is found in an appropriation bill to which no point of order has been directed, to perfect that legislation by a germane amendment. But it is not competent to add by the amendment new illegality to the bill.

Take the present situation. The legislative provision in the bill is merely for the life of the bill. It would be perfectly competent, so far as that provision is concerned, to perfect it by amendments not enlarging its scope so as to give it a longer life, but making changes within the time limits prescribed by its terms; but the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] proposes to afford an enlargement of illegality by undertaking to make permanent law of this provision relating to Members' clerks.

A decision was made a day or two ago by Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, not announcing a new principle, but reaffirming and restating an old decision—to the precise effect that it is not permitted to add new illegalities to a bill by reason of the fact that an item in the bill not objected to may be perfected by a germane amendment. That is the present situation precisely. The item in the bill is legislation, but it has not been objected to. Hence it may be perfected by a germane amendment, but fresh illegalities in the form of amendments are not in order. The gentleman from New York does not seek to confine his amendment within the limits of the paragraph in the bill, but to extend those limits; in other words, to add a new illegality.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the gentleman if the language that "the joint resolution approved July 11, 1919, shall apply to this appropriation" is not the identical language that the gentleman from New York seeks to fix here directly?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. He undertakes to make a permanent law to control the situation relating to our clerks.

Mr. JUUL. For the rest of the language, is not that identical with the resolution that he proposes here?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What of it? His amendment as a whole adds a new illegality. He is not seeking to perfect the paragraph within its limits of application. The language that the gentleman cites applies merely for the life of the appropriation bill. The gentleman from New York desires to go beyond that life, to insert in this bill at this point a provision of permanent law. Hence his amendment is an enlargement of illegality on an appropriation bill and is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] makes the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], which, by the use of the word "hereafter," makes permanent law of this appropriation. The Chair is a little bit perplexed as to this question, and thinks it is a pretty close point. Of course, if the point of order had been raised to the proviso as in the bill the Chair would have been compelled to rule it out and to have sustained the point of order, as it is legislation on an appropriation bill. It is, however, in order under the rules to offer to a provision subject to a point of order, but upon which no point is made, another provision, which is also subject to a point of order, provided it is germane to the provision to which it is offered. The Chair thinks that inasmuch as the item carried in the bill relates only to the expenditure of this money for the fiscal year 1921, an amendment which extends it to the years 1922, 1923, and so forth, ad infinitum, goes beyond the purview of the item as originally carried in the bill, and feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. BLACK. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment by way of substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. IRELAND: Page 17, line 23, after the word "Provided," strike out the balance of line 23 and all of line 24, and then, on page 18, strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following language:

"That hereafter each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner of the House of Representatives shall have for clerical assistance necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties one secretary at $2,000 per annum, whose name shall be placed on the rolls, and who shall be paid in monthly installments by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Such secretary shall be appointed by the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, and certified to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and shall be subject to removal at any time by such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner with or without cause: Provided, That in addition to such secretary there may be paid to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner not to exceed $1,200 per annum for such other clerical assistance necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, the same to be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives from time to time upon the certificate of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner that he has actually paid or agreed to pay such sum certified for such purpose: Provided further, That Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress, whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to the benefit of this provision."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the provision on the ground that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill and that it is not germane to the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order on the amendment. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] desire to be heard on it?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it is not sought to make this provision permanent law. The provision of the bill as now carried seeks to control the expenditure of $1,480,000 in the same manner as the joint resolution of July 19, 1919, controlled it. Now, all I want to do by my amendment is to direct a different method of expenditure of the money for the same end, to wit, by permitting each Member to put on the roll one secretary at $2,000 and allowing $1,200 additional for clerk hire, if it may be necessary, to be paid upon the Member's certificate.

I contend that such would be a legitimate amendment to the provision in the bill. If it had the same fault as the amendment offered a while ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], to wit, if it undertook to make this permanent law, it would be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the understanding of the Chair, the language of the amendment does not confine it to this year. While the word "hereafter" is not used, it is intended to make it permanent law.

Mr. BLACK. Well, I will say to the Chair that such was not the intention of the amendment. It might be that if I had made it a little more clear to the effect that the provision was only to control the appropriation for the fiscal year 1921, it would have been in better form, because it was not intended to make the provision permanent law, and for that reason the word "hereafter" was stricken out of the amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair has not already made up his mind, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that it creates a new office, a secretary, and I call the attention of the Chair to the decision made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] on a former occasion, when he was in the chair, as to whether or not we had the right to incorporate a provision creating the position of stenographer. There the gentleman from Virginia held that it was not germane, and was not within the rule, and he ruled it out of order.

Now, I call the Chair's attention also to the fact that this proposed substitute goes far afield, and continues legislation not only for this year but for all time to come, as the Chair has already pointed out.

Mr. BLACK. If the Chair will bear with me, as to whether the amendment shall apply only to the fiscal year 1921, in order to save time I will ask unanimous consent to modify it in that respect by providing that "in the expenditure of the sums herein provided each Member shall be allowed," and so on, so that if the Chair wants to rule as to whether or not it is new legislation he may be rid of the proposition as to whether it has any further application than to this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

Mr. BLACK. I can offer it again.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Chair then must rule on the proposition as submitted. The Chair is inclined to think that under the phraseology of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], while germane to the paragraph, in form it is permanent law, and under the decision just rendered the Chair would feel constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment has not been prepared and reported yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, this will not prejudice the right of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly not. While they are preparing it I want to occupy a moment.

I think I should have voted for the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], and if it had gotten before the House I think I should have voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], although they are somewhat dissimilar.

It is unseemly for 435 Members of Congress every year to have a prolonged discussion and dissension about the employment of their clerks. I want to see something enacted which is permanent law. I do not care so much what it is; I can conform my habits and usages either to the payment of the Member direct or to the payment of one clerk or two clerks or three clerks, whatever it is, or to the payment of $1,200, as now provided by law, or to the payment of $3,200 a year, as provided by the current appropriation act.

I think we ought to have sense and ability enough to put something in permanent law as to the amount, and how it is to be paid, and not have a wrangle and a quarrel every year which discredits every Member of this House. [Applause.] This wrangle about how much clerk hire we shall have, how it shall be paid, the insinuation that Members take the clerk hire and put it in their pockets, hurts individually not only every Member of Congress but hurts the dignity of the Nation. We ought to determine, as permanent law or as law which can be changed hereafter, the amount that is to be paid and how it is to be paid. I do not care whether it would be the amendment of the gentleman from New York, to pay two clerks $3,200 a year, or the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, to pay one clerk $2,000 and then $1,200 to the Member. I think we ought to know and say and let it be the law hereafter.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is a good parliamentarian and understands just exactly how a permanent law can be brought about. It is for some committee of the House—probably the Committee on Appropriations—to frame a provision that ought to become permanent law and bring it in and let the Committee on Rules bring in a rule and let the House vote on it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, there may be many ways of doing things. I make the remarks I do in the hope that gentlemen who reserve points of order will make the points of order now and give the House a chance to vote on the subject now and dispose of it. I would have preferred if the gentleman from Texas would withdraw his point of order as against the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I hope that the gentleman from New York will withdraw the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which is ruled out of order, and then, if he wants to, he can offer his. I might say to my friend from New York that if the amendment had not been ruled out of order, and if it had been before the House, then the gentleman's amendment would have been in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will be perfectly frank to say that if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will withdraw his point of order against the proposition I made, I will make no point of order against any proposition he may make to take its place.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas had got by the point of order, then the amendment which the gentleman from New York offered could have been offered as an amendment to it.

Mr. GARNER. Under the rule?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the rule.

Mr. CALDWELL. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not referring to this amendment. This is a temporary provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK as a substitute for the Ireland amendment: Page 17, line 23, after the word "Provided," strike out the balance of line 23 and all of line 24, and then, on page 18, strike out lines 1 and 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following language:

"That in the expenditure of the appropriation herein provided, each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner of the House of Representatives shall have for clerical assistance necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties one secretary at $2,000 per annum, whose name shall be placed on the rolls, and who shall be paid in monthly installments by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Such secretary shall be appointed by the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner and certified to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and shall be subject to removal at any time by such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, with or without cause: Provided, That, in addition to such secretary, there may be paid to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner not to exceed $1,200 per annum for such other clerical assistance necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, the same to be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives from time to time upon the certificate of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner that he has actually paid or agreed to pay such sum certified for such purpose: Provided further, That Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be entitled to the benefit of this provision."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. CALDWELL. The point of order is that it is new legislation upon an appropriation bill, that it is not germane to the section involved, and that it clearly carries matter that is not germane; and if any portion of it is subject to the point of order, all of it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair thinks the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], inasmuch as it applies only to the appropriation carried in this bill, is germane and does not add to the illegality, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, this is the same amendment that I offered when the proposition was before the House in July, 1919.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is it not a fact that the result of the amendment proposed by the gentleman would be that one clerk at $2,000 per year would receive the bonus and that the other clerk at $1,200 a year would not get the bonus?

Mr. BLACK. That is just what I was going to state to the House. My amendment, if adopted, would effect a saving of $105,400, assuming that each Member now has two clerks on the roll of the House.

Under the joint resolution of July, 1919, a Member is permitted to have two clerks upon the roll, and he can have only two; the amount of salary to be paid to each is not fixed, and, as a matter of fact, an examination of the rolls will show that these clerks are on the roll at varied amounts. Now, I think that good practice and good procedure would be that each and every Member have one secretary at $2,000 per annum, and that that secretary should be upon the roll, and that then the Member should be allowed not to exceed $1,200 in addition to the pay of his regular secretary for such clerical assistance as he may need. If he does not need the extra clerk hire, then the money could be saved to the Government. If he does need it, the provision would be there for him to receive it, upon a proper certificate of its expenditure.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. IGOE. Does the gentleman think it would be fair to the Members of the House and to their clerks in the middle of a Congress, when they have made arrangements which were intended to cover the period of two years? Here we are in the middle of a Congress, and to require Members to change an arrangement would in many cases mean the breaking of an agreement with the man that the Member brought here to do the work, which would be hardly fair. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. I do not think it would be unfair. We have had no permanent law on the subject. We have no appropriation that extends any further than the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1920, and I do not think there is any element of unfairness in it from any standpoint.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not like to intrude my personal affairs, but I have a secretary whom I have always paid $2,400 a year, even when I got only $1,500. Now, under this amendment I could put him on at only $2,000 a year. Does the gentleman think it is proper and fair to interfere with a matter of private contract as between a Member and his secretary?

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman looks upon the secretaries as private employees, I think there might be something in his contention. But I do not regard a secretary as a private employee, because he is on the rolls and pay of the Government and is paid the $240 bonus which is provided for all Government employees. He is only a private employee in the sense that you have the right to discharge him at will.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. BEE. Does not the gentleman think that while the secretary is not a private employee, the leeway to make the contract was given under a previous act of Congress, and we stood ready to make an agreement with him, and that that agreement ought to be carried out and not broken at the middle of a session?

Mr. BLACK. I will answer that by saying that this does not interfere with any lawful agreement, because no Member of Congress has a right to make any agreement that would bind the Federal Government for any longer than the current appropriation. I am sure my colleague will agree to that proposition.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the operation of the law as it is now. While I know there have been many different ideas of what should be, I think under existing circumstances and the arrangements made with reference to our clerks, the best possible thing is to leave it as it is. [Applause.] The Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that this may be paid all to one clerk or it may be paid to two clerks; there must not be more than two clerks. We have adapted ourselves to the new plan, and I believe the best possible way is to leave it as it is. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas by way of a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now arises on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KINCHELOE. May we have the amendment again reported?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask that in reporting the amendment the Clerk report the language proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 23, strike out all of lines 23, 24, on page 17, and 1 and 2 on page 18, as follows:

"Provided, That the joint resolution approved July 11, 1919, shall apply to this appropriation in the same manner as it applied to the appropriation for clerk hire for Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners for the fiscal year 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 22, after the word "installments," insert "which shall be the amount hereafter authorized for clerk hire for each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman reserve it for a minute or two?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The amendment is subject to a point of order I think, Mr. Chairman. The present law provides that appropriations shall be made for clerk hire to the amount of $1,200 for each Member. The amendment I have offered would authorize an appropriation to the amount of $3,200 for clerk hire for each Member, without in any way changing the law there may be in the payment of that amount.

As the law now stands any item in an appropriation bill carrying more than $1,200 for a clerk to each Member is subject to a point of order. I do not think myself that we should leave the law in that position. I do not think any Member ought to object to the House having an opportunity to vote on the question.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. We had an opportunity in July, 1919, when the resolution was brought up——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was not here at that time.

Mr. BLACK. I am sorry for that, but we had our opportunity and of course we can have it again. I have made the point of order in good faith.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not doubt the gentleman's good faith.

Mr. BLACK. Having reserved it, I intend to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, and materials for repairs of the same, $20,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 11, after the word "same" insert "including not to exceed $12,000 for labor and machinery for the furniture repair shop," and in line 12 strike out the figures "$20,000" and insert "$30,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For packing boxes, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.
